JOHNSON CARREST SERVICE AND ARREST AND A

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 18, 1912.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D. The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. WILLIAM YANCEY, ADMINISTRATOR, V. UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 264).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact and conclusion of law filed by the court in the cause of William Yancey, administrator de bonis non of the estate of George W. Yancey, deceased, v. The United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

so forth, be not discontinued by the Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. What is it doing in the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is addressed to the Vice President as President of the Senate, and the Vice President therefore lays it before the Senate. It is practically a petition.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will make the appropriate motion when the document is before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The document is before the Senate, and the Chair was short to refer it to the Committee and the Chair was short to refer it to the Committee and the Chair was short to refer it to the Committee and the Chair was short to refer it to the Committee and the Chair was short to refer it to the Committee and the Chair was short to refer it to the Committee and the Chair was short to refer it to the Committee and the Chair was short to refer it to the Committee and the Chair was short to refer it to the Committee and the Chair was short to refer the Committee and the Chair was short to refer the Committee and the Chair was short to refer the Committee and the Chair was short to refer the Committee and the Chair was short to refer the Committee and the Chair was short to refer the Committee and the Chair was short to refer the Committee and the Chair was short to refer the Committee and the Chair was short to refer the Committee and the Chair was short to refer the Committee and the Chair was short to refer the Chair w

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the document be not received. No document should be received by the United States Senate that comes from that source in the light of recent developments.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. One moment, until the Chair states the motion. It is that the document be not received. The Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like the Secretary to read the statement he was about to read when interrupted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary concluded the reading. He will read it again, if there is no objection.

The Secretary. A communication from Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, transmitting a copy of resolutions adopted by that body petitioning that the "hand-roller" process in the manufacture of currency, and so "hand-roller" process in the manufacture of currency, and so forth, be not discontinued by the Government.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator allow me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEYBURN. It depends on the purpose. I do not want the Senator to make a motion in my time that will shut off what I desire to say at this time.

Mr. PENROSE. I have no desire to shut off the Senator. If he will permit me simply to announce my intention, I desire to move to refer the communication to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, Mr. President—
Mr. PENROSE. I will ask the Senate to vote on that motion when the Senator is through.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will be through in a moment.

No communication should be received by the Congress of the United States from Samuel Gompers because of the facts disclosed in the McNamara trial and subsequent thereto. He is not qualified to address a communication to Congress or to the Government, and he should not be permitted to until he qualifies himself. I make that statement as a text for the of anything that pertains to this class of requests. I make that statement as a text for the consideration

Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will be through in a minute. I only desire that my sentiments, whatever they are worth, shall be that the attitude of the made plain and be a part of the record this morning. Now I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania, who desires to make a motion in reference to this matter.

Mr. PENROSE. I simply desire to say in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Idaho that in my service in the Senate I have yet to find the line of demarcation on the qualification that entitles a person to communicate to a Senator or the Senate. We get communications from everybody of all classes and distinctions and under all circumstances. I therefore make my motion to refer the communication to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. LODGE. The motion to refer is debatable?
The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to refer is debatable, but there is a question whether the motion to refer is in order until the motion which has been made that the Senate shall refuse to receive the document is disposed of. The Ckair thinks that that should be first disposed of. If the Senate chooses not to receive the document, of course it can not be referred anywhere.

Mr. LODGE. That is very true, and on that I wish to say a

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. I shall take but a moment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I simply ask what this is. Has it been laid before the Senate? I have just come into the Chamber.

Mr. LODGE. It has been laid before the Senate. I understand from what the Chair says that it is a communication in the nature of a petition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a letter which, in the opinion of the Chair, should be recognized as a petition.

Mr. LODGE. I think it has been settled that all petitions and protests are to be received. Some 80 years ago that question of petitions occupied the attention of the House of Representatives for some time, and I think it was then settled, and I believe rightly settled once for all, that a petition respectful in character was to be received; that it was the right of every American citizen, no matter what it was thought of the citizen individually, if he presented a respectful petition or protest to have it received.

I sincerely hope that the Senate will not refuse to receive petition if it is couched in proper language.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that right of petition is confined to the citizens of the United States. I would like to see or have some evidence that the petitioner in this case is a citizen of the United States. Until that question is decided he is not at liberty to petition the Congress of the United

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that this is a petition from the American Federation of Labor. I should like to be advised if I am correct in that view. The VICE PRESIDENT.

It is a letter addressed to the Vice President as President of the Senate, signed by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. CULBERSON. Does it not purport really to communicate to the Senate resolutions adopted by the American Federation of Labor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, a word more. Can any Senator vouch for the citizenship of Samuel Gompers? I have developed this question this morning for consideration just so far as I desire at this time, and I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho withdraws his motion, and the communication and accompanying resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I had risen before the Chair's ruling that the petition should be referred; the Chair had failed to glance this way and hence did not see me. I wanted to say a word.

I do not know what the purpose is of any Senator in rising in his seat and inquiring whether a petitioner is a citizen of the United States, demanding proof or voucher, and then suddenly withdrawing his opposition. If Samuel Gompers is not a citizen of the United States and is known to the Senator not a citizen of the United States and is known to the Senator not to be a citizen of the United States, if that is regarded as a material matter, then it seems to me, if the Senator has that knowledge and it is regarded by him as material, he ought to advise the Senate and not withdraw his opposition. If he has no such knowledge, if the question was asked merely to create a doubt or cause a suspicion as to that of which he had neither knowledge nor information, then is occurs to me that the attitude of the Senator reflects a strange sort of side that the attitude of the Senator reflects a strange sort of side

Mr. President, I do not take the position that this letter should be received upon the narrow ground suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts. I do not mean to characterize the attitude of the Senator from Massachusetts as narrow; I intend, rather, to refer to it as the assertion of a technical legal right. I believe there is no—

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I put the right of petition upon the broadest constitutional ground. It is an inalienable right, in my judgment.

Mr. REED. I perhaps misunderstood the Senator. I think that is the ground

Mr. LODGE. The Senator certainly misunderstood me if he supposed that I put it on any narrow ground. I put it on the broad ground of a general constitutional right of a citizen of the United States to petition.

Mr. REED. Where I sat I could not clearly hear the Senator from Massachusetts. But as he has just expressed his views and as he doubtless did in the first instance-he takes the broad position which I would expect the Senator from Massachusetts to take.

I join, then, with the Senator from Massachusetts. I gladly meet him upon the broad constitutional ground. I say here and now there is no citizen of the Republic so humble or obscure that he is not entitled to have his petition presented to this body. The right of petition and the right of remonstrance was settled when the British flag was lowered at Yorktown. There is no public body in this land so great that it ought not to receive and give consideration to the petition of any man, how-ever humble he may be. The greater the body the less injury will occur to its dignity if the petitioner should happen to be a man either obscure or resting under a cloud.

But I go further than that, sir. I recognize, as every other man recognizes, the full sweep and scope and potency of the facts that were developed in the McNamara case; but I say that any man who will bring a wholesale charge against the American Federation of Labor, who will cast an aspersion upon the members of that body as such, and indiscriminately reflect upon them because one or two of the men belonging to it have committed crime, is assuming a very grave responsibility indeed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. Certainly. Mr. HEYBURN. Do I understand the Senator to suggest that by any word or suggestion I have referred to the labor organization? If he does, he is mistaken. I know a great many men who are members of that organization who are entitled to the highest respect and the greatest confidence of the people, collectively or singly. I referred only to the one man-Samuel Gompers

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator shall not escape by that route.

Mr. HEYBURN. Shall not escape from what, Mr. Presi-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. From the legitimate conclusion to be deduced from the Senator's attitude in this matter.

Mr. HEYBURN. What is that conclusion?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the conclusion that I draw is that the Senator rose in his seat to protest against the receipt of a document signed officially by the official head of the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. HEYBURN. I confined my criticism to the man who signed it, and not to the organization for which he spoke.

Mr. REED. But, Mr. President, how shall we separate that question ?

Mr. HEYBURN. I can separate them.

Mr. REED. The document comes here signed by Samuel Gompers as the president of the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. Just wait until I finish my sentence and then I will yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to answer that question.
Mr. REED. The document is not signed by Samuel Gompers as an individual; it is signed by Samuel Gompers as the president of the American Federation of Labor; and it is signed in a manner which, if it were attached to a contract, would bind the American Federation of Labor and not the individual,

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, I should like to ask the Senator if he would sit here and passively receive a communication from the McNamara brothers signing themselves, one of them as one officer of the labor union, and another as another officer? Would he do it?

Mr. REED. Why, Mr. President, I unhesitatingly answer

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I have no further argument with any Senator who can take that position.

Mr. REED. I would receive a petition from the McNamara brothers, from the Senator from Idaho, or from the best or the meanest of God Almighty's creatures. the meanest of God Almighty's creatures. I would give it fair and just consideration, and in its consideration, if possible, would disabuse my mind from any prejudice which might attach by reason of the past misdeeds of the man who forwarded the petition.

But, Mr. President, I rose to say one word more. Samuel Gompers stands as the official head of a great body of men who are scattered over the United States of America. 'The members of the American Federation of Labor, with their allied societies and organizations, embrace every trade and practically every vocation of life. They are found in every community, in every hamlet, in every village. We count them by hundred of thousands and by millions in the United States

If they are bad men, if they are wicked men, if they are so low and so vile that the touch of their petition would be pollution to this august body, then may God save the Republic of the United States! They have not seen fit to displace Samuel Gompers, and I say now that, man for man and individual for individual, the members of the labor organizations in this country who are affiliated under the name of the American Federation of Labor will average and weigh morally and mentally with the citizens generally of the United States, and some of them will look as well in the balances of justice and right as some Members of this body, sir.

What is there against Samuel Gompers that we have the right to draw aside the skirts of our righteousness and say, "Touch me not lest virtue shall depart from me"? This man has not been indicted for either high crimes or misdemeanors. Federal grand juries have been at work in almost every State of the Union; secret service men have been hunting and searching for evidence of guilt against every man connected with the dynamite outrages. Back of the efforts of the officers and the inquiries of Federal grand juries has been a sentiment of approval by all the people of the United States. That sentiment has had its strongest adherents in the ranks of organized labor. The demand that crime shall be punished has been universal. Along with other organizations and men the labor organizations and the laboring men of this country stand as much a unit against crime and are as free from crime as any other body of citizens in the land.

After all the investigation referred to no charge has been brought against Mr. Gompers by any tribunal authorized to bring forward an indictment. The great body of laboring men throughout the United States have not withdrawn their support from Samuel Gompers; they have not turned aside from him. That fact ought to create some presumption that he is still worthy to write a letter to the Senate, nay, even to the Senator from Idaho.

Sir, the statement that Samuel Gompers, occupying his present honorable position, neither indicted by a grand jury nor charged with crime by any responsible authority, still retaining the confidence of millions of American citizens, is yet so unworthy that he should be denied the poor right of petition, should not and shall not go unchallenged. I trust such a declaration will not again be heard in this Chamber.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the matter mentioned in the petition has been considered by the Committee on Printing in effect. It was presented to them by various members of organized labor, and the Committee on Printing has reported a bill. That bill is now in the Senate. I can see nothing to be gained by referring this petition to the Committee on Printing unless it be printed in the RECORD. I therefore move that the petition be printed in the RECORD, in order that every Senator may have the information as to what it contains.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. FLETCHER. I make the motion.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida moves that the petition be printed in the RECORD.
Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion,

Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR, Washington, D. C., January 17, 1912.

Hon. James S. Sherman,
President of the United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Hon. James S. Sherman,

President of the United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Sir. At the last annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, held at Atlanta, Ga., November 13-25, 1511, there was under consideration the following preambles and resolutions:

"Whereas there is now pending in the Senate of the United States a bill (S. 2564) known as the Smoot printing bill, the main purpose of which is to codify, amend, and enact printing laws, but which contains at the end of its 110 pages an eight-line section which indirectly repeals a law of Congress enacted for the purpose of safeguarding the people's currency against the dangers of counterfeiting; and

"Whereas the maximum of safety against the evils of the counterfeiters' art is guaranteed by what is known as the hand-roller process of manufacturing paper securities; and

"Whereas a cheaply manufactured paper money, in the making of which are to be discarded, for the sake of a false economy, the high art features of the engravers' and printers' crafts, which alone render impossible reckless and widespread counterfeiting such as prevailed in the days of the 'wild-cat' currency of the long ago, would entail incalculable losses upon the common people; and as proof, experience teaches that counterfeiters apply their skill principally to producing and putting in circulation the small notes which pass current among farmers and the working classes in the cities and towns on the assumption, which is well grounc'ed, that those classes will be the least suspicious and the more easily deceived with well-executed counterfeits; and

"Whereas it is the highest duty of the Government to throw every and

"Whereas it is the highest duty of the Government to throw every possible safeguard about the paper money which it manufactures and puts in circulation among the people to the end that their present implicit confidence in this function of government may not be misplaced or destroyed: Therefore be it
"Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, protests against the repeal of the law of Congress of 1898 which provides that the paper money, bonds, and checks of the United States shall be manufactured in the highest style of the art by what is known as the hand-roller process. We do not believe in a cheap country, cheap men, cheap wages, or a currency cheapened to the danger point of encouraging counterfeiting. In this respect the people have implicit confidence in their Government, and our pride and interest alike demand that this confidence shall not be destroyed. The people in the last analysis are the Government, and their voice, and not that of the selfish and scheming interests, should prevail in this matter of so vast, far-reaching, and vital concern; and be it further "Resolved, That copies hereof be transmitted to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives with a request that the same be printed in the Congressional Record."

The convention approved the above, and in conformity with the concluding paragraph thereof I have the honor to transmit the matter to you, which I trust may receive your favorable consideration.

Very respectfully, yours,

SAML. GOMPERS,

President American Federation of Labor.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, just a word. It seems to me that we have possibly discovered a solution to an embarrassing situation which exists in both political parties. Mr. Gompers has been vindicated so thoroughly and indorsed so highly by both sides that it might be that if it is found that he is or will become a citizen of the United States and declare to which party he belongs he may solve the solution of the conventions.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho if he does not recognize that any man, whether he be a citizen or not, who is in this country and subject to its laws and within its jurisdiction, has the right of petition?

Mr. HEYBURN. Oh, no; there is no such law. It is a citizen of the United States who may petition.

Mr. BACON. That is not the law.
Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; Mr. President—
Mr. BACON. I will read the law.
Mr. LODGE. The Constitution is perfectly plain. It is the people of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. The Constitution was made before the Government.

Mr. BACON. The first amendment to the Constitution of the United States is in this language:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, is there any question—
Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me for just a moment; of course this is not the occasion to go into an extended debate upon that question, but it has been very thoroughly debated, and the principle very generally established and acquiesced in, I think, that that language creates an inalienable right to petition regardless of the person. And I make the further proposition, which I think is undoubtedly the correct one, that anybody within the jurisdiction of the United States and subject to its laws, who has a grievance, if it is one within the Federal jurisdiction, has—without now considering the manner of presentation—the right of petition; and I care not whether that person be the highest in the Government or whether he be a felon in a cell.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, if the Senator submits that proposi-

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—— Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from Massachusetts will pardon me for a moment. I am not in doubt in my mind as to the status of the right of petition. No court and no tribunal has held that a foreigner being within the United States is included within the language of the first amendment to the Constitution.

If the Senator will refer back to the debates that were had upon this question at the time referred to by one of the Senators this morning, he will find that no one contended that a foreigner had that right. He must approach this Government-and we are the active element of the Governmentthrough the representative of the country to which he belongs. The word "people" refers unquestionably to the people of the United States who are citizens or within the status of citizenship.

Mr. BACON. The Senator says "unquestionably." That, of course, settles it, because if it is unquestionable, there is no room for difference. But I do question it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I hope the Senator will not pass by—

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I want to finish, but-

Mr. HEYBURN. I hope the Senator will not attempt to dispose of it because I used the word "unquestionably." It expresses merely the unquestioned judgment of the person who speaks.

Mr. BACON. I will accept it in that sense.

Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate with this debate, but I will simply call attention to one thing. Every foreigner, every person within the jurisdiction of this country and subject to its laws, is permitted to go into our courts to establish his rights, and that is a principle which would undoubtedly apply to the question whether or not such a person, who sought to have his redress not in the courts but at the hands of Congress, would also have the right, for the same reason, to be heard by Congress.

Mr. President, if a foreigner in this country, subject to its laws, bearing its burdens, is suffering a grievance, a grievance which is not one to be righted in a court, but which can be redressed only by the action of Congress, it seems to me by every possible principle which applies to his right to go into a court, he should be permitted to be heard by Congress.

But, Mr. President, the use of the word "people" is signifi-cant, and it corresponds in its broadness with the principle which would include everyone who is within the jurisdiction and subject to the laws of the country, because foreigners have rights, and they have obligations, and those rights may be rights which can be redressed only at the hands of Congress; and by every rule and by every principle they would have the same right to appeal to Congress that they would have to appeal to the courts.

Mr. HEYBURN. May I ask the Senator a question in that line?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. HEYBURN. Suppose a thousand subjects of Russia or of Italy, not being citizens of the United States, were to seek to petition Congress that action be taken against their Government; would a petition like that be received?

Mr. BACON. The question what the petition contains is another matter. There are certain things, as suggested to me by the learned Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams], that would not possibly be entertained by Congress as being a matter which would violate every principle of comity. Certain things might be rejected on that account. Certain petitions, by reason of being disrespectful to this body—for instance, for being couched in improper language or casting aspersions on the President of the United States or any of the judiciary-would be rejected; but any petition couched in respectful language, by anyone whatever, not violating the obligation of comity which we owe to other nations, on any subject which affects the right of anyone within the jurisdiction of the Government and subject to its laws and entitled to the rights and subject to the obligation of all persons, whether citizens of the United States or not, would be received; and it is only some exceptional reason-not by reason of the fact of noncitizenship, but something that affects the particular petition, such as I have indicated in the references I have made-which would justify hesitation for a moment on the question of its reception when properly presented. I think it is so broad that it includes everyone within the jurisdiction of the country, subject to its laws, and regard-less of his station, whether it be high or low, or whether he be a free man in the exercise of his rights or a felon serving a sentence of the law.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in the volume of precedents which we have in regard to parliamentary questions in the Senate some cases are given of petitions from foreigners. The section is wrongly headed. It states, "Petitions from foreigners not received." And yet, if you read what the action was, the action was that the petition was ordered to lie on the table. It was not referred.

I myself agree entirely with the interpretation given to the clause of the Constitution by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. I have no sort of doubt as to the right of petition by a man not a citizen of the United States but a resident here and within our jurisdiction. I do not think it is material whether he has become a citizen or has not.

The right of petition at one period in our history was the subject of great contention. The House of Representatives for a great many years undertook to exclude petitions bearing upon The great contest that John Quincy Adams made to slavery. The great contest that John Quincy Adams made to establish the right of petition is familiar to every one. It was established and the gag rule, as it is called, was repealed.

I have always believed most profoundly, Mr. President, that the right of petition is absolute. The only restriction upon it is that the petition should be couched in proper and respectful The language should not be indecent or improper. language. The language should not be indecent or improper. If it is in respectful language, whether it comes from a man in the penitentiary or whether it comes from the highest officer in the land, it should be received. The right of petition is to me a great constitutional right.

I have said this simply because I think the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] misunderstood what I said.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, with reference to the question which has just been passed upon, I desire to say that I voted to receive this petition and to print it in the RECORD upon the broad ground that it is a petition from the American Federation of Labor, an organization well known to this country.

So far as concerns Mr. Gompers, there is nothing to indicate that he is not a citizen of the United States or the subject or citizen of a foreign government. There is a mere suggestion of such a possibility. If any Senator or the Presiding Officer of the Senate, where the petitioner is not a citizen of this country but is a citizen or subject of some foreign country, were to present a petition to the Senate from the person himself, in his individual capacity, it would raise an entirely distinct question under the rule of the Senate, and one that is provided for expressly by the rules

To make myself plainer, if it appeared as a fact that Samuel Gompers is a citizen or subject of some foreign country and submitted this petition in his individual capacity as such, it could not be presented to the Senate under the rule except through the President of the United States, the executive medium of communication between this Government and foreign countries. Rather than have this matter go over without having the rule called to the attention of the Senate, I will read a portion of paragraph 5 of Rule VII:

But no petition or memorial or other paper signed by citizens or subjects of a foreign power shall be received, unless the same be trans-mitted to the Senate by the President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

Proposed amendment to the resolution of ratification presented by Mr. Root August 21, 1911.

Amend the first paragraph of said resolution by adding to the same the following:
"With the exception of the last clause in Article III, which reads as "With the exception of the last clause in Article III, which reads as follows:

"It is further agreed, however, that in cases in which the parties disagree as to whether or not a difference is subject to arbitration under Article I of this treaty, that question shall be submitted to the joint high commission of inquiry; and if all or all but one of the members of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of Article I, it shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this treaty."

"To this clause the Senate withholds its approval."

Also amend said resolution by adding at the close of the same the following:

"Resolved further, That the Senate advises and consents to the ratification of said treaty with the understanding, to be made a part of such ratification, that the American members of any joint high commission of inquiry provided for in said treaty shall be appointed by the President, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate."

So that said resolution, when amended, will read as follows:

"Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain respecting arbitration, signed at Washington on the 3d day of August, 1911, with the exception of the last clause in Article III, which reads as follows:

"It is further agreed, however, that in cases in which the parties disagree as to whether or not a difference is subject to arbitration under Article I of this treaty, that question shall be submitted to the joint high commission of inquiry; and if all or all but one of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of Article I, it shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this treaty.

"To this clause the Senate withholds its approval.

"Resolved further, That the Senate advises and consents to the ratification of the said treaty with the understanding, to be made a part of such ratification, that the treaty does not authorize the submission to arbitration of any question which depends upon or involves the maintenance of the traditional attitude of the United States concerning American questions or other purely governmental policy.

"Resolved further, That the Senate advises and consents to the ratification of said treaty with the understanding, to be made a part of such ratification, that the American members of any joint high commission of inquiry provided for in said treaty shall be appointed by the President, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, inasmuch as any uncertainty as to proper construction of these treaties can easily be cured, either by an amendment in the body of the instruments themselves or in the resolutions adopting them, we might well relieve ourselves of all effort to maintain our particular views of the construction that ought to be accorded to them; and if there were no other reasons compelling a further discussion of construction I certainly should not ask the attention of the Senate to any further argument along that line.

But when, on the floor of this Senate, it has been openly charged that the President of the United States has with studied purpose attempted to deprive the Senate of its constitutional power as a part of the treaty-making body and to transfer its functions to a commission; when he has been accused of impliedly, at least, attempting to avoid the Constitution which he has sworn to support, I feel it is the moral duty of those who deny that any such construction should be given to those proposed treaties to make public in the same tribunal their earnest dissent from those charges.

I have sometimes differed greatly with the President of the United States on questions of internal policy, but no man canever justly challenge his sincerity of purpose, his uniform candor, or his devotion fo the Constitution and the people of this country

The President declares that there is no purpose in these treaties to limit or curtail the constitutional power of the Sen-The Secretary of State so declares; and, Mr. President, the treaties themselves negative such purpose and can only be made to support it by a process of reasoning which shall violate the three fundamental rules of construction-first, that every provision should be given effect; second, that every provision should be made harmonious; and third, that each provision should be considered with reference to the object sought to be attained and the usages and customs pertaining to it.

I was not present at the committee meeting when the majority report presented by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] was adopted. I am not therefore informed as to whether it represents the views merely of a majority of those who were present at that meeting or whether it has back of it the numerical majority of the entire committee. But I am certain that it can not be sustained without violating these fundamental rules of construction; that to sustain it we can not give effect to each and every provision; that to sustain it we are compelled to leave certain provisions inharmonious and in conflict; that to sustain it we must obliterate from our minds the prime purpose of section 2 and the customary method of bringing international questions before the treaty-making body.

Mr. President, the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations are, I believe, unanimous in their desire to provide for the settlement by an arbitral tribunal of every international difference that may arise not affecting the honor, independence, vital interest, or traditional attitude of any country upon questions which it deems essential to its national safety.

The only difference that has arisen in the committee is one of construction of the arbitration agreements submitted. Every member of the committee, as well as every Member of the Senate, must agree that the Senate, as a part of the treatymaking power of the Government, can not in law, and ought not in policy, surrender its constitutional right to assent to, modify, or reject any agreement of a treaty character sub-mitted to it, or its right to insist that every such agreement shall be submitted for its action.

If it can be established beyond reasonable cavil that these treaties do not purpose to deprive the Senate of its full constitutional power as a part of the treaty-making machinery of the Government, that its constitutional authority is in no way threatened or impaired, then the only question is the broad one, Does the Senate of the United States desire to take this great and advanced step looking toward universal peace, the abolition of the horrors and devastations of war, and the removal of the onerous burden of maintaining vast armies and navies which are to-day sapping the very life of nations and requiring nearly three-fourths of the national revenues throughout the world?

Mr. President, the longer one studies and the more carefully he analyzes the provisions of these agreements the more certain he will become of the untenableness of any construction of them that will impair the constitutional right of the Senate to exercise its judgment and discretion upon the whole or any provision contained in them.

Reduced to their simplest mode of expression, these agreements provide:

First. By Article I that international differences which can not be settled by diplomacy and which are justiciable in their nature shall be submitted to arbitration.

Second. That they shall be submitted by special agreements in each case.

Third. That these special agreements in this country in each case shall be made by the President by and with the consent and advice of the Senate.

Note right here that no difference can be submitted to arbitration except by an agreement, which must be submitted to the Fourth. That the agreements shall provide that the differences shall be submitted either to The Hague tribunal or to a special arbitral tribunal whose powers, duties, and procedure shall be fixed by the agreements.

All these shall be submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent.

These are the essential features of Article I.

So far everything is clear. So far there is no disagreement in the committee as to the proper construction to be placed upon these agreements; it, however, has been intimated that we might well dispense with Article II, the provision for the creation of a commission.

But, Mr. President, history, and very modern history, has often taught the lesson that differences may become so acute, that national sentiment or pride may be so wrought up through exaggerated statements or bellicose utterances, that it may become impossible while the tension exists for a government to submit even the most clearly arbitrable questions to any international court. And to avoid this danger, to prevent such crises, as well as to secure correct data and an unbiased presentation of the claims of each nation for use and guidance in case the matter shall be formulated into an agreement for submission to arbitration, Article II is inserted in the agreement, and I desire Senators specially to note the purposes of this Article II.

This article binds the parties, as occasion may arise, to constitute a joint high commission of inquiry composed of three nationals of each country, unless otherwise constituted in any particular case, to impartially and conscientiously investigate any controversy between the countries within the scope of Article I, and to investigate it even though they are not all agreed that it falls within the scope of Article I.

There are many occasions in which such an investigation ought to be made. I can cite one in the recent history of this country when we raised the Monroe doctrine in the Venezuelan affair, in which a question might well have been discussed, not whether there was any attempt to violate the Monroe doctrine by the other country, but whether the real question at issue was one that would come within the provisions of the Monroe doctrine.

But remember, also, that this is an investigating commission only, and that its investigation precedes and is preliminary to any agreement for arbitration. Its function is partly to apprise the Governments concerned of the facts that they may determine whether the case is an arbitrable one, and if so, the character of the agreement for its arbitration which should be submitted to the Senate by the Executive of this Government or to the proper treaty-making power of the other Government. And again I ask the Senate to note how carefully the nego-

And again I ask the Senate to note how carefully the negotiators of these agreements have guarded against the infringement of the proper functions of the treaty-making power of the Government by this joint high commission. In the second paragraph of Article III, it is declared:

The reports of the commission shall not be regarded as decisions of the questions or matters so submitted, either on the facts or on the law, and shall in no way have the character of an arbitral award.

Now, we must find somewhere a purpose to make an exception to or to modify that clear proposition. This inhibition should be kept clearly in mind in arriving at the intent and purposes of these agreements.

So far, therefore, Mr. President, the agreements not only do not challenge the constitutional right of the Senate, but everywhere recognize and uphold it, first, by positively declaring that each agreement for arbitration, whether the agreement comes through the President directly or through this joint high commission, must be submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent; second, by providing that the report of the joint high commission shall in effect be adviced only commission shall, in effect, be advisory only.

I now approach directly the paragraph in controversy with the single object of determining whether that paragraph, by sudden divergence of purpose, clearly antagonistic to the purposes so far indicated, nullifies the provisions of article 1 that these agreements shall be made by and with the consent and advice of the Senate and also nullifies the immediately preceding paragraph, that the report of the commission shall not be regarded as decisions either upon the fact or the law.

To say that the negotiators of these agreements intended by the last paragraph of Article III to destroy the clear and positive declarations of Article II and further to destroy the preceding paragraphs of Article III, the first of which declares for the submission of the agreements to the Senate, and the second carefully guards against any conclusion of the committee having more than advisory force, is, in my judgment, paying scant respect to the ability of lawyers who have held the highest judicial positions in the country.

Mr. President, this paragraph will not bear the construction

Mr. President, this paragraph will not bear the construction contended for as elucidated in the majority report; and it can not, without taking a whole clause bodily out of it, be made to conform to the construction placed upon it by that report.

Let us analyze paragraph 3, which we are asked to strike out. It reads:

It is further agreed, however, that in cases in which the parties disagree as to whether or not a difference is subject to arbitration under article 1 of this treaty, that question shall be submitted to the joint high commission of inquiry; and if all or all but one of the members of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of article 1—

And I want Senators to pay attention to the words it shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provision of this treaty.

What is the meaning of the language "shall be referred to arbitration"? Does it mean that it shall absolutely be arbitrated without reference to anything else? Is there any magic in the word "referred" as it is used in this third subdivision that gives it greater force or potentiality than is contained in the word "submitted" as it appears in the first paragraph? One paragraph says that in case the President believes—in effect, it so says—that it is justiciable it shall be submitted to arbitration; the other says that if all, or all but one, of the commission declare that it comes within the scope of article 1, it shall be referred to arbitration. Is there any greater force in the words "referred to arbitration"? Do they carry a meaning greater than that in the preceding paragraph that it shall be "submited to arbitration"?

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] in his very eloquent discussion here the other day stated—and I have his words—

If it was intended that the decision of the joint high commission should not be a finality, there would not have been the slightest difficulty in so expressing it and inserting in the treaty a clear and unambiguous provision that after the decision of the joint high commission it could then be reopened in the Senate for its acceptance or rejection.

But, Mr. President, that is a double-edged sword; that is an argument which cuts deeper backward than it does forward. After a provision which has clearly declared that this finding shall not be final, if the negotiators purposed to make an exception, then we might rather look for some words that should clearly indicate that purpose. If it was intended that the finding should be final upon a particular question, I answer the Senator's argument by saying it was the easiest thing in the world for the negotiators to have declared, not that this shall be "referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this treaty," but that it "shall be arbitrated without further action"; that it shall without further action be submitted either to The Hague tribunal or be submitted to some other particular tribunal.

When read in the light of both Articles I and II the purpose of the last paragraph of Article III is clearly apparent. There can be no clear line of demarcation between questions that are justiciable—that is, those which do not affect the vital interest, independence, honor, national safety, or traditional attitude of any country—and those which are not justiciable. As a rule the jealous concern of any great country for its own future will be a sufficient guaranty that no question involving its honor, vital interest, or its traditional attitude, which attitude is always based upon what it considers its vital interest, will ever be submitted to arbitration; and that both nations should by solemn compact agree to submit the destiny of their governments, involving millions and hundreds of millions of people, to the disposal of any arbitral court is unthinkable, and as such unworthy of serious consideration.

But there may be, and naturally must be, a zone where the one question merges into the other and where, without serious charge of caprice, one government may claim that a question is clearly justiciable while the other may claim that it is not. Such a case may depend upon both questions of law and fact. Such questions of law and fact may need investigation. If, after such investigation, the facts are so clear that at least five out of six, or all of the nationals of one country and all but one of the other, agree that the matter is a justiciable question, then it may be referred to arbitration, not that it shall beyond all question go to arbitration, but that it may be referred to arbitration. But how is it to be referred?

And right here is the crux of the whole question. that all the members of the joint high commission, or all but one, decide that the case is clearly justiciable, then what becomes of it? Is it immediately referred to The Hague tribunal or other arbitral tribunal? Certainly it is not. No other tribunal at this stage has even been created. It is to be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this treaty. What provisions of this treaty? Manifestly those provisions in Article I which provide for special agreement to be made between the contending countries, and in this country submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent.

What would be the mode of operation? The joint high commission having found by unanimous or almost unanimous decision that the case is justiciable—that it comes within the provisions of Article I—the two Governments proceed to draw up a special agreement to refer the case to arbitration—not to arbitrate it, but to refer it to arbitration. This special agreement must either provide for its submission to the Hague tribunal or to some other tribunal, the constitution of which will be fixed in the agreement. This agreement must then be submitted by the President to the Senate of the United States.

And when this special agreement comes before the Senate, what function is to be performed by the Senate in reference to it? If the construction contended for in the majority report is to govern, the submission to the Senate is simply perfunc-tory; the reference to it is but idle ceremony. It is submitted to it for its advice, but it is estopped from advising. is submitted to it for its consent, but it is estopped in honor from withholding its consent. I submit that is a most extraordinary and strained construction. It is a construction that does violence to every natural intendment of the positive and specific provisions contained in the instrument. When a treaty is submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent-and I speak of treaties in general-the negotiators know and understand that the power of the Senate in reference to it is unlim-When, therefore, these agreements, which are in effect separate and distinct treaties, are submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent, what warrant have we to assume that the negotiators intended that the powers of the Senate should

I purpose to more closely analyze this last provision. It is suggested that this paragraph declares that if the commission "report that the difference is within the scope of Artice I it shall be referred to arbitration," and that therefore while the Senate has the undoubted right to disagree with the conclusions of the commission it would not be acting in good faith in so doing.

Mr. President, that is giving a wrong construction to the word "referred"; that is giving the words "referred to arbitration" the same meaning as though the instrument declared positively that the difference should be arbitrated. no more justified in according those words that conclusive meaning than we are in assuming, when we use the words in the first paragraph, that it "shall be submitted to arbitration." That we therefore mean that the difference must go to arbitration, and the Senate could not act in any way antagonistic to that idea when the matter is submitted under the provisions of Article I. But, Mr. President, that is not the complete declara-tion. The declaration is that it shall be referred to arbitration. The declaration is that it shall be referred to arbitra-tion "in accordance with the provisions of this treaty," and that makes an entirely different proposition. That negatives any assumption that it should be referred to arbitration without first going through the Senate in some form. That means that it will be referred to the Senate and will be arbitrated if the Senate advises that it shall be done; and I submit that means that the Senate can use its full and unfettered judgment as to whether the case does actually come within the scope of Article I. If there is left one solitary reasonable doubt that the negotiators did not intend that the Senate should be precluded from exercising its jull judgment, if there remains a single doubt that such an exercise of judgment on the part of the Senate was not to be deemed an act of bad faith, and that the Senate should not be estopped by the finding of the commission from holding a view contrary to its findings, that doubt is dissipated by the provision which in no uncertain words declares:

The reports of the commission shall not be regarded as decisions of the questions or matters so submitted, either on the facts or on the law.

This is what the instrument says as to the finality of the conclusion of the commission. I will ascertain further whether the succeeding clause modifies that. It especially declares that it is not final. And if the decisions are not conclusive there is but one body that can make them conclusive—the treaty-making body, the President and the Senate.

am not unmindful of the particular words used in the beginning of the third paragraph, following the paragraph which is quoted, namely:

It is further agreed, however, etc., that if the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of Article I, it shall be referred to arbitration.

But now, if you will look at the provision, you will find that this is a distinct paragraph and not a part of and not intended to modify the preceding paragraph as to the nonconclusiveness of all of the decisions of the commission. It is rather, Mr. President, a modification of the first article.

Now, let us look into that a little. Under Article I, the President could not submit a case to arbitration—that is, he could not formulate an agreement, and that is what "submit to arbitration" means, so far as he is concerned—and submit it to the Senate for its advice and consent, when he considered that such an agreement would not be within the scope of Article I, even though the whole world might believe otherwise, and though every Member of the Senate might believe otherwise. So this second article is inserted providing for a commission to investigate, and it is intended by this provision, which the majority report seeks to strike out, to insure the proper preliminary steps being taken when the question is so clearly within the scope of Article I as to receive the unanimous, or lacking but one of the unanimous, report of the commission. When the case is so clearly within the scope of Article I as to secure such a finding, then the preliminary steps shall be taken to bring the matter before the Senate for its advice, even though the President might not be satisfied that the case was clearly within the scope of Article I. In such case it is made his duty to take the initiatory steps to bring the matter before the Senate for its advice, and without that there is no duty imposed upon him to bring it before the Senate for its advice. Suppose, in the matter of the Venezuelan trouble, to which I have referred, the President of the United States, for political or other reasons, or because he wanted to have his own way, had answered the final note that came from Great Britain, in which that country disclaimed any intention to take territory other than that which it had claimed, prior to the promulgation of the Monroe doctrine, by denying the right of arbitration upon the ground that the Monroe doctrine is not an arbitrable question and therefore the subsidiary question as to whether Great Britain was seeking territory outside of what she held prior to the Monroe doctrine was not an arbitrable question. In such case the matter could never have gotten before the Senate for its consent and advice.

This is the view taken by the negotiators of these instruments, the President and the Secretary of State. And this is the only view that will harmonize all of its provisions. And between a construction which will give harmony and effect to every provision of an instrument and a construction that will leave them in conflict, or that will compel us to eliminate—as I will soon show we must eliminate-some word or words as having no purpose, the former must be adopted.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, may I be permitted by the Senator to ask him a question at that point?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.
Mr. BACON. I understand the proposition, which the Senator is arguing with great earnestness and force, to be that if the Senate, after the joint high commission has adjudged a certain question to be justiciable, should disagree with that commission, the Senate would be authorized under the terms of this treaty to refuse to submit it to arbitration?

Mr. McCUMBER. In exactly the same way as it would if it had come directly from the President in the first instance without being passed upon by the commission.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator. He has been very candid and very broad in his statements. I ask the Senator, in view of his interpretation of the treaty in that regard, if, to avoid all possible question of ambiguity, he would be willing to embody as a part of the resolution of ratification the provision which I will now read.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is that the amendment offered by the

Mr. BACON. I will read it if the Senator will permit menot all of it, but just a part of it, which fully expresses the idea advanced by the Senator from North Dakota. It is in this language:

Resolved further-

This is to be a part of the resolution of ratification-

Resolved further, That the Senate advises and consents to the ratification of the treaty with the understanding, to be made a part of such ratification, that the treaty does not purport or intend that there shall in any case be denied to the Senate of the United States the full exercise of all the powers and duties conferred upon it by the Constitution of the United States in advising and consenting to the making of treaties and as to each and every part of the same and as to each and every question entering therein; and that nothing in said treaty shall be construed to impose any obligation, legal or moral, upon the Senate to waive its constitutional authority and duty to consider and determine each and every question entering into treaties proposed or submitted in pursuance thereof, including the question whether the matters in difference are arbitrable.

Would the Senator agree to that?

Mr. McCUMBER. I stated the other day that while I contended that it was wholly unnecessary, I would consent to put in the resolution anything which would make certain that upon which the Senators themselves disagree.

Mr. BACON. I do not ask the Senator to go that far. I ask the Senator whether he would agree to that specific language?

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree to that specific language or something similar to it.

Mr. BACON. That is not the question I ask of the Senator. I ask the Senator will be agree to that specific language?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection to the specific lan-

Mr. BACON. That is about as close, I presume, as I can get the Senator to answer.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think that is sufficient.

Mr. President, I wish briefly to answer the arguments of the majority report. By Article I the matter submitted must—

First. Relate to international matters and not to matters which are internal or which relate exclusively to what each government may properly regard as a policy, as essential to its own maintenance, life, progress, prosperity, and independence, as its internal affairs;

Second. The question must be a claim of right made by one against the other; and

Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

Third. The claim must be justiciable in its nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law and equity.

I wish to give my most vigorous dissent to the rule laid down by the majority in their report of the construction of the words "law and equity," and to agree most heartily with the construction placed upon those words by the Senator from Every country must, of course, determine for itself what policies or subjects are international and what are not, and it will naturally be supposed that no government would ever submit to arbitration a matter recognized as essential to its own safety and independence. For instance, every country by its own laws determines who may and who may not become citizens of such country. The safety of such country depends upon the solidarity of its own citizenship. A nonassimilable people have always proved to be dangerous to any country of which they are a component part. We have a living illustration of that fact in the terrible struggle between the Manchus and the Chinese in China to-day. Each country has an inherent right to determine for itself whether a people of a particular color or a particular religion is conducive to its peace and safety, and therefore to determine whether or not such people shall be excluded from its citizenship or from its territory. Therefore, no such question could be submitted to arbitration, because it is a purely internal question. It would be as improper to submit such a question to arbitration as it would to try to compel two men, one a vegetarian and one a flesh eater, to submit to arbitration which diet the other should adopt. That is a matter for each to determine and not for one to impose upon the other.

Mr. BORAH. They could waive it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Any nation can waive anything it sees fit. Russia can waive, if it sees fit, its own view as to expatriation, but we have no right to demand and to say to Russia that whether or not she shall waive it it is an arbitrable question.

Our Monroe doctrine stands exactly upon the same footing. We long ago determined that our safety as a Nation forbade the extension of the territorial domain of any European country over the Western Continent. That is declared to be a policy of this country just as essential to its welfare as the exclusion of undesirable people from its citizenship. Every country of Europe has impliedly, at least, recognized that policy. But whether recognized or not, no country could claim that from our standpoint it is a justiciable question. Therefore, no such question could possibly be submitted to arbitration, for both countries must agree that the question is an arbitrable one.

Other questions of like character may arise. Probably in three years we shall have completed the Panama Canal. While practically a highway for all nations, it is nevertheless peculiarly an American waterway. It is our property. We may regard it as a necessary highway for the mobilization of our warships in either Atlantic or Pacific waters. We may take such means to guard and protect it as we may deem necessary. We may properly say that this is an American question, not an international question, and not one that could be submitted to arbitration.

For the same reason Great Britain holds Gibraltar; for the same reason she controls the Suez Canal; for the same reason she guards the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles. She may properly say to the world: "These are British questions solely regard the protection of this natural as well as artificial highway as necessary for the protection of our domains beyond the sea, even necessary to supply our own people with the food they can not raise. Our national safety demands that we shall not allow that highway to be threatened." She would very properly refuse to submit matters of that character to arbitration.

Again, by Article I, it is provided that these questions must be justiciable in their nature by being susceptible to decision by application of the principles of law and equity. I am compelled to disagree with the report of the majority of the committee, in which they say:

We are obliged, therefore, to construe the word "equity" in its broad and universal acceptance as that which is equally right or just to all concerned; as the application of the dictates of good conscience to the settlement of controversies.

"Law and equity," used together anywhere in the English language have a technical meaning. The words "law and equity" are never understood to mean law and justice. The phrase has its genesis in English and American jurisprudence, and when used in a legal instrument carries the technical mean-We often use French phrases in our English literature, and when so used the French significance of the words would govern. If we were dealing with Great Britain alone, as we are in one treaty, I can not conceive of there being any claim that they should have other than their technical meaning as used and always used and understood by both countries. And if we use this English and American term in a treaty with France, it should have the English and American construction, exactly the same as a French phrase should have a French construction though used in an English document.

There is a wide distinction between "law and equity" and "law and justice." All laws are not just. Therefore justice may not harmonize with positive law. We can not have an equity that is opposed to law. Equity carries out the good intent and purpose of the law, which by reason of its universality may be deficient in detail or forms of execution to meet the equitable requirements of a particular case, but, unlike "justice," equity can never conflict with positive law.

Let us elucidate this by a very late case which was before the Senate, the termination of the Russian treaty. I was surprised to note that a very popular writer in one of our magazines suggested that this was a case for arbitration. This was not and could not be made a cause of arbitration. In 1868 we declared by positive law the right of any citizen of any country in the world who came to this country and lived here, and whom we might choose to adopt, to expatriate himself from his former allegiance and to become in every respect an American citizen. That law is an internal affair that has to do with the rights of our own people and of their citizenship. No matter what the equity, neither this Government nor the Russian Government could properly submit its laws relating to its internal policies to any court of arbitration. And in that respect we have a fair demonstration of the difference between law and equity and what some people might call law and justice.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then that statute repealed the treaty of 1832

Mr. McCUMBER. That statute, by clear implication, repealed the treaty so far as we recognized the Russian claim that a citizen could not expatriate himself without the consent of his Government, and I claim that in that treaty we practically did admit that, but by our act of 1868 we declared as a positive law that we would not recognize it longer, and we forbade our officers from recognizing it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; but suppose the treaty Mr. McCUMBER. I have stated that only in so far as it related to expatriation the statute repealed the treaty. say it repealed anything relating to shipping or anything of that

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then the Senator does not contend that we could repeal a treaty by a statute?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, yes, I do; just as we can repeal a statute by treaty.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. A treaty is the paramount law. Mr. McCUMBER. Unless it conflicts with the statute. statute is likewise the paramount law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is not the rule.

Mr. McCUMBER. I disagree with the Senator about that, but I do not care to go into a discussion of the subject.

Mr. BORAH. We can repeal it, so far as the citizens of this country are concerned, but we can not annul it so far as it affects our international obligations.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is all I claim-that, so far as the internal aspect is concerned, we can.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me not be misunderstood. The act of Congress would undoubtedly be binding on the administrative officers of this Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But it would not, in international parlance, void our treaty obligations.

Mr. McCUMBER. Nobody has claimed that. I say the statute becomes the law of the land governing our internal policies, and no nation can ask us to arbitrate our internal

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from North Dakota

a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Did you say in the earlier part of your address that the President of the United States takes your view of the construction of Article III?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is my understanding, and I so de-I understand others have stated that at one time he took a different view, but I can not find any justification for that assertion in any of his public utterances.

Mr. CUMMINS. I simply want to advise the Senator that I heard him make a very well-reasoned and a very complete address upon this subject-I sat by his side-in which he took exactly the opposite view and declared that the third paragraph of Article III was intended to bind the Senate and to bind the United States with regard to the character of the controversy.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not heard every utterance by the President, and I can not take issue with the Senator, who states that he was present when the discussion took place, but I have read the addresses as they have been published and such as purported to be given in full, and I have found nothing to justify that claim.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am told, too, that the Secretary of State, before the Foreign Relations Committee, took the same view that the President has taken, or apparently has taken, in his addresses throughout the country.

Mr. McCUMBER. Having been present when the Secretary of State was before the committee, I beg to state that I did not so understand the Secretary. But I do not care to go into a discussion of that. I do not even care what the purpose was. I stand upon the construction that should be given to it according to its language.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Townsend in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. We are now engaged in making this treaty, and several Members of the Senate, who are peculiarly fitted to discuss this question from a legal standpoint, hold entirely different views as to what the treaty means.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Have we reached the point where we are incapable of using the English language so as to express what

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, Mr. President, I have stated again and again that I am perfectly willing either to modify the body of the treaty—and if the Senator had been listening he would have heard that I stated in this argument-

Mr. BORAH. I heard that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am willing to make it conform to the view which I have and which I think the Senator has, at least as to the rights and duties of the Senate, either by an amendment making it clear in the body of the instrument or in the resolution to be adopted.

If it is claimed by any foreign country that it has a right to deny a citizen of its country the right of expatriation, and that country should try to make that a question of arbitration upon the grounds of equity, we would answer that equity as read in this instrument always means an equity subject to the positive law of the land, and therefore such a question could not be submitted to arbitration because opposed to the law of the land.

It might be added with equal force that in this particular case there was absolutely no occasion for arbitration, because there was no difference between the parties as to the right of either party to terminate the agreement. The instrument itself declared in positive terms the right of such termination by either Government, and therefore there was no possible controversy as to that right being exercised by either party. Not Not only this, but by the positive law of 1868 we had in effect abrogated that treaty so far as it related to the right of expatria-It had not been binding upon us since that date, and we only did by direction what we had previously done by implica-

Questions, however, may arise as to whether certain disputes are within the category of those which are excluded from arbitration by reason of not being justiciable.

Had a treaty of this kind been in existence during the last Cleveland administration, the last clause of Article III could well have been made use of in determining whether or not a case was clearly within the Monroe doctrine. The Monroe doctrine excludes any European power from extending its territorial limits at the expense of any American country. A dispute arose between Great Britain and Venezuela as to whether certain territory was British or Venezuelan territory. British forces were landed, as I remember, to hold a large tract of country which was claimed by Venezuela. If such territory rightfully belonged to Venezuela then there could be no question but that its seizure and permanent holding by Great Britain would violate our Monroe doctrine. President Cleveland, in diplomatic terms, after setting forth our ancient doctrine, desired an expression from the British Government of its purpose. The very leisurely manner in which the British Government proceeded in the matter brought about the famous message of President Cleveland, abrupt and threatening, and which well might have endangered the peace of the country. In due time, or, from our standpoint, past due time, the British Government stated its purpose was to hold only such territory as it claimed actually belonged to This Government conceded that the question as to where a boundary line was located was a proper matter for arbitration; that while the Monroe doctrine itself was not an arbitrable question, still the question as to the proper location of a boundary line between a South American Republic and British territory in South America was a question of that character. We have followed the same policy since that time in adjusting our own boundary lines with Great Britain, and it is just this which calls for this joint high commission, and without which we might possibly, under some circumstances, not be able to bring a matter before the Senate when it ought to be brought before it.

It seems to be conceded by the majority report that the special agreement for submission either to The Hague or to the other arbitral tribunal must be submitted to the Senate. right here the report of the majority seems to lay itself open to the criticism that it is illogical in that it assumes that while the matter must be submitted to the Senate for its concurrence, the submission is perfunctory only and the Senate has no right to question the finding of the joint high commission.

After quoting the clause sought to be stricken out, the report

It will be seen by an examination of the clause just quoted that if the joint commission, which may consist of one or more persons, which may be composed wholly of foreigners or wholly of nationals, decides that the question before them is justiciable under article 1, it must then go to arbitration, whether the treaty-making power of either country believes it to be justiciable or not. A special agreement coming to the Senate after the joint commission had decided the question involved to be justiciable could not be amended or rejected by the Senate on the ground that in their opinion the question was not justiciable and did not come within the scope of Article I.

I answer this by saying that the treaty does not so provide. The treaty, which must be considered as a whole, declares, first:

The reports of the commission shall not be regarded as decisions of the questions or matters so submitted, either on the facts or on the law, and shall in no way have the character of an arbitral award.

The treaty further states:

If all, or all but one, of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of Article I, it shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this treaty.

How is it to be referred in case of a finding of a commission that it is justiciable? It is to be referred in accordance with the provisions of the treaty, and the provisions of the treaty are, first, as provided in Article I, that the agreement can only be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and as provided in Article III, that the report of the commission shall not be regarded as a decision on either the law or the fact, so that under the actual wording of the treaty, the Senate has a duty to perform, and it is inconceivable to me that those who negotiated this instrument should have solemnly provided that each agreement should be submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent and as solemnly intended that it should do nothing but consent.

If the negotiators had so intended they would naturally have said, "and if all or all but one of the members of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of Article I, it shall be arbitrated," without further action, instead of saying, "It shall be referred to arbitration, in accordance with the provisions of this treaty."

Again the report says:

Under these circumstances to vest in an outside commission the power to say finally what the treaty means by its very general and indefinite language is to vest in that commission the power to make for us an entirely different treaty from that which we supposed ourselves to be making.

How this assertion can be made when the very right, the final right, to pass upon the question whether or not a matter shall be submitted to arbitration rests in the Senate itself, is beyond my understanding.

Again, the report says:

Again, the report says:

For instance, if another nation should do something to which we object under the Monroe doctrine, and the validity of our objection should be challenged and an arbitration should be demanded by that other nation, the vital point would be whether our right to insist upon the Monroe doctrine was subject to arbitration. And if the third clause of article 3 remains in the treaty the Senate could be debarred from passing upon that question.

If the third clause of Article III remains in that treaty the Senate would not only not be debarred from passing upon that question, but by the very terms of that last clause, providing that the matter shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the treaty, the Senate would be compelled to pass upon that question. I do not for a moment concede that any arbitral tribunal appointed by a President who himself had declared that the subject was not one for arbitration and who appointed the members of the joint high commission would hold that a proposition so clear as the Monroe doctrine could possibly be made a subject of arbitration, but if they should so hold, still their holding could not be final until the Senate had also so advised.

Again, the report says:

If our right to exclude certain classes of immigrants were challenged, the question would be forced before a joint commission, and if that commission decided that the question was arbitrable the Senate would have no power to reject the special agreement for the arbitration of that subject on the ground that it was not a question for arbitration within the contemplation of Article I.

I have shown that by every clause in the treaty the question must finally go to the Senate. To refer does not mean that it is actually to be arbitrated, but simply that it is to take the regular course of reference; first, in the form of the special agreement; and, second, to the Senate for its advice and consent. If that is conceded, as I understand it is, then I submit that it was not intended that referring the matter to the Senate for its advice and consent was a mere idle ceremony. And yet that is the construction that must be placed upon it to support the assertions I have mentioned in the majority

Again, the report says:

To take from the Senate, in any degree or by any means, the power of saying whether a given question is one for arbitration or not is to destroy the power of the Senate on the most important point to be decided in connection with differences arising with any other nation.

Everyone admits that proposition. This treaty not only does not take away from the Senate, in any degree or by any means, the power to say whether a given question is one for arbitration, but there is no power that could take that away from the Senate. It is a constitutional right that can not be denied. The President, who negotiated this treaty, understands that as well as any Member of the Senate. And I certainly feel that I would be showing great disrespect for his legal acumen if I supposed that he had forgotten that in making this treaty or that either he or the Secretary of State, one of the profound lawyers of the country, should have so purposed.

Everywhere in the majority report we find that the words "in accordance with the provisions of this treaty," the last eight words of the article sought to be stricken out, have been entirely ignored; have been treated as though they did not exist for any purpose whatever. If those who agree with the majority report hold that they did intend to give meaning to those words, and that those words do mean that the agreement must nevertheless be submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent, then they are forced back on the very frail argument that, notwithstanding the fact that the Senate is invited and required to exercise the function of advising and consenting by the terms of the treaty, it can only only advise in the affirmative. Such is not a reasonable construction.

I submit there is just as much reason for saying that the Senate is debarred from exercising its judgment as to whether the case is an arbitrable one when submitted by the President, who, without the action of the commission, must of necessity and by implication does find when he submits the matter to the Senate that it is arbitrable, as to suppose that the Senate is debarred when it is submitted to it in consequence of the finding of the commission.

Mr. RAYNER. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. RAYNER. I wish to state what my construction of these words has always been, and I submit to the Senator what the Senate would do. Unquestionably it goes to the Senate, and they would determine what the arbitral tribunal should be. They would say whether it should be referred to The Hague or referred to some other arbitral tribunal. That, I think, is the duty of the Senate. I would not take any other part of that treaty in pari materia with Article III.

treaty in pari materia with Article III.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand the Senator's position. He made it very clear, I think.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator says the Senate would have no function to perform. He must admit that it would, at least, have that function to perform, to determine what arbitral tribunal is to determine the case.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, yes; and that is all, if you give it your construction.

Does not the Senate act exactly in the same way whether the matter comes before it on a decision by the President that the case is within the provisions of Article I, or a decision by the joint high commission of inquiry that the case is within the provisions of Article I? Both the President and the commission have to find that fact. The President of his own motion will not submit the matter unless he finds it falls within the provisions of Article I, and if the President holds that it is not within the provisions of Article I, then there is no way of getting it before the Senate, unless we have some other body that may say that it does fairly come within the provisions of Article I. In each instance the purpose is to secure the initiatory steps and bring the matter before the Senate. In each instance it is declared that it shall go before the Senate for its advice and consent, and there is nothing to be found in the instrument which says that the power of the Senate shall be limited in any way when the matter is brought before it. Why are we precluded from exercising our judgment in one case more than in the other? Both Article I and the last clause of Article III say in effect that the case shall be substituded. that the case shall be submitted or referred to arbitration if found to be a proper question for arbitration, not found by the Senate to be a proper case for arbitration, but if it is found by the President to be a case for arbitration, then it is "submitted" to arbitration under the first article, and if it is found by this committee to be a case for arbitration, then it is "referred" instead of "submitted" to arbitration.

Mr. RAYNER. If the Senator does not object to a further interruption—I have listened very attentively to his speech does he draw any distinction in law between submission to arbitration and reference to arbitration?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not. I say there should be none. Mr. RAYNER. But the Senator has drawn a distinction. He says the first article submits it when in the other article it is referred.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I do not say anything of the kind.

Mr. RAYNER. I understood you to say so.

Mr. McCUMBER. I say it is referred to the treaty-making power in one instance and it is submitted to the treaty-making power in the other. I give exactly and practically the same meaning to "submit" that I do to "refer." But those who support the majority, it seems to me, have to give a definite meaning, a more positive and stronger and a further meaning, to refer than they give to submit.

Mr. RAYNER. Let me ask just one more question and then I think I will understand the Senator. I do not suppose the Senator objects. This commission has two duties to perform?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. RAYNER. Two entirely distinct duties? Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. RAYNER. The first duty is an absolutely different duty from the second duty?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. RAYNER. In one set of cases the matter is referred to them for the purpose of investigation.

Mr. McCUMBER. In both cases they are for investigation.

I beg to differ with the Senator there. In every case they must investigate.

Mr. RAYNER. Undoubtedly. But under the first clause they do not give any decision. Under the second clause they give a decision. Now, the Senator brings in the first clause in reference to their duty under the second clause.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; the point is this-

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator couples the two together. That I do not understand,

I can not separate them. They investi-Mr. McCUMBER. gate a subject. Under all of the clauses they investigate it. There may be no question whatever in their mind, no one may raise a question as to whether the matter is justiciable or within the provision of Article I. Then, as a matter of course, it is referred, but if there is a question, then it will not be referred unless all or all but one of them declare it is justiciable.

Mr. RAYNER. But under the first reference the commission can not give any decision.

Mr. McCUMBER. It finds the facts and gives its conclusion; and that is all it does under the second.

Mr. RAYNER. That is separate.

Mr. McCUMBER. It makes its finding; it concludes what the facts are; and it presents its conclusions. It does not simply gather evidence and submit the evidence, even in the first, for investigation. It reports its decision. There is a decision in both instances. The first decision is what the facts establish, and that is submitted. The other decision is, if the question is raised as to its being arbitrable, and if decided in the affirmative, that is submitted as referred. But neither instance, I submit, is the decision binding upon the Senate, and certainly no more in the one case than in the other.

Mr. RAYNER. As I understand the Senator, he takes the first clause in pari materia with the last clause of Article III.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

I ask that Senators shall especially note that the declaration that the cause shall be submitted to arbitration is the same in each case. Under Article I the President decides whether the difference is justiciable, and if he so finds that article declares it "shall be submitted to the permanent court of arbitration." Under Article III the commission decides whether the question is justiciable, and if it so finds that article declares it "shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the While the language is general in each section, the provision being that the matter is to be submitted or referred to arbitration, the same proceeding is contemplated in each case the formation of a special agreement and its submission to the Senate for its advice and consent.

If Senators will bear in mind that the great prime purpose of the creation of the joint high commission is to investigate the facts and assure that the preliminary steps will be taken to get the matter before the Senate, when it is so clearly within the rule that all, or all but one, of the nationals of both countries so hold, the harmonious construction becomes simple and rational.

The whole question turns upon the purpose of the creation of this joint high commission. The instrument says, and I say, that the function of the commission is to investigate and to that the function of the commission is to investigate and to insure the proper preliminary steps to be taken which may eventually result in arbitration, where, without the intermediary action of the commission, no such step might be taken, either because the executive heads of the nation are disinclined to act or hold a contrary view. I think that a careful reading of the whole instrument will convince any Senator, whose mind has not already been made up on the matter, that the purpose of the creation of the commission is not to supersede the Senate in determining what is instiglable and that it is not intended in determining what is justiciable, and that it is not intended by the last phrase of Article III to make an exception to the advisory character of the report whereby on the principal question, that of the justiciability of the difference, its decision is to be conclusive; but such purpose is to investigate and assure a consideration by the treaty-making power of all questions which seem to be so clearly within the rule of Article I as to secure unanimous or nearly unanimous approval by a commission of men learned in international law and ethics.

Mr. President, just one word on the merits, and then I will close.

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator leaves that part of his speech I should like to ask him a question. I presume the Senator has compared this proposed treaty with the existing treaty we have with Great Britain.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not made a careful comparison, but I remember the other treaty.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will compare it carefully, he will find that the particuar article in which this objectionable sentence is found and which the Senator has been discussing is copied almost exactly from the existing treaty, except that this particular change is made in it. If it is not intended to change the existing treaty, why should additional language be put in it when in the treaty as it now exists there is practically the same thing, except that there is no outside commission which is given the power to determine whether or not the matter shall be arbitrated?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is the whole reason for it. There is no provision in the old treaty that will bring the matter before the Senate if the President is disinclined to bring it before the Senate. That is the purpose of the second article

Mr. President, our appropriation for the Army and Navy in 1891 was $68,342,507. In 1911 our appropriation was $226,791,421, an increase of 230 per cent in 20 years.

The British appropriation in 1891 was $154,560,782. In 1911 it was $332,931,219, an increase of 115 per cent in 20 years.

How long can this condition continue? The increase of our population during those 20 years was but 44 per cent. The increase of the population of Great Britain was 20 per cent.

Our appropriation for our Army and Navy increased five and one-fourth times as rapidly as our population. The British increase was five and one half times as rapid as her population.
Who can fail to see that the real end must be the question of which country will first become bankrupt or paralyzed in its further efforts? The race is toward national pauperism. The nations of the Old World are to-day being pauperized to defend themselves against each other. Blindly every nation is strug-gling to outdo the other in the size of its armament and its power for aggression. Before another 20 years, at the same rate of increase in the cost of preparedness for war, the countries of Europe will reach a state where every other governmental interest must be sacrificed to yield to the single demand for the creation and maintenance of armaments.

This condition is a crime against civilization. No country in the world is so situated as is our own country, guarded as she is by the seas, independent as she is of support from any foreign source, to take the initiative, and with a strong, earnest, and brave purpose bring about a cessation of this senseless, of this worse than criminal, expenditure of human energy for the production of that which does not tend to the happiness of the world, but whose one purpose is to destroy that happiness.

Even in the United States in times of peace, without a single war cloud in the horizon, nearly three-fourths of our govern-mental receipts are immediately poured into the war coffers for the maintenance of the Army and Navy and the payment of

The pride of this city is our Congressional Library. From the lips of every person who for the first time enters its portals bursts forth an exclamation of joy and pride. It cost just onehalf as much as a completed warship, to say nothing of the maintenance of the latter after completion. This beautiful structure will last a thousand years. The warship will become obsolete and useless in 10 years. We are suffering for a want of sufficient buildings to conduct the business of the country, and enormous sums are paid annually for rent, and yet the ap propriation which we make every year for war purposes would build 30 of these libraries, 300 of them in 10 years. We are unable while we are pouring these vast sums into our armament to even appropriate the necessary funds to complete the work of our Census Bureau, and we must leave all its important data, collected at great expense, until a time when it will be obsolete and useless.

And what profit is it to us that because of our greater resources we shall be able to outstrip all other nations of the world in the construction and maintenance of a mighty navy? Every dollar that we compel them to expend in an attempt to keep abreast of our power means a dollar that might have bought our goods. We are by this race for war power destroying the ability of our customers to purchase our wares, and our people in the end will suffer the result. If the money expended for war purposes the world over could be expended in the comforts and luxuries of life, we would all be comparatively wealthy. If the vast energy expended in the maintenance of armies and navies could be utilized for the real benefit of humanity we could have a paradise of plenty on earth.

You say preparedness for war is the surest guaranty of peace. As between two nations of equal power, with no contract or agreement or understanding to bind them to a rule of conduct that would be applied to the citizens of each, it may be possibly true that the one must continue to increase its power to meet the threatening strength of the other. As against the smaller and weaker powers, however, it is the surest guaranty of war.

But where will we end? Each additional expense in the national armament of one nation invites an additional expense on the part of the other, until the whole civilized world is groanunder the enormous burden of taxes required for their maintenance.

Let us pass these arbitration treaties. Let us secure like treaties with all the nations, and we shall immediately see an ever-diminishing war budget and an ever-corresponding increase of the world's prosperity and happiness.

Mr. President, I feel that we do not fully recognize or appreciate the far-reaching influence of the confirmation of these treaties. I feel confident that as soon as these treaties with Great Britain and France are confirmed by the Senate the cause of arbitration as a settlement of all arbitrable differences will receive such an impetus that we shall be able to make like treaties with Germany, Austria, Italy, and every civilized country in the world.

Mr. President, here is another most important matter which we must not overlook, a matter that is far more important than the mere settlement of arbitrable questions. Whenever the great nations of the world agree to submit all differences which are justiciable or arbitrable in their nature to an international tribunal, it will force that tribunal and the parties who submit their differences to its adjudication to determine the line of demarcation between the vital, inherent, God-given, and sacred rights of each nation, great and small, and to recognize those rights. And when we have advanced civilization to such a degree that the great nations of the world will sign similar compacts wherein they recognize certain sacred rights of other weaker nations as nonassailable, we have done for the peace of the world a hundred times more than is secured by the mere submission of minor differences to arbitration.

With a treaty of this character, signed by all the great countries of the world, the war with Tripoli would never have been heard of. With a treaty of this kind, signed by all the great nations of the world, including Russia, the cries of Persia for justice and mercy would not now be ringing throughout the

There is nothing so powerful to-day as aroused public opinion. It makes wars and it stops wars. There is something in a written contract, though it binds countries to nothing more than that which honor should bind them, the breach of which by any nation would bring down upon it the condemnation of every other nation.

There are few countries in the world to-day which can wage a great war without borrowing from other countries. time is coming, and ought to come, when no great nation of the world shall be able to borrow money from other civilized na-tions for the purpose of carrying on an unjust war. It was due to a great world sympathy for Japan in her struggle for the maintenance of her national life that enabled her to carry on that war against a country with a population and resources five times greater than her own and with a territory 500 times greater. Flushed with victory, her inclination was to demand an indemnity, but when she had gained all she had demanded as her inherent right for her self-preservation, public opinion would not sustain her in a war continued for the purpose of securing money indemnity. And it was that public opinion that brought about peace between the contending nations.

I wish, Mr. President, that it were within my power to impress the Senate with my own conviction of the duty which we owe to the world, to humanity, to all future generations, to consummate this first great act of world statesmanship—to lay this corner stone in the temple of universal law and justice. I have little patience with those who pronounce as a fanciful dream the prophecy of the dawn of a day when nations shall be gov-erned in their relations with each other by the same code of morals which every State exacts of its own people in their interrelations. The sentiment of the people of the civilized world is to-day against all international injustice. But so long as there is no power other than the unrestrained will of a greedy government to restrain it from unjust acts, so long will the stronger of such governments rob and plunder the weaker.

In the slow evolution of the human race there came a time when the consensus of all the people declared that the individual should no longer be arbitrator of his differences with his neighbor; that justice and right should no longer be measured according to the judgment of him who could wield the biggest club. And they placed their united strength and their unbiased judgment against the distorted idea of right as entertained by the man with the bigger club.

I fancy many men in that far-off period assumed and declared that this invasion was contrary to human proclivities, and so long as human nature retained the element of greed and injustice the strong would override the weak. And undoubtedly many of those of a bellicose disposition declared that it would be hypocritical to create a court to try those differences when, as a matter of fact, the individual did not intend to allow any tribunal to govern him in what he deemed a matter of his own business.

But they did create a court, and they did obey that court, backed, as it was, by the whole power of society. And because of that restraint we have all we know of twentieth-century civilization.

Mr. President, we have to-day reached another stage in world progression, whereby we purpose to force, by the power of the world's sentiment, supplemented by the combined obligation of national compacts of every nation to abide by the same code of morals in their international relations that they in turn exact from their subjects, namely, that they rob no other nation of its honor, that they steal not its territory, that they murder not its people; and I sincerely hope that the great Government of the United States will be the first Government that shall attempt to lay the corner stone of this edifice of international justice.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to make an inquiry of him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, we are all of us in favor of peace; all of us are in favor of arbitration of proper subjects and in a proper way. I understood the Senator to say that he had not carefully examined the existing treaties which we have for arbitration.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have read all of the treaties.

Mr. BACON. I wanted to ask the Senator if he would tell us in what particular the proposed treaty will enable the arbitra-tion of questions which are properly arbitrable which the exist-ing treaties do not now provide for? I think the Senator ought to give us that information because the speech of the Senator assumes that we have not now any arbitration treaties. I contend that we now have arbitration treaties, not only the general convention of The Hague, to which all of the leading powers of the earth have given their consent, but in specific instances, as our treaty with Great Britain, for instance; and I should like, in view of the very elaborate presentation of this question which the Senator has made, and which is to go out to the country, that there should also go out to the country now a statement by the Senator of what are the particular features of the proposed treaty which will make arbitrable questions which are not now provided for in existing treaties.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is nothing, in my opinion, in the proposed treaty which makes any question arbitrable that was not so under the old treaty. Let us not misunderstand each other in that respect. I have not claimed that, but I do say that there is that in the present treaty, Article II of that treaty, which insures, first, that all matters will be investigated which might naturally tend to irritate both nations and prevent them from being able to arbitrate a question; and, secondly, that it will compel the initiatory steps to bring all arbitral matters before the Senate that the Senate may pass upon the question of whether or not they shall be submitted to arbitration. Under our treaty as it now exists I know of no way of getting a matter before the Senate in the form of a treaty. no duty that is imposed upon the Executive to bring a matter before the Senate that he of his own sweet will does not care to bring before it. Under this treaty it is made his duty to do so.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact, and I desire that he shall not yield the floor, because I desire that it shall be a part of his remarks to-day

Mr. McCUMBER. I had already yielded the floor, but I can resume it, of course.

Mr. BACON. No; I asked the Senator before he yielded the floor that he would answer me before he took his seat.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will answer the Senator.

Mr. BACON. So that we will recognize that the Senator still has the floor and I am interrupting him with his permission. I want to call the attention of the Senator, if he has not examined it carefully-and I am sure the great body of the public who have been flooding this Chamber with petitions have not examined it—to the fact that we have now most elaborate machinery for the examination of these questions by a com-If the Senator will refer to the general arbitration treaties, he will find that there is elaborate machinery provided for a commission to investigate all these matters, and in that there is this provision-

Mr. LODGE. The Senator means The Hague convention. Mr. BACON. Yes. When I said "the general arbitration Mr. BACON. Yes. When I said "the general arbitration treaties" I meant The Hague convention, because that was generally acquiesced in or joined in by all the nations. I used an improper term when I said "general arbitration treaties." I meant The Hague treaty. It is most elaborate in providing page after page as to how they shall proceed to investigate all questions of difference which may arise between two countries; and I want to call the attention of the learned Senator to what might have escaped his attention when he was in the body of his address as to the present provision as to what would be the effect of the report of a commission. This idea of a commission does not originate with this treaty by any means, for we have got a treaty now providing for one of these commissions, to which all the leading nations of the earth and a great many that are not leading ones have given their acquiescence and consent and agreement. In it there is this statement now, as to what would be the effect of the report of that commission, giving full opportunity for the examination and hearing of witnesses and everything else, and it says this:

The report of the commission

Mr. McCUMBER. From what article is the Senator reading? Mr. BACON. I am reading from page 26 of this document numbered 98 of this session of Congress, and I am reading from The Hague treaty, Article XXXV.

The report of the commission-

That is, the commission of inquiry to investigate all these matters-

ARTICLE XXXV.

The report of the commission is limited to a statement of facts, and has in no way the character of an award.

I am sure the Senator will recognize the similarity of that language to the language used in the proposed treaty. language in the proposed treaty is evidently taken from that. While there is a difference of verbiage, it means that, and nothing else. But it goes on to say:

It leaves to the parties entire freedom as to the effect to be given to the statement.

The proposed treaty, using practically the same language, goes on to say this as to what the commission shall do—

Mr. OVERMAN. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. BACON. From page 39, Article III, of the proposed The second clause of Article III of the proposed treaty . treaty. is in this language:

The reports of the commission shall not be regarded as decisions of the questions or matters so submitted either on the facts or on the law and shall in no way have the character of an arbitral award.

That is practically the same language as the language which I have read from the existing Hague treaty, which is different in words. The Hague treaty says, using language substantially

It leaves to the parties entire freedom as to the effect to be given to the statement.

The proposed treaty says:

It is further agreed, however, that in cases in which the parties disagree as to whether or not a difference is subject to arbitration under Article I of this treaty, that question shall be submitted to the joint high commission of inquiry; and if all or all but one of the members of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of Article I, it shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this treaty.

There is a sharp and distinct difference. In each case there is a provision for a commission; in each case there is a provision that it shall not be an award. In one case it practically says the Senate shall then determine whether or not it will ratify a treaty; in the other case it says, even though the Senate says it does not think a treaty ought to be made, it shall make it.

Mr. LODGE. In other words, if I may interrupt the Sena-

Mr. BACON. Certainly.
Mr. LODGE. Down to clause 3 of Article III the provisions of Articles II and III of this treaty now pending are taken bodily from The Hague convention.

Mr. BACON. Absolutely so.

Mr. LODGE. They are absolutely the same in substance, but not in language.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Clause 3 of Article III is wholly new. Mr. LODGE.

Mr. BACON. Exactly. Now, the question which I want to submit to the Senator from North Dakota is this: With the language of the two sections read by me, one from The Hague treaty which is now the law of this land-the treaty to which all the nations of the earth of any consequence have already agreed-what is the difference between the language of that in the last sentence of it and the last clause of Article III of the proposed treaty? How does the Senator reconcile these two with his statement, that under the proposed treaty there will be no obligation upon the Senate to make a treaty which this commission shall decide to be a proper treaty to be made in a case where the Senate should be of opinion that is not a proper treaty to make; how can the Senator reconcile that statement with the language which says that it shall be done? Why should there be the change in the language unless it was intended to change the interpretation? In one case it says that it shall not be binding on the Senate, while in the other case, using the same language up to that particular part of it, it says that it shall be done. Now, what is the meaning? Why the change unless it was intended to impose upon the Senate the obligation to make a treaty even though the Senate itself might think it ought not to be made? How does the Senator reconcile the differences in those two clauses, one in The Hague treaty and one in the proposed treaty? I would be very glad to hear the Senator in explanation of that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have already discussed at great length the proper construction to be placed upon the third paragraph of Article III. The Senator in his question almost directly states that the last paragraph does modify the first in such a way that it becomes the duty of the Senate to grant the award, though the Senate may differ with the commission. I do not give it the construction, to start with, that it becomes the duty of the Senate to grant the award. purpose of the last section:

It is further agreed, however-is not intended as a modification of the preceding paragraph, that the report of the commission shall not be regarded as a decision, otherwise it would have followed immediately rather as a proviso in the same paragraph, clearly stating that provided in such cases it should be regarded as a decision, but it is intended to modify the first provision, which is that the matter can only be submitted to arbitration when the President himself is of the opinion that it should be submitted to arbitra-Without this last clause in Article III there would be no method by which the matter could be submitted to arbitration if the President took a view contrary to what most people might take or if he was disinclined to submit it.

Answering the other proposition, let me ask the Senator a question in return, because I have not read over The Hague convention for a long time and it is a very extensive document. Is there anything in that convention that compels the Executive to act or compels him to submit a question to The Hague tribunal or to a commission under The Hague tribunal in a case in which he himself may hold that it is not a justiciable ques-

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator hold that the proposed treaty will compel the President to do so?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do. I say—
Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me—
Mr. McCUMBER. I say it is his duty to do so, because the treaty says it is his duty to do so.

Mr. BACON. Exactly. But the Senator will not wait until I complete the question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Pardon me.

Mr. BACON. The language as to what shall be done applies both to the President and to the Senate. If it is compulsory on the one, it is compulsory on the other. There is no division between the two; there is no statement that the President shall send it to the Senate; there is no statement that the Senate shall ratify the treaty. There is simply the statement that it shall be done. It takes the joint action of the Senate and the President to do it.

Mr. McCUMBER. No, Mr. President-

Mr. BACON. Therefore if it is compulsory upon the one, it is compulsory upon the other.

Mr. McCUMBER. No, Mr. President; it does not say that it shall be arbitrated. It simply says that it shall be referred to arbitration-

Mr. BACON. Exactly.
Mr. McCUMBER. If the commission so holds. Now, suppose the commission did not so hold; then the President, of course, would not refer it, would he?

Mr. BACON. I ask the Senator to answer this question.

The language is this:

It shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this treaty.

That is language imposing an obligation. I say that that language necessarily refers both to the President and to the Senate; and the Senator is illogical when he says that it compels the President to do his part toward the making of the treaty and does not compel the Senate to do its part toward making the treaty.

Mr. McCUMBER. I beg pardon; but the Senator, I am rather inclined to think, is illogical in making that contention.
The provision "If all or all but one of the members of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of Article I, it shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this treaty" does not mean that it becomes, therefore, the duty of the President or of the Senate to say that the question shall be arbitrated, but it becomes the duty of the President to formulate an agreement that it may be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of That is all. the treaty.

Mr. BACON. Just one minute. The Senator is writing a new treaty. There is nothing in this treaty to that effect.

Mr. McCUMBER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BACON. I say the Senator is rewriting the treaty. Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; I am not. Mr. BACON. Yes; the Senator is. The language is simply that "it shall be referred to arbitration." What is the way in which it can be referred to arbitration? It can be referred to arbitration only by a treaty made by the consent and the concurrence of the President and the Senate; and the Senator is illogical when he says that it imposes a compulsion on the President and does not impose any compulsion on the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is mistaken when he says that I say it compels the President to arbitrate. It compels the President to take the initiatory steps so that it may be considered by the treaty-making power. That is all I claim it sidered by the treaty-making power. That is all I claim it means, and nothing more.

Mr. BACON. I will just ask the Senator one other question before I withdraw from the discussion. Did I understand the Senator to mean, then, in his general argument that the third clause in the third article of the proposed treaty, which provides what shall be done by the joint commission and what shall thereafter be done by the treaty-making power of the United States after that joint commission has made its report—does the Senator mean that it leaves to the parties—that is, to the President and to the Senate—entire freedom as to the effect to be given that statement, and they will make a treaty or not, as they see fit, after consideration? Is that the position of the Senator?

Mr. McCUMBER. That it leaves for the Senate exactly the same powers and authority that the Senate would exercise if the President, of his own motion and without the act of the joint commission, had submitted the case to arbitration?

Mr. BACON. In other words, in the language of The Hague treaty, "it leaves to the parties entire freedom as to the effect to be given to the statement" of the commission. That is the language. I read it. I did not give my language then. I read the language of The Hague treaty. What I want to ask the Senator is this: If it was not intended that it should mean senator is this: If it was not intended that it should mean otherwise than the language which I have just read and to which the Senator has assented, why was different language used in the proposed treaty in saying that it should be done, that it should be referred to arbitration? Why is there a change of language if there was no intent to change the obligation?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is answered by the question which I asked the Senator from Georgia to show me where in The Hague treaty provision is made for the submission or the ref-erence of a case to arbitration if the President himself does not deem it an arbitral one. There is no such provision, as I remember, in The Hague agreement. This makes it the duty of the President to take the initiatory steps to make the agreement, and to submit it, even though he himself may not agree that it is justiciable, if it is so clear that five out of six men learned in international law and ethics so hold.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I think the discussion perhaps has gone on long enough with so slim an attendance as we have here. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 22, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 18, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon. The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We come to Thee, O God, our heavenly Father, at the beginning of this new congressional day with renewed faith and confidence in Thee as the dispenser of all good. Make us clear in our conceptions, firm in our convictions, strong to do the right as it is given us to see the right, that we may be worthy of Thine approbation and the approbation of our fellow men, and glory and honor and praise be Thine forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. CANDLER, for 10 days, on account of important business.

CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report and resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas presents a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 377 (H. Rept. 238).

Resolved, That Rule III of the rules of the Sixty-second Congress be, and are hereby, amended by adding a new clause, to be clause 4, to read as follows:

"He shall, in case of temperature."

read as follows:

"He shall, in case of temporary absence or disability, designate the Chief Clerk, or some other official in his office, to sign all papers that may require the official signature of the Clerk of the House, and to do all other acts, except such as are provided for by statute, that may be required under the rules and practice of the House to be done by the Clerk. Such official acts, when so done by the Chief Clerk or other official shall be under the name of the Clerk of the House. The said designation shall be in writing, and shall be laid before the House and entered on the Journal."

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentlemen from North Carolina [Mr. Pou].

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Texas if he wants the report read?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not suppose it is necessary to read the report. It is simply a favorable report.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules, and it simply legalizes, by amendment of the rules of the House, what the Chief Clerk under the Clerk of the House is doing now and always has been doing. I think no further explanation is necessary. As I understand it, it has been the custom for years past for the principal assistant to the Clerk to perform these duties, and the Committee on Rules have thought it proper to legalize what has been the custom heretofore and what is being done now.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if no gentleman on the other side desires to make any statement about the resolution, I will ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE ARMY CANTEEN.

Mr. JACKSON. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute, and to print as a part of my remarks an editorial on the subject of the Army canteen.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACKSON. I simply desire to say that, in my opinion, the article which was recently printed in the RECORD on the Army canteen reflected in a certain sense on the honor and manhood of the United States Army not to say of the citizenship of the country. I desire that the following editorial, written by Mr. Harold Chase, of the Topeka Capitol of last Sunday, who, by the way. I think is one of the ablest writers of the country, be printed in the Record as a reply to that article.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
The article referred to is as follows:

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

A STRONG DEFENSE OF THE ARMY CANTEEN LAW.

Again the restoration of the Army canteen is up before Congress, and powerful representations are made by Army officers in favor of beer and other mild intoxicants in the soldiers' canteen. The arguments have become familiar, although they have never yet convinced Congress that the soldiers get their booze outside Army lines, that grafters hang on to the Army posts and sell on the edges, that drunkenness and venereal disease are on the increase, etc.

There is considerable prejudice against this Army testimony, just as there is considerable prejudice against Army social standards. The social life of the Army is gay. There have been some gambling scandals in the posts, though less than might reasonably be expected, considering all the circumstances of the shut-in Army life in time of peace. There is drinking at the posts. Army officers like their champagne and whisky and wine. It is not surprising that they should also favor beer for the privates.

Col. Maus, chief surgeon and chief medical inspector of the Central Division of the United States Army, denies that the prohibition of intoxicants in the soldiers' canteen has resulted either in increased drunkenness or the increase in venereal disease or weakened discipline. "Fortunately," says this officer, "we are living to-day in a progressive age, where the alert business man finds there is no room or place in the busy world for the tippler or barroom habituf."

In his statement Col. Maus says that whereas the rate of admission to sick report for alcoholism was 41 per 1,000 in the 15 years from 1885 to 1900, it was but 26 per 1,000 from 1901 to 1910, as compared with that from 1885 to 1900, the alcoholic rate from 1901 would naturally have been much larger—if the antibeer policy had not intervened to reduce it.

"From personal observation," says Col. Maus, "I believe that the percentages of alcoholism and venereal diseases are greater among men in civil lif

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to print in the Record a very able editorial from the Cincinnati Enquirer on the subject of pension legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

PENSION LEGISLATION.

One of the questions which is causing most embarrassment to legislators, which may confront the President in a trying way, and which is likely, however disposed of, to cut a considerable figure in the approaching campaign, is that of pensions to the Civil War veterans. Since the passage of the dollar-a-day Sherwood bill by the House there has been a great deal of criticism not only of that measure, but of the system, and it has been constantly said that no one should receive a pension unless he is disabled or needy; in short, that a pension is a charity, the only recipients of which should be paupers. There is another side to this which it is only just should be made known, and it has been recently very temperately presented by Hon. H. C. Gooding, lately chief justice of Arizona. He says: "All the dictionaries, law and English, define war pensions as based on valuable service in the past—as having the consideration of valuable services that never were fully compensated." In this they all concur. Black's Law Dictionary says: "A stated allowance for the soldlers' valuable services to the country." Bouvier's and Anderson's Law Dictionaries have almost identical definitions. Webster says something paid or given in consideration of past services. The Standard has "An allowance on account of meritorious services." No one puts it on the basis of charity. The United States Court of Claims, in a carefully considered opinion, says: "A pension is a periodical allowance of money to a person, partly in the nature of a gratuity and partly of payment for benefits conferred; payment because it is supposed to be in consideration of previous services rendered for which the compensation before made was inadequate in proportion to the benefits received and the ability of the nation to pay. It is partly—only partly—in the nature of a gratuity, and this because it is not founded on contract and can not be demanded as a legal right until the Government has acknowledged its moral obligation and made the grant."

This places the pension on a very different basis from what it has come to assume in the minds of many through popular misrepresentation. No one will assert that the soldiers' pittance of less than 40 cents per day was any compensation for the three years he endured, let alone wounds. These men voluntarily risked their all, and they saved the life of the country. Whatever shape legislation may take, they should be fairly and generously rewarded. The Government has never confined pensions to the injured and the indigent; the pension roll has always been regarded as a roll of honor and not of mendicants. After the Revolutionary War Congress gave half pay to all officers and pensions to all soldiers for their lives. There would have been no country but for them. Besides this, Gen. Washington and other officers were voted large grants of land. Pensions and land warrants were given to all who served in the Mexican War, without restriction. They added vastly to our territory. After the Black Hawk War Abraham Lincoln, though he was never under fire, received two land warrants for his services. The soldiers of 1812,

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bill of the following title:

H. R. 14944. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Connecticut River, in the State of Connecticut, between the towns of East Haddam and Haddam.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4246. An act to authorize the sale of land within or near the town site of Midvale, Mont., for hotel purposes.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4246. An act to authorize the sale of land within or near the town site of Midvale, Mont., for hotel purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ENGOLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL. Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 15781. An act to authorize the Aransas Harbor Terminal Railway to construct a bridge across Morris and Cummings Channel.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Uinon for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 17681) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GARRETT in the chair.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose the Chair had under consideration the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky to the proviso on page 29 of the bill, and I ask to have read a memorandum furnished me by the engineer commissioner on that proviso, stating the practice of the District Commissioners and the city government under the operation of that law.

Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, Washington, January 17, 1912.

Memorandum for Mr. Burleson, in re paving between tracks, etc., of street railway companies.

At present whenever a street is to be resurfaced or repaired along which a street railway runs the street railway company is informed of the fact and asked whether it will do the work itself for the space for which under the law and its charter it is responsible, namely, the space between the tracks and rails and 2 feet exterior to the outer rails. The railway company ordinarily requests that the work for which it is responsible be done by the District contractor and the cost thereof be charged against it. The whole job of paving the roadway, including the space for which the railway company is responsible, is then done by the District contractor and a bill rendered the railway company for the portion for which it is responsible. The balance of the roadway is paid for out of the appropriation for "Repairs to streets, avenues, and alleys." Upon the presentation of the bill to the railway company, it pays the amount thereof to the collector of taxes and it is deposited in the "Miscellaneous trust-funds deposit" and the contractor paid by voucher charged to the deposit. In rare cases the railway company makes the payment of the bill directly to the contractor.

railway company makes the payment of tractor.

It is therefore generally unnecessary to use the appropriation "Repairs to streets, avenues, and alleys" to pay for the paving for which the street railways are responsible, but the provision that this appropriation shall be available when necessary is a very wise one, especially where the railway company is insolvent or not in a position to pay the bill bill.

For minor work of repairs the railway companies keep deposits on hand, and bills are rendered monthly chargeable against these deposits and not against any appropriation.

Under the last contract let for resurfacing and repairs to streets the prices paid the contractor for work done adjacent to street railway tracks and elsewhere are separated from the prices paid for work done by the District of Columbia, for the reason that it was believed the work adjacent to street railway tracks was more expensive and that the District would have to pay a higher price for this paving than for the paving of public space. When the bids were made this proved to be the case. The present practice prevents the District from paying a higher price for its own work by reason of its being averaged in with the more expensive railroad work.

W. V. Judson,

W. V. JUDSON, Engineer Commissioner.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, on Tuesday an inquiry was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Buchanan] as to what was meant by the expression in the law that asphalt pavements in Washington City "shall be of a quality equal to the best laid in the District of Columbia prior to July 1, 1886," and for the specification of the asphalt pavement that is now being laid in the District of Columbia under the existing contract.

I was unable to give him in detail an answer to his query. I now send to the Clerk's desk a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations by Col. Spencer Cosby, Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, and ask that an excerpt be read which gives this information, having secured the information from Maj. William V. Judson, Engineer Commissioner of the District. I ask the Clerk to read that part of the letter between the pencil marks. This same question arose in the consideration of the sundry civil bill, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. Fitz-GERALD] asked for the information from the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, and this letter was addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations by Col.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

I find that some time prior to 1886 this department, after having experience with many types of asphalt pavements, formulated a standard pavement which was considered the best type. Some pavements of this type were laid prior to 1886 and were considered the best class of pavements laid up to that time.

When Congress sought for a standard pavement to which to apply the limit of cost it adopted this particular type, which was considered best by the department, but instead of specifying it by definite description it was described in the ambiguous phrase still employed. The word "quality" really means type, and this limitation was intended to apply to the best type of pavement laid up to that time, namely, the 3-inch asphalt pavement on a 6-inch concrete base, and this is what this expression really means. The expression might as well be "of a quality equal to the best type of pavement laid in the District of Columbia prior to July 1, 1910," as the standard pavement adopted prior to 1886 is still the standard of work of this department.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentle-

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question. Are all of the asphalt pavements laid 3 inches thick on the surface?

Mr. BURLESON. That is the specification.

Mr. LOBECK. The specification adopted by the national association is that they shall be 2 to 2½ inches thick. I do not think you can lay a 3-inch surface for $1.68 or $1.80 with a concrete base.

Mr. BURLESON. It is being done under the contract now made by the District of Columbia.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman bring in one of those coutracts to-morrow?

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman can get it by applying to the District Engineer Commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will defer for a time a ruling upon the point of order pending when the bill was last under consideration. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The authority given the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in the act making appropriations for the expenses of the District of Columbia, approved March 2, 1907, to make such changes in the lines of the curb of Pennsylvania Avenue and its intersecting streets in connection with their resurfacing as they may consider necessary and advisable is hereby made applicable to such streets and avenues as may be improved under appropriations contained in this act: Provided, That no such change shall be made unless there shall result therefrom a decrease in the cost of the improvement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he would not deem it better to put some provision in here requiring the curb to be so located as to the planting of trees that in the future, if the pavement is to be widened, the trees will be far enough back as not to be an obstruction to the street?

Mr. BURLESON. That is the practice now being followed by the park commissioner in the planting of trees. ticular item is intended to apply to streets where the trees have already been planted and have attained considerable growth. Personally I would be glad to see the limitation apply generally, but at the other end of the Capitol there is an objection to making this of general application; but they have assented to the application of this limitation to the improvement of the streets that are provided for in the particular bill, so that consideration can be given to each particular instance where they propose to narrow the streets.

Mr. LOBECK, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

LOBECK. Under this condition could they narrow Pennsylvania Avenue?

Mr. BURLESON. There is general authorization for the narrowing of Pennsylvania Avenue already in the law.

Mr. LOBECK. From here up to the Treasury?

Mr. BURLESON. To the extent that Pennsylvania Avenue has been extended.

Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman would not be in favor of narrowing Pennsylvania Avenue between here and the Treasury?

Mr. BURLESON. The narrowing has already been done, so far as Pennsylvania Avenue is concerned, and has been done under the same provision carried in former appropriation bills.

Mr. LOBECK. I realize that it is a good thing to narrow the pavement in residence streets, because it lessens the cost of the pavement and beautifies the streets.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this is to not only save cost, but frequently by narrowing the street 1 or 2 feet a line of trees that has attained a considerable growth can be saved.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with that line of business and know that a 26 or 28 foot roadway in residence streets is preferable to wider pavements. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

For replacing and repairing sidewalks and curbs around public reservations and municipal buildings, $7,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of asking the chairman of this subcommittee a question or two, with his permission. reference to sidewalks and curbings, and as one of those who have to live in that section of the city which is not served by the Herdic Co. I want to know of the chairman of the committee under what authority, under what sort of a franchise, the Herdic Co. pretends to operate? I mean the Herdic Co. that occasionally sends an archaic vehicle through Sixteenth Street. I want to know if they have any franchise of any value, how they got it, and how long their charter is to run, under what conditions it is held, and if there is not mutual obligation, if in consideration of the granting of the franchise under which they operate they did not undertake to serve the people to some degree at least?

Mr. Chairman, I am in full sympathy Mr. BURLESON. with the purpose that is evidently in the gentleman's mind, and I will say to him that the District Commissioners have sought to bring some pressure to bear upon this Herdic Co., with a view to securing an improvement of the service. Their efforts were met with a declaration on the part of the Herdic Co. that if they were required to do those things which the District Commissioners insisted should be done they would abandon the service entirely

Mr. SLAYDEN. Do they claim they are losing money in the operation of that vehicle?

Mr. BURLESON. They claim it is not very remunerative.
Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman believe they would be operating it still, unless forced to do so, if it were not remunerative, either potentially or actually?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the statement has been made to me by the District Commissioners that they are negotiating with the Herdic Co. to see what can be done in the way of improving the service and are doing their utmost to prevail upon them to seeure new means of transportation, and they have some hope of success. They attempted or threatened to bring pressure to bear upon the Herdic Co. and were immediately met with a statement that if the requirements that they indicated to the Herdic Co. should be complled with were insisted upon, the company would abandon the service.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that I realize the difficulties in the way, and I believe that this particular committee is not charged with legislation. merely take this occasion to bring this matter to the attention of the House, because many Members are interested in having decent service in that section of the city of Washington. For some years the statement has been made here by gentlemen in charge of District legislation that negotiations were under way between the commissioners and the proprietors of this franchise and of these curious vehicles that are supposed to serve the people, but nothing has yet been done. I do not believe that the owners of that transportation line are frank and sincere in their statement that they are losing money. If they were, and were not compelled by the terms of some other charter, controlling some other property to operate, they would certainly abandon it. Business men would generally. lieve that the franchise must be either of potential or actual value to them, and their statement that they have been unable to secure proper vehicles is certainly not correct. cities of the world I have visited there are vehicles of that sort operated by storage batteries or by gasoline engines, or some other means of propelling the vehicle, that do give adequate service, and they are attractive vehicles, convenient to the public, and I sincerely hope that those gentlemen who are charged with the legislation for the District will endeavor to do something for the overburdened and much-abused public in that respect. [Applause.] The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

STREETS.

Dust prevention, sweeping, and cleaning: For dust prevention, sweeping, and cleaning streets, avenues, alleys, and suburban streets, under the immediate direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, including services and the purchase and maintenance of equipment, rent of storage rooms; maintenance and repairs of stables, purchase and maintenance of horses; purchase, maintenance, and repair of wagons, harness, and other equipment, allowance to inspectors for maintenance of horses and vehicles used in the performance of official duties, not to exceed $30 per month for each inspector, purchase, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled vehicles necessary in operation; and necessary incidental expenses, $245,000, and the commissioners shall so apportion this appropriation as to prevent a deficiency therein.

Mr. SIMS and Mr. LOBECK rose.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order simply to make an inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the last

Mr. SIMS. I move to strike out the last word. This is a lump sum and provides for what it may be expended. Now, in line 11 are included the words "purchase, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled vehicles necessary in operation." Now, there is no limit, I suppose, in this paragraph or provision upon the commissioners as to the amount of money they could expend for any item included within this paragraph. Is that true?

Mr. BURLESON. Except the appropriation itself. They are limited by the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. SIMS. In other words, they must apportion the appropriation?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Knowing these motor-propelled vehicles might be inexpensive or exceedingly expensive, it seems to me it might be wise that some limit should be placed upon the amount that may be expended in that way.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that the particular motor vehicle proposed to be purchased under this item is a three-wheeled affair intended to be used in cleaning the streets. It is called a "motor pick-up" machine and can not be used for any other than the purpose for which it is bought.

Mr. SIMS. Under this particular item could or could not the commissioners buy for themselves a $5,000 automobile-

Mr. BURLESON. Not at all.
Mr. SIMS. I do not mean that they would.
Mr. BURLESON. They have not authority to do so. If the gentleman will notice the language:

purchase, maintenance, and repair of wagons, harness, and other equipment, allowance to inspectors for maintenance of horses and vehicles used in the performance of official duties, not to exceed $30 per month for each inspector, purchase, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled vehicles necessary in operation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman a question-

Mr. SIMS. I will say I am perfectly satisfied that the gentleman himself never would agree to loose language unless he was assured that it would not be abused, and I only wanted to call his attention to the fact that here is an appropriation that might be used for a very expensive purchase instead of being economically used.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I desire to ask the gentleman if it would not be well enough to define what a motor truck is, and I ask that question for the reason that an appropriation was made at the last session of Congress for a motor truck and instead of buying a motor truck they bought what is commonly known as a touring car.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not know to what particular item the gentleman refers and under which he claims that a motor truck was authorized and a power car was bought, but I will say to him that under this item it would be impossible for them to do anything of that kind because it limits the purchase to motor-propelled vehicle necessary in operation," and I will and I will further say to the gentleman that we inquired of the engineer commissioner the character of the vehicle contemplated to be purchased under this item and ascertained that it was a threewheeled vehicle to be used for the purpose of picking up trash and refuse upon the streets.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Should it not be limited, then, to that; should not that be expressed in the bill?

Mr. BURLESON. The item in itself limits it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I should say the definition—
Mr. BURLESON. I do not want to place a limitation which will prevent them getting the kind of vehicle they want for this purpose, and I think that the language does limit it to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But I think the gentleman can find, if he goes to the trouble, that an appropriation was made in the last appropriation bill for the purchase of a motor truck, and that the officer for whom it was intended purchased a touring car.

Mr. BURLESON. In what division of the city government? Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The commissioners', I understand; but it afterwards was converted into a motor truck, and for that reason I think it best to define what a motor truck is and what one of these things is.

Mr. BURLESON. The point I make is that the language here is itself a limitation upon the character of motor vehicle that can be purchased.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I was only endeavoring to perfect the bill, and to prevent the recurrence of that which has

Mr. BURLESON. In this connection, I will also state that a motor vehicle was asked in this same item for the superintendent in charge of street cleaning, and the subcommittee, with the approval afterwards of the Committee on Appropriations, struck out the item.

Mr. LOBECK. It says here in this estimate:

Purchase and maintenance of one automobile for administrative purposes, to be immediately available, $2,000.

That is in the estimate asked for. That is the only item in the estimate on automobiles.

Mr. BURLESON. That is in the estimate.
Mr. LOBECK. That is in the estimate. Mr. LOBECK.

Mr. BURLESON. It is not in the bill.
Mr. LOBECK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Streets—Sprinkling, washing, flushing, and cleaning: For sprinkling, washing, flushing, and cleaning: For sprinkling, and cleaning alleys and suburban streets, for hand cleaning, under the immediate direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided, That whenever it shall appear to the commissioners that said latter work can not be done under their immediate direction at 19 cents or less per thousand square yards, in accordance with the specifications under which the same was last advertised for bids, it shall at once be their duty to advertise to let said work under said specifications to the lowest responsible bidder, and if the same can not be procured to be done at a price not exceeding 20 cents per thousand square yards, they may continue to do said work under their immediate direction in accordance with said specification, including services and the purchase and maintenance of equipment, rent of storage rooms, maintenance and repairs of stables, purchase and maintenance of horses, purchase, maintenance, and repair of wagons, harness, and other equipment, allowance to inspectors for maintenance of horses and vehicles used in the performance of official duties, not to exceed $30 per month for each inspector, and necessary incidental expenses: Provided, That hereafter the pay of all laborers in the street cleaning department who are now receiving less than $2 per day shall be $2 per day of eight hours, $245,000, and the commissioners shall so apportion this appropriation as to prevent a deficiency therein."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, upon that amendment I reserve a point of order.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I think that heading there reads:

Strike out lines 1 to 18.

I intended to have it read:

From line 1 to line 15.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

There was no objection.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, in the first line I changed the words "dust prevention" to "sprinkling." The best preventive for dust in this world, in my opinion, is water. I find by reading the estimate by the commissioners that no provision is made for dust prevention except by sprinkling, so I changed the words "dust prevention" to "sprinkling." They say they need $13.* 151.73. I insert the words "washing" and "flushing," because the District has already bought machinery for that purpose and have it on hand, and it can be done cheaper than by machine sweeping. Last year the District was allowed $260,000 for street cleaning, for street sweeping, and so forth, which was to pay also for $40,000 worth of equipment, leaving $220,000 for street sweeping, street cleaning, and snow removal.

I took the pains to ask some few days ago of the street commissioner, after they had installed the new system of cleaning by the District, what the cost was up to the present time. He gave me the cost per yard and the total up to the 1st of December, which includes five months of this fiscal year. I have taken the average cost per yard, which included not only cleaning but the sweeping of leaves and gathering up of the dirt in the fall, and I multiplied the yards I have put in this estimate by the commissioners by the cost per yard. In the estimate they said the hand cleaning would amount to $105,652.96, giving the number of yards. I multiplied the number of yards by the average cost given by the street commissioner, and I find it amounts to $101,600 for the year. Machine cleaning, as per the yards given in the estimate, at the cost of 16% cents per yard, instead of the figure presented-18.96-will come to $60,676.62 instead of $71,455.20. They asked for $14,472.11 for alley cleaning, and according to the cost furnished by the street commissioner it would amount to $16,375.42. On unimproved streets they estimated $15,977.41, but it will be $11,518.96 at the rate of cost per square yard. The sprinkling asked for was $13,151.73. street commissioner did not give me any figures, and so I have placed that at the same amount.

For street washing in this estimate they ask for $21,269.98, at a cost per yard, according to the yardage, of $3,928.52.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Lo-BECK] asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOBECK. For street washing the estimate is $3,321. It will come to $1,320 according to yardage and cost per yard.

They ask for $15,000 for snow removal, which has been placed at $10,000 later in another clause in the bill, so I make no estimate on that, although it cost last year not quite $8,000, and the year before about $9,400.

They ask for new equipment $7,916.51. In adding this year I have used the same figures. They asked for an automobile, $2,000. The cost up to the 1st of December averaged a little less than $18,000 a month for 12 months in the year.

I asked the street commissioner and Maj. Judson if there would be any difference during the spring months as compared with the fall months, and I received a reply in the negative. That would be a total of $216,000. But according to the figures and the prices per yard which it costs the city or the District at present, it would be $216,290.86. I have added the automobile, $2,000, for administrative purposes, which makes it $218,290.86.

Now, I have made another proviso in my amendment; I have asked that the laborers be paid $2 a day instead of $1.50. I want to state that there is not a city in the northern part of the United States, with which I am familiar, which pays any less than $2 a day to men working on the streets. In this city the District officials, I am informed, make these laboring men furnish their own uniforms and helmets, and so forth. is not a city in this country, I repeat, that pays less than men who work on the streets for eight hours a day. [Applause.]

I want to say that within this appropriation of $245,000 the commissioners can pay every man that works on the streets of this District $2 a day; they can get cleaner streets and still keep within the limit of $245,000. I want to tell you why. Men stand up and ask more compensation for men who labor. The Commissioners of this District ought never to hire a man for less than $2 a day. It is a disgrace for the city of Washington to set that kind of an example to the other cities of this country

Mr. BURLESON. As I understand it, the gentleman's contention is that the street cleaning can be done more cheaply with a machine than by hand?

Mr. LOBECK. I will come to that.
Mr. BURLESON. What is the gentleman's contention?
Mr. LOBECK. I will show you that it can be done with water more cheaply than with machines. I will show that before I get through. I asked the auditor of the District the other day for a statement of what they paid out to the street men as wages for the year. I have his letter here. Mr. Tweedale, than whom there is no better auditor in this country, gave me this statement:

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, Washington, January 5, 1912.

Hon. C. O. Lobeck, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
Sir: As a response to your oral request of this morning, asking that you be supplied with information obtained from the books of this office showing the total amount paid by the District government during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, as wages to employees in the street-cleaning department engaged in the work of sweeping, cleaning, and sprinkling streets. I have the honor to submit the following:

The total wages paid for the purpose named above during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, was $80,943.67. Of this amount the sum of $74,907.69 was paid to street sweepers, or what are termed "white wings," at the rate of compensation per day of $1.50, and the sum of $6,035.98 was paid to drivers, at the rate of $1.75 per day. The per diem rate of $1.50 for "white wings" and $1.75 for drivers were the only rates of compensation paid to this class of employees in the street-cleaning department during the fiscal year 1911.

Very respectfully,

A. Tweedale,

Auditor District of Columbia.

A. TWEEDALE, Auditor District of Columbia.

Now, I took the number of days that these men work and the amount of this work and I made a calculation, and I found that if we paid these men $2 a day the additional amount would come to $25,831.57. The total work for the streets, as per statement of the cost of yardage, would be $218,290.86, including a $2,000 automobile. The total of that amount would then be $244,122.43. And, mind you, gentlemen, the equipment is already on hand, all the horses are on hand and the machinery is on hand, and they need only a little less than $8,000 for new equipment for next year. That is not an unfair sum to ask for, because the equipment will decrease in value and new equipment will be needed.

	Estimate asked for by commis- sioners.	Amount necessary as per statement street com- missioner.
Hand patrol	$105,652.96 71,455.20 14,452.11 15,977.41 13,151.73 21,269.98 3,321.00 15,000.00 7,719.61	$101,600,00 60,676.62 16,375,42 11,518.96 13,151.73 3,928.52 1,320.00
TotalAutomobile	268,000.00 2,000.00	216,290.86 2,000.00
Total	270,000.00	218,290.86
Total as per superintendent's statement		218,290.86 25,831.57
Total		244,122.43

But under this appropriation of $245,000 these laboring men can be paid $2 a day, and I hope every man on both sides of the House will stand for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LOBECK. I ask more time.

Mr. DYER. I ask that the gentleman be given five minutes additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. LOBECK. Street washing is now being done in nearly a hundred cities of this country, and to a larger and larger extent every year, because it is cheaper in the long run. It cleans the streets better; it does more effective work. If that was done, even if they bought new machines enough to make a full equipment, I am satisfied the commissioners could save over $10,000 this year in cleaning the streets of this city. You may not think I have had any experience in this line, but I want to say that for 14 years I have been connected with a city that does a great deal of work.

By the District of Columbia appropriation act for 1911, approved May 18, 1910, Congress appropriated the sum of $10,000 "For cleaning snow and ice from streets, sidewalks, cross-walks, and gutters, including services." No authority whatever was conferred on the commissioners to purchase machinery of any description.

January 6, 1911, the following order was issued:

January 6, 1911, the following order was issued:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 6, 1911.

Ordered, That the property clerk, District of Columbia, is hereby directed to purchase one Kindling Squegee Street Washing Machine, at a cost of $1,200 f. o. b. Washington and six Hvass Sweeping Machines, No. 1A, at a total cost of $1,250, f. o. b. Washington, under the limitations of $8,000 provided for under the head of "Sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets," in the appropriation approved May 18, 1910. This equipment to be used in connection with hand-cleaning work by the street-cleaning department, District of Columbia.

Also that the property clerk, District of Columbia, is directed to purchase 10 Hvass Sweeping Machines, No. 1A, at a total cost of $2,100, f. o. b. Washington—chargeable to the appropriation for cleaning snow and ice from streets, crosswalks, etc., approved May 18, 1910. These machines to be used in connection with the prosecution of the work provided for by sald appropriation.

Official copy furnished property clerk.

By order:

By order:

WILLIAM TINDALL, Secretary.

There was no authority in law for the purchase of streetsweeping machines out of the snow and ice fund.

The 16 machines were delivered January 24, 1911, and stored in the street-cleaning department stable until July 1, 1911.

The cleaning of the streets was on a five-year contract which did not expire until June 30, 1911. There was no authority to operate these 16 sweeping machines until July 1, 1911, even if there had been authority to purchase them.
On February 3, 1911, 27 days after these 16 machines had been purchased, the commissioners urged the Senate Subcommittee on Appropriations to allow them $6,000, to be used in the purchase of these machines which they themselves had purchased nearly 30 days before. (See statements before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate, on 1912 District of Columbia appropriation bill, pp. 32 and 33.)

These 16 street-sweeping machines were purchased in a secret manner, as will appear from the following order of January 7, 1911, which the property clerk was directed to send out:

JANUARY 7, 1911.

Inclosed is a voucher made out in your favor concerning the machines in question, and if you will please sign at the place indicated by pencil (x) and forward to me marked "personal," I will see that settlement is made in due course after the machines are received. Please acknowledge receipt of this order and advise date and route of shipment if accepted.

Yours, very respectfully,

Property Clerk, District of Columbia.

The auditor of the District of Columbia passed the accounts for the illegal purchase of these 16 street-sweeping machines, because he was ordered to do so by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The entire transaction was illegal, because no competitive bids were solicited, although the organic act of June 11, 1878, section 5, requires that where the total cost of any work to be ordered by the commissioners exceeds the sum of $1,000 notice shall be given in one newspaper in Washington, and no such notice was given; neither were bids invited from other firms or from any firms engaged in the manufacture of street-sweeping machines.

I move the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the committee will understand that in the appropriation act of 1911 the plan for cleaning the streets of the city of Washington was continued, and full authorization given to the District Commissioners to clean the streets under municipal control, by the employment of day labor for that purpose. Prior to that time the streets of Washington were cleaned under contract. Of course, when this change was made it was objected to by the parties at interest, and the municipal authorities recognized the fact that it was obligatory upon them not only to clean these streets more effectively than they had ever been cleaned before, but that necessarily they must clean the streets more economically than they had ever been cleaned before, or the parties at interest would immediately raise the objection that it was a matter of no consequence how much it cost; that what they wanted was the service; that if they cleaned the streets more efficiently and satisfactorily to the people, and it cost more, the objection would be made immediately that it did not make any difference how clean the streets were, the question was one of economy. To state it again, they recognized the necessity not only to clean these streets more thoroughly and more satisfactorily than they had ever been cleaned theretofore, but that they must clean the streets more economically than ever had been done. On July 1, 1911, they took over, under authority of law, the cleaning of the streets. Immediately every obstacle that was possible was thrown in their way by those who had been ousted of the great privilege they had heretofore enjoyed under the contract of cleaning the streets. Of course it was necessary that certain appliances, certain machinery, certain tools, certain instruments should be obtained by the municipal authorities for this purpose. Under the appropriation act of 1910 they utilized $10,000 for the purpose of buying equipment for street-cleaning purposes. Under the act of 1911 they were authorized to use $40,000 for the purchase of new equipment. They did not do that; they purchased only $15,000 worth of equipment, making $25,000 in all.

During the six months just passed they have not only-and I stand here to assert the fact, and I have it by the unanimous statement made by the District Commissioners—been able to clean the streets more efficiently and more satisfactorily, but they have done it more economically, and have extended the area of streets that have heretofore been cleaned under this appropriation.

In addition thereto they have been able, month by month, having apportioned this appropriation, to effect a saving of approximately $1,000, which at the end of the year will aggregate $12,000, which they propose to use for adding to the purchase of mechanisms for a transfer of the purchase of mechanisms.

I do not say that the gentleman from Nebraska has been reached by these influences to which I refer, but undoubtedly there has been great activity on the part of the gentleman who heretofore acted in the capacity of superintendent of street cleaning, who lost his job by reason of the fact that this cleaning was taken over by the municipal authorities. The gentleman from Nebraska says that the street cleaning can be done more economically by using certain machines. I do not say that the gentleman from Nebraska was aware of the fact, so I will inform him now, that right there is the bug under the chip; right there is the impetus that has been given to this attack on the municipal authorities because they have taken over the cleaning of the streets under the authorization carried in the last year's bill.

I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read an editorial that appeared a few days ago in one of the daily papers. Mr. McCALL. Before that is done, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. I will.

Mr. McCALL. Does this street-cleaning equipment include any snow shovels or anything to clear off the sidewalks?

Mr. BURLESON. There is another appropriation provided for the removal of snow, which we will reach in a few minutes, and then I will be glad to answer any inquiry the gentleman desires to direct to that item. I now ask the Clerk to read the

The Clerk read as follows:

ECONOMY PROGRAM FOR THE DISTRICT.

ECONOMY PROGRAM FOR THE DISTRICT.

Here is a sidelight on the economy régime that the House District and Appropriations Committees are undertaking to impose on the Capital:

James M. Wood was dismissed from the supervision of the street-cleaning business for reasons deemed ample by the District Commissioners. He proceeded to lobby with members of the District Committee and to incubate such troubles as seemed possible.

He has managed to get himself listened to in certain quarters, and the new District appropriation bill puts the street-cleaning appropriation at such a figure and on such conditions that it will be impossible for the District to maintain the present standard of efficiency or to extend the area of streets cleaned. That is a bit of "economy."

Mr. Wood at the moment appears more influential in connection with street-cleaning matters than the regularly constituted authorities of the District. Therefore some interest may attach to the following illuminating circumstances, somewhat explanatory of Mr. Wood's keen desire to be potent in that department:

On January 30, 1911, Mr. Wood wrote to the Emerson Manufacturing Co., Hoboken, N. J., makers of street-cleaning apparatus, saying that he was out of the District service, and adding:

"The Army officer now in charge of the street-cleaning department sent for me and went over the plans for new specifications, etc., and he agreed that new methods should be adopted. If you want a man right on the spot to follow this thing through Congress and with the contractors, please let me know at once, as there is no time to be wasted."

Mr. Wood was out for business. The statement about conferring wasted."

Mr. Wood was out for business. The statement about conferring with the Army officer, etc., is flatly denied by that officer.

February 6 last Mr. Wood followed this with another letter to the same firm, soliciting a retainer of $150 "to look out for your interests in this matter," and declaring that he himself "wrote the provision" to allow the city to do the street cleaning if the bids were too high. This also is flatly denied on the very highest authority.

On December 12, 1911. Mr. Wood got himself appointed a member of a special committee of the Northeast Washington Citizens' Association to wait on the House District Committee and urge the purchase of flushing machines instead of street sweepers.

On the face of this record, Mr. Wood's influence with the District Committee does not seem especially to the advantage or credit of that body or likely to benefit municipal finances greatly.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hardwick). The time of the gentle-

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HARDWICK). The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand copies of these letters written by this gentleman to the manufacturers of the street-cleaning appliances. I do not intend to put them in the Record, but I will hand them to the gentleman from Nebraska if he wishes to see them. I do not charge him with being instigated by this obstructionist to the plan which has now been authorized for the cleaning of streets, but I do say that it is manifestly unjust and unfair to the District Commissioners, before six months of the first year when this new plan was inaugurated has passed, when they assert emphatically that they are now cleaning the streets better than they were cleaned before, and also cleaning a wider area than has ever been cleaned before, and doing it more economically than it has ever been done before-I say it is manifestly unjust and unfair that a proposition should be brought forward to return to the old plan, and that machines be bought for the purpose of cleaning the streets, and that the price of labor be increased This is subject to a point of order.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman says that the cost is more Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman says that the cost is more economical now than under the old contract system. The cost under the contract system, which included $9,904 for snow removal, was only $233,184.04, and therefore the commissioners do not need $245,000, when, under the contract system, it cost $233,184.04 and which should not cost more than $225,000, as per street commissioners' report to me. Twenty thousand dollars of the money was also appropriated last year for cleaning outside streets, and additional foremen were put on, but the work was not done, I am told.

I understand that the Committee on Appropriations had cut out two of them, where they were going to make them clerks, and I am not finding any fault with that; but, together with the snow removal, you are asking for $255,000 this year and still have on hand $40,000 or more of equipment, so this appropriation is, in fact, more than made in the last appropriation.

In regard to this man Wood, District Commissioner Maj. Judson has sent me the same notice that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] read. Mr. Wood may be agent for street flushers or street washers. There is no law against that. If a man is out of business, there is nothing to prevent him from going into business. I have noticed that even Army officers when they get out of a position go into some kind of business, and they sometimes resign and go into some kind of business, and sometimes they are removed for cause; so I think they are in the same class as Mr. Wood when you talk about removal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOBECK. I do not care whether street-washing machines or street-flushing machines are purchased; it will cost $218,290, according to the figures I received from the street-cleaning office, to serve the department, Mr. Wood or no Mr. Wood; he is not material to this question; and if Congress wishes to pay these laboring men $2 a day, it can be done and keep under the appropriation of $245,000. I am more interested in these men getting $2 a day than whether the District ever purchases street-flushing or street-washing machines. I want to say to the gentleman here and to the Commissioners of this District that street flushing or washing by water is better and cheaper. The gentleman from Illinois asked me the other day if flushing did not fill up the Chicago River with dirt. I want to tell him that every washbasin, everything in the way of a sink or a bathtub, sends dirt that goes to fill up the Chicago River just as much as anything

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

Is there objection? The CHAIRMAN.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. The fact remains, however, notwithstanding what the gentleman has said, that the appropriation to clean the streets is not in excess of what it was under contract; and yet we are proceeding to the acquisition of the plant necessary to the cleaning of the streets and are widening the area that is being cleaned without any additional expense to the Government and to the District of Columbia. As far as the $2 a day labor is concerned, we have an eight-hour day in the city of Washington, and it is being strictly observed by those in charge of the street-cleaning department. I insist upon the point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr.

LOBECK] offers an amendment, which the Clerk reported. To that amendment the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burlesow] makes the point of order that it changes existing law, and is therefore out of order on an appropriation bill. The first provision is clearly a change of existing law, because it is provided by existing law that the commissioners themselves shall do this work, and there is no provision that it shall be let out at contract. The second provision is also contrary to existing law in that it establishes a minimum of pay, existing law does not carry. For that reason, the entire amendment being considered together, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Page 33, line 14, after the word "dollars," insert:

"That hereafter the pay of laborers in the street-cleaning department who are now receiving less than $2 per day of 8 hours shall receive $2 per day."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that the proposed amendment changes existing law. The Chair thinks unquestionably it makes law, but the Chair will be glad to hear from the gentleman from Nebraska on the point of order.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman inform me if there is a limitation on wages for street laborers in the law of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BURLESON. There is not; but the gentleman's amendment seeks to fix one.

Mr. LOBECK. Then no wages can be fixed?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BURLESON. Not on this bill. I will state to the gentleman that he is on a committee that has some jurisdiction over District affairs; and if he wants to legislate on this subject, he can get his committee to report a bill.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the indulgence of the Chair for not being as acute or smart on the subject of the District of Columbia law as is the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment and the gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that it changes existing law; that is to say, it makes law where none now exists. The Chair understands that there are repeated holdings to the effect that the creation of law where law does not exist is barred by the rule, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For cleaning snow and ice from streets, sidewalks, crosswalks, and gutters, in the discretion of the commissioners, including services, $10,000.

Mr. SIMS and Mr. FOWLER rose.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment— Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I desire first to offer an amendment to perfect the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of the committee desires to offer an amendment to perfect the section, then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois. The Clerk will report the amendment.

"Hereafter every street railroad company in the District of Columbia shall keep its tracks and the spaces between and for a distance of 2 feet outside thereof at all times free from snow and ice, and shall not pile or deposit the same on either side in such location and quantity as to impede or hinder traffic. And in the event of any street railroad company failing or refusing to comply with this act, the necessary work may be done by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in their discretion, the cost to be paid from the appropriation for cleaning snow and ice from streets, sidewalks, crosswalks, and gutters, and collected from said street railroad company in the manner provided for in section 5 of an act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, approved June 11, 1878, and shall be deposited to the credit of this appropriation for the fiscal year in which it is collected."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that under the law they are now required to re-move snow from their tracks and it is to their interest that they do it. When they remove this snow they pile it in front of the street crossings and obstruct the passage of persons desiring to use the street, and this is simply to require them to remove it so as not to obstruct traffic of both individuals and

Mr. MANN. What is the existing law on the subject?

Mr. BURLESON. I do not know that the law requires them to remove it from their tracks, but, of course, in the interest of the use of their own tracks they do remove it; but in accomplishing that they use a plow which piles the snow in furrows or ridges in front of sidewalks used by pedestrians and across streets used by vehicles, and this is to require them to remove it at those points. Of course, it would be perfectly impossible to require them to remove all the snow they have piled in these roads and it would be unjust to require them to do that, but the District Commissioners deem it only right and fair that they should remove the snow immediately in front of the passageway of pedestrians from sidewalk to sidewalk and where it is piled across streets so as to obstruct the passage of vehicles

Mr. MANN. Of course I have not seen the amendment, but from the reading of the amendment I thought it required the railroad companies to remove all snow.

Mr. BURLESON. That would be utterly impossible; it would take all the vehicles in Washington-

Mr. MANN. That is what it seemed to me, but that is what it seemed to me the amendment required.

Mr. BURLESON. No; if the gentleman will read it carefully he will see it was drawn with the particular purpose of not imposing an unfair burden upon the street railway com-It was drawn with the special view of avoiding the very condition which the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand the amendment is to compel the street railway companies to remove the snow from the crossings at street intersections?

That is the point.

Mr. BURLESON. The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Texas permit the Chair to call his attention to a word that appears in the amendment that evidently is misspelled?

Mr. BURLESON. Then I will ask that it be corrected. The CHAIRMAN. It reads, "shall not spoil or deposit the low." Is that intended to read "s-p-i-l-l"?

Mr. BURLESON. No; that is a technical term used by the very able Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, and he used the very word which he intended to use.

The CHAIRMAN. The attention of the Chair was called to it by the Clerk, and the Chair therefore called the gentleman's attention to it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to ask a question in reference to the gentleman's amendment which is now offered, but on the paragraph.

What spaces are cleaned by this appropriation for the removal of snow in the District of Columbia? You can state it in a

Mr. BURLESON. Intersection of streets and where there is a considerable number of persons traveling; for instance, in front of public buildings, as I understand it, but in no other places.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman, Does the District or does the Government have the cleaning of the snow from the east plaza of the Capitol here?

Mr. BURLESON. There is no provision made in regard to that, as I understand it. By the way, I will state to the gen-tleman that the suggestion has been made that, inasmuch as we are to have a great inauguration on the 4th day of March of next year, and great suffering has resulted by reason of the fact there has been no appropriation made for the cleaning of that particular area referred to by the gentleman, an appropriation should be carried in some bill authorizing the cleaning of the plaza; and inasmuch as I am going to be interested in the who are to be present on that occasion, I would like to see it done, but I do not want to see it done in this bill. I commend it to the attention of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMS. I have often seen carts hauling snow from the front of the Capitol and disposing of it somewhere, and I want to know why that is done at all.

Mr. BURLESON. That snow is not being removed by the District authorities.

Mr. SIMS. I thought if the snow was being moved from out here in the interests of the District and the people who live here, they ought to pay at least half the cost of removing it.

Mr. BURLESON. I am in thorough accord with the idea expressed by the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. In other words, snow removed from Government spaces is paid for exclusively by the Government?

Mr. BURLESON. And the District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMS. Not this snow out here? Mr. BURLESON. No; not on the Plaza.

Mr. SIMS. I mean the Plaza. The removal of snow from Government spaces used exclusively for Government purposes is paid for by the Government.

You mean the Capitol buildings and grounds? Mr. MANN. Mr. BURLESON. For removal of snow from in front of the Capitol Building is paid out of a different appropriation-not this appropriation.

Mr. SIMS. No part of it is paid by the District of Columbia.

I want the downtrodden people of the District of Columbia to know that the Government of the United States does pay all and-ice item is carried separately—$10,000.

cost for some things in which they have an almost exclusive interest. We are not as oppressive as they think we are. There are some things for which the Government pays exclusively of which the people of the District of Columbia have almost the exclusive use. I do not know why they are not asked to pay one-half of those expenses.

Mr. MANN. The act provides that the street-railway company shall remove snow from their tracks and shall not deposit it so as to hinder traffic. Of course, the gentleman knows very well that sweeping the snow off a street-car track in case of a heavy snowstorm onto the side of the street hinders and impedes traffic.

Mr. BURLESON. Not where the traffic is parallel with the road that is made.

Mr. MANN. Where the traffic is parallel with the road. Not only that, but at the time of the big snowstorm here on Lincoln's Birthday in 1899, it made the streets absolutely impassable. Everybody in town was in luck to get on the street-car track at all. They had hard work to get the snow off there.

But if the only purpose is, as the gentleman indicates-while think the language of the amendment is very different-

Mr. BURLESON. I will say that I did not prepare this amendment. It was prepared with great care by the District authorities, and I know it was prepared after I had discussed the matter with them, and I know it is their intention to remove the snow, but only at those points where it is so piled as to obstruct vehicle and passenger traffic.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, while I have great respect for the District officials, I have never ascertained that they were especially apt in drafting legislation. The District Commissioners come and go, and are much more easily changed than is the legislation. However, against my judgment, owing to the persuasiveness of the countenance of the gentleman from Texas, I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fow-LER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill, page 33, by striking out all of lines 16, 17, and 18.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not know the effect of it, but I reserve a point of order on it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is all there is of it.

Mr. BURLESON. It strikes out the appropriation?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that the paragraph which the gentleman moves to strike out has not been read.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, sir; it has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the impression of the Chair that it has been read.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; and an amendment was offered by the distinguished gentlenfan from Texas and approved by the House. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is correct. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on examining the hearings had before the committee on this point of the bill, it appears that there was no request made whatever for a separate appropriation for the removal of snow and ice.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to give him a little information on that point?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. It was carried in another item. It was eliminated from the trial bill submitted by the District officials as an estimate, but it was carried in the item for street cleaning. It was the judgment of the subcommittee that it ought to be carried in a separate item, so we separated it from that other item and carried it alone. Otherwise the whole of the appropriation for street sweeping would be available for cleaning snow and ice, and we did not propose that it should all be made available for that purpose.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is carried I will offer another amendment to enlarge the caption of the paragraph for street sweeping and cleaning to make it broad enough to include the removal of snow and ice. A year ago there was appropriated the sum of $260,000 for sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets, including the removal of snow and ice.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. The snowand-ice item was separate.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.
Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. The snew-

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I think I have made a correct statement. I am not in the habit of trying to deceive anybody, not even my wife. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the gentleman was not under the impression that he was speaking to his wife when he addressed [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I hope we can have order in this Chamber.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. FOWLER. I made an examination, Mr. Chairman, of the appropriation that was made for the purpose of cleaning, sprinkling, and caring for the streets and sidewalks of this city and for the removal of snow and ice, and I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the aggregate, as I understand it, was $260,000, notwithstanding, Mr. Chairman, the statement of my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], to whose judgment and learning I have learned to give a great deal of respect during my short stay here. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FOWLER. With pleasure, Mr. Chairman, I yield to this distinguished gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman speaking of the current appropriation or of the appropriation for the fiscal year which closed last June? Does he mean the fiscal year 1911 or the fiscal year 1912?

Mr. FOWLER. I am speaking of the last appropriation for the District of Columbia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The last appropriation for the District of Columbia is the appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912. That act carried $260,000 for the cleaning of streets and $10,000 separately for the removal of snow and ice. The appropriation act for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1911, carried $250,000 for cleaning streets and a reappropriation of $10,000 for the removal of snow and ice.

Mr. FOWLER. That is the appropriation to which I refer. All the appropriation for the year 1912, has not been expended, for the fiscal year does not end until June 30, 1912.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is for the fiscal year 1911. I simply wanted to get the facts stated accurately.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to respect the gentleman, and, I repeat, his learning has charmed me. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] requests that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, in that appropriation of $260,000 there was included the sum of $40,000 for the purpose of purchasing machinery, horses, and other useful articles in connection with the plant for sweeping and cleaning the streets.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with this $40,000 worth of equipment on hand to be used by the distinguished commissioners of this District, notwithstanding all that, certain gentlemen come in here and ask now for an appropriation of $245,000, almost equal to the sum appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, a saving of only $5,000. On behalf of my district I desire to extend to this committee my thanks for their good judgment in effecting a saving of this small sum, but I believe we can go further without endangering the service of the city and make an additional saving; and if I can help to save to the people of this country only $10 uselessly appropriated I shall be glad to carry the good news back to Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, when the committee were hearing the gentle-men who have in charge the management of this city, the question was raised as to an additional appropriation for snow and ice. I desire to read from page 122 of the hearings. distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] said:

You recommend the insertion of some new language there?

Mr. Judson, one of the commissioners of the city, replied:

Yes; and also we recommend that there be no separate appropriation hereafter for cleaning snow and ice from streets, sidewalks, crosswalks, and gutters.

Is there any other place where snow falls that ought to be removed by these people? If so, I have not been able to think I suppose that carries the whole category of cleaning snow and ice in this city, unless it is the carrying and hauling away of the snow spoken of by my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

But let us continue the reading of the hearings on this subject

Mr. Burleson. What do you say to the suggestion that there be a limitation upon the amount to be used for the removal of snow and ice?

Maj. Judson. I do not think it would serve any useful purpose, because if we had a snow which lasted so long that we would have expended, for instance, $10,000 on it, unless we kept on, our street-cleaning plant would be idle.

Here is your street-cleaning plant ready for the purpose of doing any work that may be required to be done in handling snow and ice. If there is to be an additional appropriation for this purpose, it is a contradiction of the testimony of the chief of the municipal service of this District. I can not understand why this $10,000 can not be eliminated, because when you subtract from the appropriation of $260,000 the sum that was used for the purpose of buying machinery and equipping this new plant you have the sum of $220,000 left to do the work which is proposed to be done now by this proposed appropriation of $245,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again ex-

Mr. FOWLER. I should like two minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. But let us conclude the hearings upon that subject. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] said:

In other words, since you have taken over the work of street cleaning there is no necessity for separating those items?

Mr. Judson replied:

No. sir.

And that is all the testimony which was taken by the committee, as shown by the report of the hearings.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the economy of this com-ittee. It has done well, but I appeal to it to go on and do better, and to eliminate this $10,000 of useless appropriation and save that much to the taxpayers of this country. that they will consent to that and support my amendment, which is offered on behalf of the taxpayers of the country. Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, there is so much said from time to time in the newspaper press of the District of Columbia with reference to the half-and-half relationship between the District and the General Government that I want to call attention to the fact that sometimes very great minds run together. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson], as reported in a newspaper last fall, I believe, made a statement of what he thought were wise systems of taxation to be adopted for this District. I heartily approved of one of them and did not wholly disapprove of any of them. I thought he was the first man who had ever advanced the idea therein stated, but I find in a document entitled "The District of Columbia and its Relations to the General Government," issued by the Washington Chamber of Commerce January 27, 1910, the following quotation from a speech of Senator Hoar, delivered on March 6, 1901:

a speech of Senator Hoar, delivered on March 6, 1901:

It seems to me there is just one simple principle that ought to be applied to the residents of the District of Columbia. We should ascertain the average rate of taxation in well-ordered American cities, whether it be $1$ on the thousand, or $10$ on the thousand, or $15$ on the thousand, or whatever sum, and then apply that to the personal property and real estate of every resident here. When that is done, with such exemptions as experience suggests in all like cases, the Government should pay the rest of the reasonable expenses of this District. I do not think that having one-half paid by the District and one-half paid by the Government has any scientific merit whatever. There is nothing in reason why it should be one-half rather than two-thirds or three-fourths. The Government is a great property owner here, and the credit of the city of Washington is the credit of the Nation. It is the National Capital, and it is the great national interest to have a well-ordered and beautiful, well-ornamented and arranged city here.

The complaint that the Government pays a part of the taxes seems to me to have no foundation in reason whatever. The Government ought to pay a large part of the taxes. The people here do not govern their own city; it is governed by the Government. The public property here is enormous in amount. It seems to me that that is the only fair and just way that has ever been suggested that I know of.

Let a man who comes here to dwell pay what he would pay in Providence or in Dubuque, and when he has done that, let the Government pay the rest of the bills and spend money as lavishly or as economically as it may see fit.

Now, if the people of the District of Columbia want to work

Now, if the people of the District of Columbia want to work out a plan of taxation on the principle laid down by Senator Hoar, I want to join them in bringing it about, and inasmuch as this is put forward by the chamber of commerce, representing the people of the District of Columbia, I ask them to join in a change of the sacred organic act, which they call a constitution, and let the people of the District of Columbia, who live in the best-improved city in the United States, pay such taxes as they would have to pay for like benefits anywhere else.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know it is not reasonable, I know it is not just for Congress to pass a law to open a great street or avenue 6 or 7 miles and make the people pay currently one-half of the improvement. If Congress sees fit to do so it ought to be done without compelling the people of the District of Columbia to pay one-half of it currently. This half-and-half principle is unjust and unfair and it hampers improvements. There is no escape from it. No bonds can be issued, no credit incurred by the District. We can not undertake great improvements here unless the District is able currently to pay one-half of the cost. On the other hand, that is no reason why the people of the District of Columbia should not pay reasonable and just taxes. Sometimes the Government's portion will be greater than one-half and sometimes less, but justice and equality will reign, and if it was settled along the line suggested here, which was put forth by the gentleman from Texas, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee and a member of the Committee on Appropriations, all this trouble as to the half-and-half burdens complained of will end and the logical and unjust results that follow will be -done away with.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] proposes to strike out the provision for the removal of snow and ice, and states that if that amendment is adopted he will offer an amendment to include in a paragraph, which has been passed, an amendment which would enable that work to be done under the appropriation for clean-ing the streets. Mr. Chairman, it was to avoid that very situation that the Committee on Appropriations reported the bill in the shape in which it is now before the House. Those of us who have given considerable time to the study of the best methods of appropriating money for public service resist at every opportunity attempts of officials to include in one item authorizations for the doing of many services. The best results are always obtained by segregating, as far as conveniently can be done, appropriations for various services in the

The appropriation for the fiscal year 1911 for the cleaning of streets was, as the gentleman from Illinois has pointed out, $250,000, and in addition there was a reappropriation of $10,000 of the money at that time to the credit of the department for the removal of snow and ice.

For cleaning the snow and ice, street sidewalks, and alleys there had been appropriated in 1905, $7,500; in 1906, $2,500; in 1907, $2,500; in 1908, $4,000; in 1909, $9,000; in 1910, $35,000. In 1911 there was reappropriated out of the available balance in that appropriation of $35,000, $10,000 for that fiscal year. That made for 1910, for the cleaning of streets, removal of snow and ice, an appropriation of $285,000. The estimate for that year for the cleaning of streets was $324,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. What part of the $280,000 was used for the purchase of material of various kinds?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall come to that later. For the current fiscal year the estimates were $270,000 for cleaning the streets, and $260,000 was appropriated. The estimate for cleaning the snow and ice was $10,000, and the amount appropriated was $10,000. Of the $260,000 made available for cleaning the streets, $40,000 was made immediately available, so that it could be expended in the fiscal year 1911. The intention was to provide funds out of which could be acquired the plant to enable the commissioners to do the work themselves instead of by contract.

Fifteen thousand dollars only of that sum was expended for that purpose prior to the beginning of the current fiscal year, so that there was available for the current fiscal year for this work $245,000. The work is being done at such a rate that it is believed that probably $10,000 will not be expended in the work of cleaning the streets, but will be utilized for the purpose of completing the plant required.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. The $15,000 to which the gentleman refers as being expended was expended for machinery and other of the $40,000 expended for the purchase of horses and other equipment, was it not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not my understanding. Fifteen thousand dollars was expended for the plant, including whatever machinery was necessary, horses, carts, and other materials. In addition to that, $10,000 had been previously expended out of another appropriation, making a total expenditure of $25,000 for the plant to do this work.

[The time of Mr. Fitzgerald having expired, at the request of Mr. Fowler, by unanimous consent, his time was extended for five minutes.1

It is hoped that $10,000 additional will be available out of the current appropriation to furnish further equipment and plant. My own opinion is that the appropriation of $245,000 for the work of cleaning streets for the next fiscal year could probably have been reduced without impairing the service, and yet the desire of the committee to afford sufficient funds to enable the work required to be done and to enable the District Commissioners to round out completely the plant required induced the committee to recommend the appropriation at the sum fixed. It is not deemed wise, in the opinion of the committee, to group these items.

In the city of New York, because of narrow streets and congested heavy travel, it is necessary to remove snow completely from the streets in many localities of the city. More than $1,000,000 a year is usually expended for that purpose. No such condition exists here in the District of Columbia. This has been an unusual and extraordinary winter, so far as the extreme weather is concerned. It is not necessary to utilize the street-cleaning plant, or to have the temptation held out to utilize the street-cleaning plant, in weather such as this for the purpose of removing snow from the roadways and the streets. It is believed to be best to have a specific appropriation made for the removal of snow and ice, so that Congress may know and determine from year to year the amount that will be utilized for that purpose.

Mr. FOWLER. Can the gentleman designate any additional expense that would be entailed upon the municipal authorities by virtue of cleaning the snow and the ice off the streets and sidewalks other than would be incurred in cleaning the streets of dust and other material?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe that there are perhaps a large number of men whose employment is by the day; but in addition to that, once the removal of the snow from the roadways or the streets is begun, the existing plant would be absolutely inadequate to do the work, and to employ such additional emergency assistance as would be required to have the work done in a manner that would be satisfactory to those who desire it would necessitate a very greatly increased appropriation.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman before the committee in the hearings seemed to think that it would not entail any additional

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand. Let me say this to the gentleman from Illinois. In addition to what he has read in the hearings, several members of this subcommittee have from year to year during the past six years been discussing this question with the representatives of the District government. They have, therefore, a fund of information about the matter that it is not deemed necessary to inquire regarding when witnesses are before the committee. It is a difference of opinion as to the desirability of consolidating items. The representative of nearly every department of the Government, when appearing before the Committee on Appropriations for appropearing before the Committee on Appropriations for appro-priations for services of the Government, endeavor to enlarge the scope of items in the bill. The Committee on Appropria-tions is continually endeavoring to segregate and separate items so that it may be known and easily ascertained just what the cost of every particular service is, and so that the amount appropriated for a particular service shall be definite and can not be exceeded. The more items and the more service shall be definite and can not be exceeded. The more items and the more services of various character are grouped in one item the more difficult it is for Congress to keep control over the expenditure or to determine what the expenditure for particular services should be. For these reasons the committee is always reluctant and rarely grants the request of administra-tive officials that items be consolidated. Rather the committee seeks, wherever possible, to divide items; because it is believed, and experience demonstrates, that better administrative results are thus obtained. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas reserve the point of order or desire to make the point of order?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it is subject to the point of order, and I withdraw the point of order, but I hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it. On a division (demanded by Mr. Fowler), there were-ayes 4, noes 26.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Disposal of city refuse: For the collection and disposal of garbage and dead animals; miscellaneous refuse and ashes from private residences in the city of Washington and the more densely populated suburbs; for collection and disposal of night soil in the District of Columbia; and for the payment of necessary inspection, livery of horses, and incidental expenses, $179,945.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon that section.

point of order upon that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky reserves a point of order upon the section just read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire some information in respect to the expenditure of $179,945. want to know for what the money is being expended.

Mr. BURLESON. It is fixed by contract. A contract is now in existence that will continue until the end of the fiscal year 1914, as I understand it-June 30, 1914—the beginning of the fiscal year 1915.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman how much that contract amounts to?

Mr. BURLESON. This is the amount carried in the contract, $179,945

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then why put in here, in line 23, "and for the payment of necessary inspection, livery of horses, and incidental expenses," when somebody is to do the work?

Mr. BURLESON. It is absolutely essential that the city should have inspectors to see that this man fulfills his contract, and for that purpose there are a certain number of in-spectors appointed by the municipal authorities to represent the Government and the District.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But then I asked the gentleman how much the contract called for, so that we may know the difference between the contract and the $179,945.

Mr. BURLESON. I have before me a note which says that the contract calls for $179,945. That is the amount to be paid for this service, and out of that sum the District reserves a sufficient amount to compensate the necessary inspectors to see that the contract is complied with.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is what I want to ascertain, if I possibly can, how much is reserved. Has the gentleman got that there?

Mr. COX of Ohio. The hearings show that there was paid out last year $68,400 for removing garbage, $73,150 for removing ashes, $17,000 for removing miscellaneous refuse, $16,600 for removing night soil, $2,855 for removing dead animals, and the total for the removal of this waste is approximately $178,000, and the appropriation is $179,945.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And this includes the purchase of motor vehicles. I would like to ask the Chairman another question, and that is this: I see here that $2,855 was carried for the removal of dead animals. I would like to ask the gen-tleman if it is not true that in the bids which have been made for the removal of garbage, etc., including dead animals, they were not offered $3 apiece for the dead animals?

I have no information on the subject. Mr. BURLESON. know that under this item for removal and disposal of city refuse we have a contract obligation upon the Government and the District to the extent of $179,945, and embraced in that sum is the amount necessary to compensate the inspectors employed by the District to see that the contract is observed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman I saw one of the bids for the removal of this. I have not seen that for a year, but my recollection is quite distinct that these contractors offered to take the dead horses at $3 apiece and remove them. Everybody knows that a horsehide is worth $3 on the animal, and yet we are paying them $2,855 to remove that which, according to the bids I have seen, we can get removed for nothing-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman now yield for a ques-

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly. Mr. COX of Ohio. Is not this the situation? Five years ago or 10 years ago-probably not nearly as long as 10 years agothe removal and destruction of garbage and dead animals, etc., entailed a net expense upon the part of the reduction companies?

In other words, their operation was not profitable, but in the natural evolution which has been going on in that business for a good many years it has become profitable, and out of this situation has developed the very obvious wisdom of the city now putting in its own garbage-disposal plant. And while the statement of the gentleman is doubtless true, namely, that these concerns can profitably gather up the dead animals and dispose of them for fertilizer and other purposes, a very few years ago that was not the case, and the situation he speaks of is one of natural development and not such as to cast reflection upon any public official.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The situation, Mr. Chairman, seems to me just this: As I said a moment ago, we are paying $2,850 to have dead animals removed, when people will pay $3 apiece for them and remove them without any expense to the Government

Mr. COX of Ohio. If the gentleman will submit further, in many cities in different parts of the country suits have been instituted against the municipalities for not delivering to these reduction companies all of the dead animals and all of the garbage. It is necessary to deliver to the reduction companies now all of the dead animals and all of the waste within the municipal limits of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is what I am complaining

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX of Ohio. The gentleman's complaint, then, is with reference to the contract, because if there is an abuse that grows out of the contract.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I can not do anything about it, Mr. COX of Ohio. So it is entirely beyond the province and jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that under the law the contract for the removal of garbage and refuse of the city is made for five years. This contract will expire, as I now recall, on June 30, 1914, at the beginning of the fiscal year 1915, and embraced within the terms of that contract is the provise that the city shall appoint certain inspectors whose compensation and livery service, hire of buggies, horses, and so forth, shall be paid by the contractor. The amount under the contract for which the District and General Government is obligated is $179,945, and it has been carried in the bill at that amount since 1909, the beginning of the former contract and during the term of the present con-

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. LOBECK. The amounts that have been read by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] are correct. But in the estimates there is included in this $179,945 three items, namely, purchase and maintenance of two motor-propelled vehicles, $1,440; miscellaneous expenses, $440; and telephone, $60 Then, they say

It is esimated that with two motor-propelled vehicles for inspectors, which can be purchased and maintained for the same amount as was paid for livery for inspectors' horses and buggies, this service can be performed for inspectors at a cost in succeeding years of only the maintenance and depreciation of two motor-propelled vehicles.

I do not think there is anything wrong about that. In fact, I believe that the inspectors ought to have these motor-propelled vehicles so that they can get around quickly and see that this work is done properly every day.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman is addressing his remarks to me upon that subject I wish him to clearly understand I am raising no question about it. If it is for the purpose of convincing me, the time is wasted. I was already convinced before the gentleman began to talk.

Mr. LOBECK. I am glad of it. I only wanted to show that the vehicles they mentioned there are needed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I withdraw the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky withdraws the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating and reporting to Congress at the beginning of its next session upon the cost of the most economical method of collecting and disposing of garbage and other city waste originating in the District of Columbia, including the preparation of plans and specifications, and the employment of personal services and such other incidental expenses as may be necessary, $10,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to this paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to reserve the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve a point of order myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the committee will understand that this provision carries no appropriation for the construction of an incinerating or garbage-reduction plant. It simply provides for the employment of experts to prepare plans for inaugurating the most economical method of disposing of the city garbage. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] is more familiar with matters of this kind than I am, and I ask unanimous consent that he may be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes in explanation of the reasons moving the Committee on Appropriations to embody this item in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Taylor] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the committee for any great length of time; but I have given, as have other members of the subcommittee, a considerable amount of study to the question of the proper disposal of the waste of cities. As was well stated by the chairman of the subcommittee a few minutes ago, it has been until only a very few years back a matter of great concern to the growing municipalities as to how to get rid of their waste, which includes garbage, ashes, night soil, and other forms of refuse, in a sanitary and economical way. I am somewhat interested in the subject and have the advantage over some other Members of the House in that respect by reason of the fact that there has just been completed within the past year in my the city of Columbus, Ohio-the first garbage-reduchome citytion plant that has been built under the auspices of municipal officers, a plant built by the municipality of Columbus under the direction of its municipal officers and garbage experts. operation of that plant has resulted in such a satisfactory solution of the garbage question that I feel it is no more than right that the House in committee should be advised as to what is going on in other municipalities and as to what we are not doing in the great model city of the United States—the city of Washington.

As has been stated, we have for years past been disposing of our waste here under contract with a private contractor. We have paid that company $179,000 a year on a five-year contract to take care of the garbage, night soil, miscellaneous refuse, and dead animals of the city. A few years ago—and I remember it very distinctly this was true in my own city-it used to cost any man whose horse, cow or other domestic animal died a certain amount of money to have it hauled away and disposed of, and men made their living by hauling away and burying animals in that manner. Under modern conditions, as my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] has stated, there is an absolute profit not only in the handling and disposal of dead animals, but also in the handling and disposal of garbage and other forms of waste and refuse.

In my home city, the city of Columbus, we expended $189,542.23 in the construction of a garbage-reduction plant and about $88,443.93 in the erection of a garbage-collection plant and in the purchase of the necessary wagons and teams to collect the garbage and to haul it to the collection plant, a total investment in round figures of about $295,000.

That plant has been in operation a little over a year. figures for a complete year are not as yet available, but in order to give you a fair idea of what a useless waste of money is going on in Washington as compared with other municipalities that have adopted an up-to-date method of disposing of their garbage and other wastes, it is only incumbent on me to call your attention to the fact that in Washington we are paying to a private contractor for the annual disposition of our garbage alone the sum of $68,400 and get nothing back. He takes that garbage down the river to a certain place in the district of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin], where he has located a reduction plant, and there boils it out and extracts from it the grease and other elements and ingredients that I will later describe, and he gets from it undoubtedly a very good return for the investment he has made in his plant, so that I assume—in fact, I know—he must be making a very handsome income from it. His contract expires two years from the 30th day of June next.

It will require about a year to work out the plans and figure out the best method of disposing of our city waste under the paragraph now under discussion. This paragraph does not say that it shall be a garbage-reduction plant or a garbage-incineration plant, which is another way of disposing of garbage, but it provides for an investigation of the most economical method of disposing of garbage and waste products and the reporting back to Congress of the facts obtained for its information and action; so that this item does not confine us to any particular form of garbage collection or disposal. I am confining my remarks chiefly to the necessity of a garbage-reduction plant, because my acquaintance with the proposition convinces me that the investment in an incineration plant does not give anything like a proper return, such as is given by a properly equipped and modern garbage-reduction plant.

In Columbus, Ohio, we have in the heart of the city the city stables, where the wagons and teams that haul the garbage are looked after; and next to that is a brick building to which the garbage is hauled in steel tank wagons, covered with tarpaulin in order to minimize the disagreeable odors of the contents as the wagons pass through the city. Those wagons are hauled through the city and the contents are dumped into tank cars at the collection station, and those cars when filled are then hauled about 3 miles from the collection house to the garbagedisposal plant, which is located a mile or so beyond the city limits on property owned by the city, on which property is also located the sewage-disposal plant. This is hauled there and dumped from the cars into the equivalent of an elevator, an endless chain bucket arrangement, and then goes into great tanks where it is cooked. The grease and water are extracted by pressure, and there are processes for the extraction of the grease. The balance of the product, after being cooked, is ground up and dried, and it comes out in the form of fertilizer. I asked to have some of the product sent on to me. This substance which I have in this glass jar is the product known as fertilizer. I have heard gentlemen say that these plants are a nuisance because of the nauseous odor. I will state, after having gone completely through the plant, that I defy any person living a quarter of a mile away from the plant to find any objectionable odor. There is a faint odor, like burnt sugar, which you can smell in the product, and that is noticeable in the plant; but that is the only odor, and it is by no means For that product an average of $10.15 a ton is received, and there is a demand for all that can possibly be manufactured. The grease, after final extraction, is of a dark color, and it sells for $100.60 a ton.

Mr. LOBECK. The product in the first bottle is used for a filler in the manufacture of fertilizer.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. It is sold as fertilizer. I do not know just how they use it.

Mr. LOBECK. It is used as a filler. It is not of itself a very valuable fertilizer.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. It is sold on the percentage of ammonia in it.

Mr. LOBECK. That is about 3 per cent.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. It averages a price of $10.15 a ten, and is sold altogether on the ammonia test. The grease, as I say, sells for $100.60 a ton, and there is an unlimited demand for it.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you had it analyzed to know what is in it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I have not had it analyzed, but every dollar's worth of it that is sold these companies is analyzed and paid for on the analytical test.

Mr. FOWLER. I thought if you had a chemical analysis of it you could give us a statement of what productive qualities there were left in the material.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I have not the chemical analysis. know there is an absolute demand for the product and what we used to pay to get rid of we are now selling at the rate of $10 or more a ton, so it must have some value.

Mr. SIMS. At present we are paying to get rid of it. Is that not true?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. That is what that $179,000 is for? Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. That includes everything. Mr. LOBECK. The $179,000 will still continue for gathering this garbage. That is all this $179,000 is for. That is for gathering garbage, ashes, and rubbish, and that would still continue.

Mr. SIMS. If this reduction plant is established, the Government will be relieved, at least to an extent, and get something in the way of revenue.

A certain amount of money must be Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. paid for collection. That is always a loss. There is no profit in collecting it. There is no profit in getting the raw material to any factory; but we expect to pay back a great per cent of that, if it is properly managed, as it is in my city and other cities, by the sale of the by-products manufactured by the reduction plant from this waste material.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be given 10 minutes more.

There was no objection.

established in the city of Washington or near the city of Wash-

For instance, the first half of 1911 we collected 7,066.13 tons of garbage, 94 dead horses, 9 cows, and the plant was operated 155 days. We received from this garbage 206.48 tons of grease, which was paid for in the sum of $21,413.92. We manufactured which was paid for in the sum of $21,413.92. We manufactured 1,132 tons of tankage or fertilizer, for which we received $10,338.42. We procured 62 hides of animals, for which we received $253.90, and miscellaneous, $1.50, making the total receipts $32,007.74. We had under a previous year $5,999 worth of grease and tankage, totaling $38,007.14, from which was deducted certain items, making the total receipts $29,615.62.

Now, as to the expenditures: The supervision and pay roils was $9,724.03; coal, $2,349.75; electric power, $843.90; repair and renewals, $849.24; supplies, $548.13; office expense, $185.78; miscellaneous, $191.84. And then there were some unpaid bills July 1, 1911, amounting to $839.52, making a total of $15,532.19, from which we deduct the total receipts, and you will find that we made a profit in that six months, over and above the amount it cost us to dispose of the garbage, of $14,608.43. Taking it for granted that the next six months will be as profitable, there will be a profit of over $29,000 a year.

Now, it costs us about $40,000 to collect the garbage and about $40,000 to dispose of it. These figures will show that for every ton of garbage collected we had a net revenue of $4.19. The net cost per ton for disposal of the garbage was $2.12, leaving a profit of $2.07 a ton.

The plant has a capacity for disposing of 160 tons of garbage in 24 hours. In disposing of the 45.59 tons per day the majority of the work was done during one 8-hour shift. During the second shift only such was done as required more than eight hours. If the tonnage of garbage was sufficient to operate the plant at full capacity the cost per ton would be decreased. as the same number of men are required to operate the ma-chinery irrespective of the tonnage to be disposed of.

The total amount of tankage produced during the six months was 1,188 tons. Each carload was analyzed for determining the fertilizing element on which the price per ton is based, also for the percentage of grease left in the material. From analyfor the percentage of grease left in the material. From analysis the percentage of grease left in the tankage was approximately 10 per cent. If the percolating plant which is now under construction had been in operation a recovery of 8 per cent of grease would have been made, which would have amounted to 95 tons, valued at $9,500. The operation of the percolating plant would have required an additional expense of $2,000, leaving a net revenue of $7,500. The total cost for the collection of garbage for the first six months of 1911 amounted to $17,794.99, so that with the percolating plant in operation the receipts from garbage for the six months would have been $4,313.44 over and above the cost of collection and disposal, or a net profit of about $9,000 per year to the people.

Now, the garbage of the city of Washington is richer in the percentage of grease than any other city in the United States. It is richer than in New York. I get this from an expert, for I know nothing about it myself. It is richer for this reason: There are more hotels, more apartment houses, and less of the tenement element, which in the great cities is so poor that they eat mighty close down to the garbage. That is a strong statement, but a fact. But let us say that the percentage would be at least fully as rich and more in quantity, and it is a proven fact that the more garbage a city can get, the more profit. My city is a city of nearly 200,000 inhabitants, while Cleveland is a city of over 500,000 inhabitants. Cleveland did not build its own plant. It was built by a private company and the city bought it. It was not a municipal plant where the odors were taken care of. In Columbus the orders are carried into a steam well and wafted out through the stack, and there is practically no odor except in the collection of the garbage where it is first dumped into the tank cars.

In Cleveland they are running their plant, as I understand it, at a cost of less than $7,000 a year to collect and dispose of their garbage, and will soon be working at a profit, because they are modernizing the old plant they have there. they had a profit over the cost of disposal of $42,838, and I wish gentlemen would mark this and see the rapid increase. In 1908 they had a profit over the cost of disposal of $57,489. In 1909 they had a profit over the cost of disposal of $71,254. See how they are eating into their collection cost. In 1910 they had a profit over the cost of disposal of $104,064, almost equal to the amount of the collection and disposal, and that because of having put in modern, up-to-date machinery and of having greatly facilitated the profitable working of their plant.

Mr. Chairman, I have gone into these details, although they do not deal with the point of order, simply because I think they the Committee on the District of Columbia very properly called attention to the fact that we were paying under this contract, which has yet two years to run, cash out of pocket for taking care of dead animals, as one small item of this bill, something over $2,000, or about $2,500. Let me give you a little bit of experience. In my city a few years ago we had to pay $3 to have an animal hauled away. Then some one started a private garbage plant in the country near the city, and they got to the point where they would charge you only a dollar to haul away your horse or your cow, and finally the city garbage plant got to working and the private contractor struck out any charge and commenced to advertise that they would take away for nothing your dead animals, and now the city, although refusing to pay anything for it, have a dead-animal ambulance, for want of a better term, and they hurry to the spot where there is a dead animal as fast as they can, and have put the private manufacturers who make soap and other articles on the defensive, to the extent that they are paying two or three dollars for every dead horse that they can get.

The city does not pay anything, but it makes a very great effort to get every dead horse it can, because the expert tells me that every horse they dump into this garbage plant means a clean profit on the investment of hauling the carcass of $7 to $8 net.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended for one minute.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be so extended that he may be permitted to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the very complaint made by the District chairman is a very just one, and that is the reason why not only myself but every other Member of this House who has made this investigation is heartily in favor of doing in Washington what other cities are doing, not as a mere experiment, because the experimental stage of this matter has long since passed, but that we may build a modern, sanitary, up-to-date garbage-disposal plant, and get back some of this enormous outlay of $179,000 a year in the manufacture of byproducts of grease and fertilizer.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not also a fact that unless an effort is made in time, in order to have this matter investigated and an appropriation made and the plant erected by the time the contract expires, there will be another five-year contract that will be upon us?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Of necessity; and that is the only reason we are putting it in now. Get the plans up and be ready to build and have it completed by the time the existing contract expires.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman whether the location of this garbage plant has ever been considered by the committee?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Not by the committee. It has been talked of. I have heard people say that it ought to be built at Occoquan, and I would say to the gentleman frankly that that is where I want it to be placed.

Mr. CARLIN. And I will say to the gentleman frankly that that is where I do not want it placed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I understand that, and the gentle-man so stated before the committee, but his argument did not convince me.

Mr. CARLIN. I see that it did not, but the gentleman has provided here for plans and specifications for a garbage plant. How can that be done until you have first determined upon a site for the plant?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. It could be done. The plans of a garbage-reduction or garbage-incineration plant is purely a mechanical proposition. There undoubtedly would be an additional necessity for further plans for wharves or railroad trackage or terminal facilities, dependent upon the location of the plant. It is not necessary in any sense to locate a site before the general plan or engineering scheme of garbage disposal be worked out.

Mr. CARLIN. Is not the expense of preparing the plans and estimates largely determined by the location that you desire?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I think not. I will say frankly to the gentleman I am not making this fight in order that the plant is to go to Occoquan. I do not know whether it is the best place, although it is my present judgment it is, because we will be of interest. Only a few moments ago the chairman of get cheap common labor and we have other facilities in a most isolated place, even if it is in the gentleman's district, and it will not offend anybody's sense of smell, no matter how sensitive the person may be, because it will be built along the lines of modern plants and could be built in the heart of a city as well as anywhere else, except that it would not be economical on account of the value of city property, and the fact that cheap prison labor would not be available.

Mr. CARLIN. I understand the gentleman to contend that it is not an undesirable plant which is proposed to be constructed?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Nothing like the present one in the gentleman's district, which is a noisome place, according to the gentleman's testimony.

Mr. CARLIN. I want the gentleman to answer this: If it is an undesirable thing, we do not want it in Virginia, and if it is a desirable thing, then the people of the District of Columbia ought not to be deprived or its benefit and it ought to be located in the District of Columbia. I will ask the gentleman if he will consent to this amendment:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended until a site upon which to construct a garbage plant has first been selected in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I will not consent to that, and I will tell you why.

Mr. CARLIN. Anywhere in the District of Columbia?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The gentleman from Virginia is unquestionably heartily in accord with the program of economy adopted by the majority side of this House and heartily indorsed in by the minority, including myself. Now, the reason I suggest Occoquan as the place that could be utilized is that the Government of the United States has title to 1,500 acres of land, useless land except for certain purposes, on Occoquan Creek. There we have built a workhouse where some 500 or 600 negro and white workhouse prisoners are confined. ployment must be found for these men.

We have built a brick plant there without complaint on the part of the gentleman from Virginia, because he knows there are numbers of brick plants being built at other places along the entire shore line of the Potomac. We have started a stone quarry there and we are running a farm and a truck garden there. We are running a sawmill there and building structures in which the prisoners are kept, and I, for one, believe it to be one of the greatest model prison-reform institutions in the country and I want to see as many proper municipal functions performed by these men on the site of 1,500 acres of land as can be performed, for two reasons: First, the place is as much isolated as any place can be where garbage disposal or incineration can be carried on. In the second place, there is nothing to hurt or offend the people of the gentleman's district, because within 3 miles of Occoquan is the plant of this private con-tractor who hauls $60,000 or $80,000 worth of garbage down to his plant there in a year and which the gentleman from Virginia stated was so offensive to the vicinity that it has ruined property within a circle of 5 miles surrounding the plant, so if we do away with the private plant we will redeem an area of more than 5 miles in circumference by establishing this plant which would not be offensive to the smell if we erect a modern, sanitary, clean, up-to-date garbage-disposal plant.

Mr. CARLIN. What is the gentleman's objection to constructing this plant in the District of Columbia?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Simply because the labor, the common labor we propose to use along the line of economy, is located right at Occoquan.

Mr. CARLIN. So it is the gentleman's purpose to locate this plant at Occoquan?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Not my purpose or the purpose of Congress at this time. I stated in the beginning that I favored Occoquan for the reasons I have given, but I am only one voice in this House of 391 Members.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman has stated to the House there was a private plant-

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The gentleman stated it; I am taking his word.

Mr. CARLIN. Will the gentleman state to the House the difference in the responsibility of a private plant to answer in damages to citizens and that of this public plant to answer to the citizens?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I am glad you mentioned that, and I will take that up right here, and I will refer the gentleman to his own remarks. The gentleman bore down heavily before the committee that if we took this plant over the Government was not responsible in damages if we injured any private rights. He said the private contractor with the noisome plant was answerable in damages. With that proposition I agree, if damage has been done to individual rights or property rights.

And when he was asked, after a strong argument along that line, if in the 10 years, at least, that the plant had been in operation near Occoquan, if the private owner had as yet been compelled to respond in damages because of this noisome odor and pollution, he said, "Not to his knowledge."

Mr. CARLIN. I had not the knowledge then, but I have it

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. You did not have it then. I claim that if it was running as a commercial institution, with no regard or restriction as to offensive odor or smell, but simply to make money, it would be more liable to damage private property and rights than the plant that was built primarily as a sanitary measure, with incidental profit, such as would be erected and operated by a municipality.

Mr. CARLIN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this fact, that if your ideas are carried out you will have to have a receiving plant in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CARIAN. And you will have to have a system of transportation, to consist either of barges or of sealed railway

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Tank cars. The cars are not scaled. Mr. CARLIN. All of which will be an expense far in excess of the little labor cost that you would save by locating the plant at Occoquan.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. As to transportation, it does not make much difference whether a car goes 1 mile or 30 miles. We haul at Columbus 3½ miles, and they charge $7.50 a car, and we run about two cars a day. You could put it in barges here nine months in the year and haul it down for infinitely less cost, and it will be handled by cheaper labor.

Mr. CARLIN. And you would have an effluvia from one end of the river to the other while the hauling was being done.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. If that is so, you have found a condition which does not anywhere else exist.

Mr. CARLIN. Do you not mean to say it would be in open barges?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. You would have to build your barges as garbage barges.

Mr. CARLIN. Have you ever seen a garbage barge?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. No; I have not. Do you pretend to say that one can not be built?

Mr. CARLIN. I pretend to say a sanitary barge can not be

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. If the gentleman thinks so, I think he is mistaken.

Mr. CARLIN. I think we can build an air-tight barge, but not an odor-tight barge.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I do not know that we are going to use barges. I am not making these plans. The gentleman says the garbage will have to be taken care of in the District. collection of garbage in the plant in the city of Columbus is in that part of the town down near the stables. That is the most odorous feature in the situation, and they have to dump the garbage into these tank cars, and there is more or less of a smell of garbage after each dump.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I will.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to inquire the amount your city expended on an investigation originally preparatory to building your garbage plant.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I could not give you those figures exactly. I can only give it to you in this way: Among the items of cost of the garbage plant, the collecting plant, and disposal plant—it is all one plant—and also at the same

Mr. FOWLER. I am not asking you about the cost of the building of the plant.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. You want to know what the cost of the investigation was?

Mr. FOWLER.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Making up the plans and all that?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I am reaching that as near as I can get it. I find here among the estimates an item for "engineering," which would, of course, include investigation and drawing of plans, of $16,143.

Mr. FOWLER. That engineering was necessary for the purpose of locating the site, was it not?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Oh, no. We had the site located long before we thought of the engineering.

Mr. FOWLER. What kind of engineering did the gentleman's city do?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Just the same kind of engineering as is required with every other new proposition. We had engineers to come there and draft plans and prepare specifications for special machinery and for overseeing the construction of that machinery and plant, for putting up the walls and installing that machinery and putting the plant in operation, for which we paid them a salary or fee, as the case may have been. plant was built by expert garbage engineers employed by the city, not residents of the city, but experts brought from outside to draft plans and supervise the construction of the plant, so as to make it a workable institution.

Mr. FOWLER. Did you pay them $16,000 just for the investigation?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Oh, no. We paid them that for the investigation and for overseeing the construction.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman think it would take $10,000 to ascertain whether it is feasible to build a garbage plant of that kind for the city of Washington?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Oh, I think that is very moderate. If the city of Washington can get off with $10,000 and secure good plans and have a proper piece of work mapped out, it would be economical and cheap.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the gentleman think he could furnish experienced men who could do that work for much less than $10,000?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Does the gentleman from Illinois know one man who could?

Mr. FOWLER. I do not know. I am asking the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. There are only two or three expert garbage engineers in the country. It is a special kind of work. There are very few experts in the country. I can name only one, and he supervised the work from the preparation of plans to putting the plant into successful operation. If the gentleman can name somebody else who can do the work more cheaply, well and good. In any event, not more than $10,000 can be expended under this item.

Mr. FOWLER. I was asking the gentleman the question on account of his superior knowledge of the subject.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the gentleman whether it necessarily means that the whole $10,000 is to be expended?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. No; that is the maximum amount. Ten thousand dollars is provided in this item, to be expended if it is necessary to expend it. We might have to expend all of it, or, perhaps, we might have to expend only half of it.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the gentleman think that expert work of that character can be done for less than $10,000?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I do not know, but I do not think so.

I do not set myself up as an expert in those matters.

Mr. FOWLER. I see no engineering work involved in connection with that proposition at the present time. But the engineering might come after the site for the plant was located and preparations made for the building of it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The gentleman's idea would be to build the plant first and then work out the engineering problems connected with it afterwards, would it? Mr. FOWLER. You can not do any engineering until you get the site. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. But you can make your plans; and does not that in itself require engineering skill?

Mr. FOWLER. You can draw plans, that is true, just as you can employ an architect to draw a plan of a house.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. An architect can not plan the machinery required for a garbage plant.

Mr. FOWLER. But a mechanic can.

Mr. TAYLOR of Objection

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Oh, of course; an engineer can.
Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman think that it will cost $10,000 simply to draw a few maps?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Oh, no. According to the theory of the gentleman from Illinois, it ought not to cost anything at all to plan and build a garbage plant, and I sincerely hope, if it is ever authorized, it will never be built under the gentleman's

Mr. FOWLER. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to inquire if this item of $10,000 for an investigation is a fair sample of what the garbage plant is going to cost? If so, nobody ought to be in favor of building it, whether he is a Member

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Oh, well, that is only the gentleman's point of view. I am glad to get his point of view and equally glad to disagree with it.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio this question: This plant can not be built without plans having first been made?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. No: certainly not.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman has concluded his remarks, I would like to address the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Car-

LIN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I consider myself as warm a friend of the District of Columbia as any Member of this body. Both by my voice and my vote I have consistently advocated every measure that tended to the improvement of this great national city, and I propose to continue to do so; because I believe that every citizen of this great country should and does feel a proper pride in this beautiful city. But when gentlemen who live at great distances from Washington undertake to make the State or any part of it that I represent in this body the dumping ground for all the filth of the District of Columbia, they can only do it over my protest, and they must do it consistently with the rules of this House.

It is only a few short months since the Committee on the District of Columbia-which it seems to me spends more time in trying to write into appropriation bills matters that have no place there than they do in investigating matters of great con-cern to the people of this District—undertook to place another prison under the shadow of Mount Vernon in the State which I in part represent, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TALOR] and his associates insisted in the presence of this body and of the American people that it was a splendid thing, and that it ought to be put there. Now, we are told that this nauseating garbage plant, the effluvia of which he thinks would be a delight to everybody passing up and down the Potomac River, ought to be placed in the State of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, if this is a bad thing, we do not want it; and if it is a good thing, for God's sake do not deprive the people of the District of Columbia of its beneficial results. You start with this garbage proposition at the foot of Seventh Street, and transport these thousands of tons of garbage all the way down the Potomac to Occoquan, and there the garbage stays, sending its effluvia throughout that whole section of country before it is put into this delightful deodorizing plant, like the one which seems to have been erected near Columbus, Ohio.

The people of this Nation, as they travel down the beautiful Potomac to Mount Vernon and other spots of interest, are to be asked to enjoy the effluvia, in order that the people of the District of Columbia may have the benefit of a few dollars' worth of convict labor.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield just for a question?

Mr. CARLIN. Certainly.

Mr. CARLIN. Certainly.

The garbage plant that is now discovered down the Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The garbage plant that is now disposing of the garbage of Washington is located down the Potomac. How does the contractor get that garbage down there? Does he not haul it down the Potomac?

Mr. CARLIN. It should have been the gentleman's duty as a member of this committee to investigate that fact and tell this committee and not expect me to do it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Why can not the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. CARLIN. I will tell you. He hauls it down on the railroad in these so-called air-tight contrivances, which are air tight but not odor tight, and can not be made so, and that is the most offensive spot within a thousand miles of the District of Columbia; but the people who live in that section are requiring that private corporation to respond in damages for maintaining a nuisance, and they have a right by injunction to stop it whenever they can not be compensated in damages.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. CARLIN. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLIN. What is going to happen when we do this? We have down there now at Occoquan this prison camp. I want to say, to the credit of the District Commissioners and of the management of that institution, that I believe it is managed as well as any institution of its kind in this entire country, considering the fact that it has only existed a short time. In my judgment it bids fair to effect an economy for the District. I believe we have to-day in the District of Columbia three men as conscientious in the discharge of their duty as have ever occupied the position of District Commissioner. two of them are Army officers, one a general and the other a major, and to that extent we are under military government, but the people are well satisfied with them. They are accomplishing many reforms and are urging many more. But if they undertake to relieve the District of Columbia from these terrific odors by removing them to Virginia, it will never be done with my consent. And in order to bring this debate to a conclusion, I am going to make the point of order. I will not reserve any thing, because you will not consent to anything. I offered an amendment providing that you could have your garbage plant and your $10,000. You could take $20,000 or take $50,000 and I would be heartily in accord with that proposition.

But I ask you to say that this plant when erected shall be erected in the District of Columbia, and you will not consent to Then, in the discharge of my duty, in order that the public time may not be consumed here in useless argument, as it is day after day in discussing matters which we know are subject to a point of order, I make the point of order against this paragraph.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will not the gentleman withhold it?

Mr. CARLIN. I will withhold it for the present.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, there is scarcely anything that can be said that has not already been stated which is intrinsic to this discussion. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR has made a very exhaustive and very illuminating statement. I want to submit, however, this one observation. When this matter was before the subcommittee we had extensive and exhaustive hearings. The same situation prevailed there that prevails here to-day in this respect, that no person has had the temerity to rise in his place and say that in the natural evolution of this operation the wisdom of a municipal garbage plant is not suggested. There was not a scrap of evidence submitted which did not tend to show that the waste and garbage generally in the city of Washington could be dis-posed of in a more sanitary way, and that an economy could not only be effected but that a source of revenue would be established. I hope that the facts as they are presented here to-day will soak in on the membership of this House and impress upon the members of the District committee the importance of reporting out into this House legislation which the best interests of the public now demand.

We find that there is raised but one objection, and that comes from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin]. I have listened to his very patriotic appeal in behalf of Washington. We admit with him that so long as the public moneys are expended to build wide avenues, monumental buildings, construct splendid parks and beautiful highways that he will yield to no man in the support that he gives to these projects. He is willing that the State of Virginia shall continue to be resurrected from a State of swamps and wilderness by the aid of proximity to this splendid Capital of the Nation; he is willing to participate in all the benefits which accrue, but just as soon as the slightest suggestion comes of some situation which might not be entirely to the benefit of his part of the country, then he raises his protest. In short, Virginia is willing to receive all of the benefits without sharing any of the disadvantages, real or imaginary, from contact with this great city.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want any Member of Congress to think that I am opposed to this part of this bill in so far as it seeks information upon this subject. I am in sympathy with legislation seeking the best methods of handling the garbage of this great city. I am in hearty accord with any improvement that might be made or any advanced methods that may be instituted, but for the work that is proposed by this paragraph, I think $10,000 is entirely too much, and for that reason I reserved the point of order and I now desire to press it, because it is new legislation, which is prohibited by Rule XXI.

Mr. BURLESON. Will not the gentleman reserve it for a

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Beall of Texas). A point of order is pending against the paragraph, made by the gentleman from

Mr. CARLIN. I reserved the point of order, Mr. Chairman, Mr. FOWLER. I will reserve the point of order for a moment.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words to place the situation before the committee. At this time the refuse of this city is being removed at a cost of $180,000, in round It is being done under contract. The contract will expire in about two and one-half to three years. The District and the Government are confronted with the necessity of either leaving the District in the grasp of one contractor or of taking some steps at this time to meet this situation. During the period of the contract that now exists, as a safe business man, the contractor must amortize the entire cost of his plant, and it is an expensive plant, and notwithstanding that fact, he is anxious for a renewal of his contract. In the light of the statements made by the distinguished gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR and Mr.

Cox], I believe that every man here is convinced that not only can this garbage and refuse be removed at a less cost, but that if we proceed at this time to take the proper step it can be removed without cost to the District and can be made an actual profit. Let the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] take the responsibility if he desires to do so.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman certainly understands that I am in thorough accord with the idea of constructing a garbage plant. I am willing to meet that situation. The gentleman says that it is important and imperative. I challenge the gentleman to accept an amendment requiring this plant to be constructed in the District of Columbia, and then I shall withdraw the point of order and the plant may be constructed.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations desires this plant to be constructed at a point that will be most economical for the Government and the District. The question thoroughly presents itself. Let the gentleman from Virginia take the responsibility. The question is whether we shall continue to expend $180,000 year by year, and probably a larger amount at the expiration of this contract, or shall we now take steps that will relieve the General Government and the District of this burden and probably make the discharge of this function a profit rather than a burden. If we wait another year, it will be utterly impossible for us to take any action to protect us against the grasp of this monopoly, because that is what it means, because it takes the full length of the time between now and the period of the expiration of this contract to make provision for this plant. We had some expert advice on this subject. We have an able engineer officer, and he tells us that it is his deliberate judgment that we can effect a saving to the General Government and the District of approximately $180,000 a year by taking this step. If the gentleman from Virginia wants to interpose a point of order and entail the continuance of this burden upon the Government and the District, let the responsibility rest upon him and nowhere else.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, 35 years ago I was in the employ of the State of Massachusetts when that State spent many thousands of dollars to determine what disposition should be made of the small amount of sewage, et cetera, connected with the State Insane Asylum, located at Danvers, Mass., and I may say, for the information of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler], that the sum of $10,000 to determine the character of the plant that should be erected to dispose of the sew-age and waste of this city would seem to an engineer as a very small sum. As was well stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Taxlor], it may cost less than that, but the expenditure of a few thousand dollars to employ engineers who are thoroughly posted on such subjects may mean the saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars, not in the erection, but in the operation and economies connected with the operation of the

One word with reference to the objections of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin]. It seems to me from the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Taylor] that the operation of the plant in connection with his city does not develop anything which would be offensive to any person within a quarter of a mile should be conclusive.

Mr. CARLIN. Then, why not put it in the District of Co-

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I would be glad to answer that question.

Mr. BOWMAN. Just one moment. I think I understand the situation fully.
The CHAIRMAN.

The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BOWMAN. I ask unanimous consent to be recognized for five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania for five minutes.

Mr. BOWMAN. I would call attention to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] that no effluvium is noticed within a quarter of a mile, and that which is thrown off is of the character of burnt sugar. I also refer the gentleman from Virginia to an examination of the product itself. which is proof of the gentleman's statement, and to the further fact which has been brought out by this discussion that in the District when the material is now disposed of an odor is produced sufficiently offensive to cause an action for damages to be brought within a very recent period of time. It does seem, in view of these facts, that the State of Massachusetts having 35 years ago spent many thousands of dollars to determine the advisability of taking care of the small amount of material referred to, that the city of Washington, upon the conduct of whose affairs especially, with regard to its sanitary improvement, depends the health not only of the inhabitants, but the Members of Congress and their families, should not be backward in this respect. I have had a very serious experience this fall in the city of Washington in connection with the health of my own family. My youngest son has been afflicted with typhoid fever since he came to this city. One month after he came here he was taken with the disease, and for nine weeks he lay in his bed, and I say this advisedly, his illness was wholly due to the fact that not sufficient inspectors had been appointed to determine the character of the milk supply of this city.

I understand there are only not to exceed seven inspectors to examine over 1,100 dairies extending from Niagara Falls to Charlotte, N. C. A city of this size and character should no longer be satisfied with its ancient method of disposal of sewage, and for the gentleman to object, when the method of disposal suggested will do away with the old one, which has caused so much trouble and distress, and when it is admitted that some more modern method would wholly do away with much of the expense of its disposal and be beneficial to the health of the city, his action is certainly beyond comprehension.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I will take but a minute. distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. Burleson] mistakes lung power for argument. With great vehemence he says that I must take the responsibility for not permitting the construction of this delightful, deodorizing plant. Now, what are the real facts? I am for the construction of this plant, but the gentleman, with his usual desire to have his own way, will suffer the defeat of this great economy rather than consent to put the plant in the District of Columbia. I appeal to you, sir, in the name of economy-I appeal to you as one of the recent economists-that if you want to make this saving with the garbage plant accept the amendment and allow it to be constructed here in the District of Columbia among the people, who, if it is a good thing, ought to enjoy its benefits, and if it is a bad thing ought to suffer its inconveniences. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Taylor] says that the people in Virginia are willing to accept the benefits of a great city like this, but to bear none of its burdens. A splendid remark from so young a patriot. [Laughter.] I would hardly have expected so much patriotism from one so young. You would gather that the State of Ohio would suffer any burden for the benefit of the people of the District of Columbia, and yet he, Mr. Chairman, is one of the committee who asks that human flesh and human blood in the District of Columbia be employed at a price upon which it can not subsist. He asked that female school-teachers in this town, women who have given their whole lives to the education of the youth of this community, have their pay reduced from 15 to 25 per cent. And so he has shown his patriotic love for the people of the District of Columbia throughout this entire bill. He reports a bill of some $2,000.000 less, I believe, than has ever been reported from the Appropriations Committee for the District of Columbia, and then talks about his great love and his willingness to bear great burdens for the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MURRAY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CARLIN. Yes.
Mr. MURRAY. I have heard it suggested here during the course of debate as one very good reason why this garbage plant ought not to be put within the District is because there has been a well-defined policy against the erection of any sort of manufacturing establishment within the confines of the District. May I ask the gentleman to address his remarks to that

Mr. CARLIN. I will do so with pleasure if the gentleman is lacking information about the tendency of the times in the District, because it has only been within the past two weeks when the chamber of commerce of this community met in open and

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. CARLIN. Just let me answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MURRAY. I asked for information. I do not think it is much for the gentleman to say I have not got it when I asked absolutely for it. Of course I did not have it or otherwise I would not have asked it. Will the gentleman give it to us?

Mr. CARLIN. I am not responsible for the gentleman's lack of comprehension; I am trying to give it to him.

Mr. MURRAY. I do not mean to charge the gentleman with that; I will take that responsibility; but when I ask for in-formation I do not want to be ridiculed for not having the information. I asked for the information because I did not have it.

Mr. CARLIN. But the gentleman interrupted me when I was about to give it to him.

Mr. MURRAY. Because the gentleman started out with great gusto about my lack of information. If I had had the information, I would not have asked for it.

Mr. CARLIN. Are you ready now for the information? Mr. MURRAY. I would like to get it, but I would not like to get my head kicked off.

Mr. MANN. You must pardon the gentleman. He did not know but that you belonged permanently on this side. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURRAY. It is good to get over here once in a while in order to get a proper perspective. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARLIN. I want to say to the gentleman, in answer to his question, that he did not realize that he was going to get the information he asked for when I was informing him that the chamber of commerce of this community in the last month has set a movement on foot to bring to this city large manufacturing plants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia

[Mr. CARLIN] has expired.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have time in which to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, heretofore it was supposed to be the policy here that manufacturing industries would be disfavored. But that does not seem to be the policy now. commercial bodies of the community are seeking manufacturing industries. Only recently, in response to that sentiment, I introduced in this House a bill which will bring coal here from Cumberland at $1.55 less a ton than we now receive it, which will make this a great manufacturing city.

Now, so much for that proposition. This garbage proposition is a local matter. The garbage is created here; it is made here; and if there are any delights which belong to it, let them be enjoyed here.

My friend from Ohio [Mr. Cox] rails a great deal as to how we desire the benefits from this great city and do not desire to bear any of its burdens. The people of Virginia are taxpayers of this Nation. We have always contributed our share through the half-and-half plan and are willing to continue to do it, whatever the amount of money may be, so long as it is honestly expended.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. CARLIN. Certainly.
Mr. COX of Ohio. I do not want to divert the gentleman from his line of thought, but as I came in the gentleman rather ridiculed the reduction which the committee of a Democratic House had made in the first big appropriation bill reported for a great many years. It is true we did make a reduction. now challenge the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] show where in the slightest degree we have impaired the public service by this reduction.

Mr. CARLIN. I will not have the slightest difficulty in making that answer. It is perfectly apparent to everybody that when you reduce labor to a cost less than that at which it can properly live, you reduce the efficiency of the service.

Mr. BURLESON. Where was that made?

Mr. CARLIN. In the longevity of the women school-teachers. Mr. BURLESON. Does the gentleman know how much of the fund appropriated last year remains unexpended?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes; I think I know. Mr. BURLESON. How much?

Something like $12,000 or $14,000. How Mr. CARLIN. much is it?

Mr. BURLESON. Over $75,000.

Mr. CARLIN. Do you reappropriate that in this bill? Mr. BURLESON. There is no necessity for reappropriating that. It is not covered back in the Treasury within two years. Mr. CARLIN. Then why the necessity of putting the paragraph in the bill that you have?

Mr. BURLESON. For the simple reason we do not propose to appropriate an amount in excess of what is needed. It leads to extravagance first and next to corruption. Surely the gentleman would not contend for an appropriation that leads to such ends?

Mr. MANN. How could it lead to extravagance on longevity pay?

Mr. BURLESON. It excites those who are in charge of it to promote from one class to another in order to secure longevity pay. Mr. MANN.

Does it influence the ladies to change their ages?

Mr. BURLESON. Not at all.
Mr. CARLIN. I know the public-school authorities in this community have reported to this committee that it would take $378,000 to pay the teachers at the same rate of pay that they are now receiving under the longevity rule. I know that your bill appropriates only $300,000 for that purpose.

Mr. BURLESON. Who made the calculation for the gentleman?

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman from Texas has the letter. Did not the superintendent of schools communicate with the gentleman on that subject?

Mr. BURLESON. The question is, Who made the calculation?

Mr. CARLIN. I will ask the gentleman from Texas to read the letter to the House, and let the House see who made the calculation.

Mr. BURLESON. The superintendent of schools does not contend that he made the calculation himself.

Mr. CARLIN. Let the gentleman read the letter.
Mr. BURLESON. The same authorities that made the calculations for the years 1909, 1910, and 1911, I suppose, made the calculation for the gentleman from Virginia, and yet in the year 1909 there was an excess appropriation of $15,317.66; in the year 1910 there was an excess appropriation of $19,849.02; and in 1911 there was an excess appropriation of $76,075.75. Does the gentleman from Virginia, in the face of those figures, insist that that is good administration?

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman from Virginia insists that while the gentleman from Texas enumerates a large number of figures, he as chairman of this appropriation subcommittee has in his possession a letter from, I think, the chief officer of the schools of this city, wherein that officer informs the gentleman that the amount of the appropriation carried in this bill will not be sufficient to cover the longevity pay of the teachers.

Mr. BURLESON. I would state to the gentleman that we had that same information before we ever acted on the item. The information secured from the superintendent of public instruction was obtained from the auditor.

Then the gentleman had the information as Mr. CARLIN. I said he had?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. CARLIN. I will yield in one moment. I am told that while this matter was pending before the Committee on Appropriations not a single officer of the schools was examined in reference to it; and now, in order to settle this matter, I will ask the gentleman from Texas this question: Are you willing to amend the provision in the present bill so as to provide against any possible reduction in the salaries of these lady teachers?

Mr. BURLESON. The contention of the Committee on Appropriations is that this is the safe and sane action to take, inasmuch as $76,000 in excess of what was needed was appropriated last year upon calculations made by the board of education; and we reached the conclusion that we would do well to seek other sources of information, and we did seek other sources of information, and acted upon that information so obtained.

Mr. CARLIN. What source of information did the gentle-

Mr. BURLESON. The District auditor. The auditor stated that he did not have the data upon which a calculation could be made, and he felt sure that a reduction of $5,000 could safely be made. But inasmuch as an excess appropriation of $76,000 had been made the year before, we reached the conclusion that $300,000 was ample at this time.

Mr. CARLIN. Now, let us see how the gentleman's system of reasoning works out.

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman, before he gets to that, yield to me for a question which may, perhaps, elucidate that wery point at the same time?

Mr. CARLIN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The appropriation of last year being $76,000 in excess of the expenditure, is it not a fact that at the time that appropriation was made there were pending in this House and also in the Senate bills providing that all excess appropriations for school-teachers should be used in the payment of pensions?

Mr. BURLESON. Does the gentleman from Illinois ask me that question?

Mr. MANN. No; I am asking it of the gentleman from

Mr. CARLIN. I am not sure about that. Mr. MANN. That is the fact. And was not that a sufficient incentive to have the teachers urge an excessive appropriation for longevity, which, not being used, if the bill had passed, would thereupon have been automatically used to pay them pensions

Mr. CARLIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am always glad to be interrupted by the gentleman from Illinois, and-

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CARLIN. I will when I get to a point a little later. Then I will yield. The gentleman from Texas says he prefers a system of sane reasoning.

Mr. BURLESON. Sane legislation.

Mr. CARLIN. I am glad that the gentleman has finally reached that conclusion; but the fact remains that while they were investigating this exceedingly important item relating to the management and the very lifeblood of the schools of the District of Columbia itself, not one school official was asked a single question with reference to this important matter. The gentleman therefore argues that the school officials reason by a system of insanity. If his system is sane, then the irresistible conclusion is that these school officials are insane, and therefore ought not to be asked questions with reference to the management of the schools, or even to make a mathematical calculation as to how much money it takes to pay the teachers annually.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask my friend a question in connection with the schools?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. If a sum sufficient to pay this extra amount should be included in the bill and be paid exclusively from the revenues of the District of Columbia, how many people, teachers or others, would be in favor of it?

I do not know. Mr. CARLIN.

Mr. SIMS. The teachers spend their money here.

Mr. CARLIN. Why does the gentleman ask hypothetical questions? This money is not paid exclusively out of the District revenues, and never will be as long as the gentleman and I live on the face of this earth.

Mr. SIMS. Do you not think it ought to be paid exclusively out of the revenues of the District?

Mr. CARLIN. No, sir; I believe the people of the Nation ought to contribute to the cost of maintaining the capital of this great Nation.

Mr. SIMS. And the schools?

Mr. CARLIN. And the schools; yes. They are a part of the system; and if the garbage plant is to be a part of it, I am willing to have them help pay for that, provided it is kept inside the District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMS. I do not want to blame the gentleman for trying to keep it out of his district.

Mr. CARLIN. I was diverted just for a moment, but I hope it will prove an interesting diversion. I give notice now that when that paragraph is read I will show to this House, by a sane system of reasoning, with figures and facts obtained from sane people, not one of whom is connected with an insane institution, that you have, by the language you have employed, taken from the women of this community the money which they require in order to live and which, by a statute, you promised them years ago, which statute has been lived up to upon their

Mr. BURLESON. I will suggest to the gentleman that he defer this argument until we reach that item and then discuss it.

Mr. CARLIN. I thank the gentleman. If he had deferred his remarks I would have deferred mine.

Mr. BURLESON. There was no allusion made by me to the deprivation of the school-teachers.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman insisted on injecting something about sane reasons.

Mr. BURLESON. I wanted to give the gentleman some information. It was apparent that he lacked it.

Mr. CARLIN. I thank the gentleman and regret that he does not possess the information, in order to be able to give it. The gentleman's intentions are perfectly good, but he falls short of his intentions in this matter.

Now, my friends, I hope I will not be put in the position of stopping a great public enterprise, such as the construction of a garbage plant, which it has taken the District of Columbia and the District of Columbia Committee over a hundred years to discover was necessary to be constructed here. My friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson], in proceeding upon this sane system of reform, has finally discovered that this city needs a garbage plant. I should prefer to see this city bedecked with roses, with honeysuckle, and with ivy leaves.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Then use the garbage for fertilizer.

Mr. CARLIN. But if a garbage plant is necessary for the peace and comfort of this community and an economical and sane system of reform, then I am for that garbage plant and for its construction in the District of Columbia. I think that is sane reasoning. I am sure the people whom I represent in Congress will feel that that is sane.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. CARLIN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman believe that there ought to be manufacturing plants brought into the District to any great extent?

Mr. CARLIN. I think that a very doubtful question. I would like to see the manufacturing enterprises scattered in the vicinity of Washington rather than in the city, but if it is the desire of the citizens of Washington that they should be located here, I am in accord with it.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman believe that it is desirable, if a garbage plant is to be located, that it should be somewhere down on the river?

Mr. CARLIN. I do not, any more than it should be somewhere up the river.

Mr. MANN. It is not possible to navigate up the river. Mr. CARLIN. Oh, yes; a garbage plant can be operated up

Mr. MANN. I mean that it is not possible to convey the garbage up river by water.

Mr. CARLIN. They can do it by rail.

Mr. MANN. You can not do it by rail so as to avoid the escape of odors. The gentleman from Virginia knows that it is much easier and cleaner and safer and less obnoxious to take garbage by boat down the river than it is to take garbage by rail anywhere.

Mr. CARLIN. I do not think so.
Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman must admit that.
Mr. CARLIN. No; the idea is this: By rail they do have closed tanks, and a great deal of the effluvia and offensiveness in the transportation is relieved by that proposition. Now, on a great river like the Potomac, where in the summer months nearly every square mile is covered by pleasure and passenger boats, to be transporting this unsightly matter, this horrible product, uncovered, with its awful effluvia renders it disagreeable to the whole community and to those who travel on the stream.

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly feasible to do away with that, as is done in many other places. They take the garbage to a place where it is dumped into a boat, entirely covered, no access to the air at all while it is being conveyed to the garbage plant.

That can not be done by rail.

Mr. CARLIN. I never knew of its being done by water.

Mr. MANN. It is done in a great many places.

Mr. CARLIN. Well, assuming that it is done, what of it?

Mr. MANN. That is another proposition. I do not say that a garbage plant ought to be located in the gentleman's district. I have a high regard for the activity of the control of I have a high regard for the activity of the gentledistrict. I have a high regard for the activity of the gentle-man in behalf of his constituents, which activity ought to keep him here, and I hope it will many years to come. [Applause.] Now, there may not be the same objection on the other side of the river. Mr. CARLIN. Well, I could name a place, but I do not care to offend any portion or section of the city of Washington; but there are at least two or three sections in the District of Columbia where this plant could be located without serious inconvenience to its people and without more expense and very much cheaper in the matter of transportation. This theory that gentlemen advance about going to Occoquan is the result of a fad. I know the story as well as any man on top of the earth. There are many who have the idea that a prison like that we have at Occoquan can be made a great moral force, and that a garbage plant would tend to aid the condition of affairs.

Now, this theory may work out, and I am perfectly willing for them to try anything that is not disagreeable to the community, anything that they wish to place there; but I am unwilling for that section of the country to be made the dumping ground for the people of the District of Columbia, and it shall never be done unless it is done over my protest.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I only rose to make plain to the House the unfair argument of the gentleman from Texas when he said that I would have to take the responsibility for the defeat of this great public improvement, when I challenged him here in the presence of this body to accept the District of Columbia as the place for the construction of this plant, and if he would, it would have my earnest support on this floor.

Mr. BURLESON. Is the gentleman willing to withdraw his point of order and let this body pass on the proposition upon its merits?

Mr. CARLIN. I do not know, because neither the gentleman nor I can speak for this body, and there are not 50 Members here. I would be willing for the whole body to pass upon it.

Mr. BURLESON. Upon its merits? Mr. CARLIN. I think I would. Mr. BURLESON. Then let the gentleman withdraw his point of order.

Mr. CARLIN. The whole body is not here. How can I do that? Will the gentleman tell me how I can do that with safety? If he will, I might venture to do it.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman can make a point of no quorum

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CARLIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is an able lawyer and an able

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is an able lawyer and an able constitutional lawyer. Has he taken into consideration whether the placing of the garbage plant at this prison would be contrary to that provision of the Constitution which prohibits cruel and unusual punishment? [Laughter.]

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I think the constitutional provision was never intended to cover such cases as that, but it ought to have been, and we ought to have some constitutional provision that will prevent this Committee on Appropriations from spending its time and our time in trying to put legislation on appropriation bills, when the rules of the House prevent such a thing. Ever since I have been a Member here I have insisted that the Committee on the District of Columbia should discharge its proper function, and that the Committee on Appropriations should discharge its proper function, but every time a bill is reported the Committee on Appropriations, for some reason or other, seems to think that the District Committee is either incompetent or unwilling to legislate, and it undertakes to perform that duty for that committee. I am not surprised that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson], who is the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, undertakes to sustain the rights of his committee on this floor. They are being usurped. Why is this? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] says the House is with him. Why not let the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] report a bill to the House if that is so, instead of having the Committee on Appropriations undertake this scheme of legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that I do not object to the committee doing that.

Mr. CARLIN. But the gentleman prevents it always by inserting legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Would not the gentleman's amendment be new legislation also?

Mr. CARLIN. No; it would be simply perfecting legislation. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. It would be subject to the same objection Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this proposition be concluded at 20 minutes of 4

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield to the gentleman for the purpose of taking me off the floor.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that while this debate is interesting, the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. CARLIN. Of course we could not know that unless the Chair had so informed us. I thank the Chair and in one moment more I shall conclude.

The Chair will state to the gentleman The CHAIRMAN. from Virginia that debate upon points of order are usually intended for the information of the Chair, and in this instance, conceding that information was probably needed, the Chair has had a considerable amount of it and is ready to rule.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, in deference to the statement of the Chair I shall conclude, but I was about to answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. The committee gave the gentleman unlimited

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not seeking to take the gentleman from Virginia off the floor, but at the end of his remarks the Chair will be prepared to rule.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask this question because I feel that it is pertinent. Does or does not the gentleman from Virginia think that a Government garbage plant would be an improvement over the one which we now have, so far as emitting odors and being a nuisance is concerned?

Mr. CARLIN. I hope so, but neither the gentleman nor I have any information upon which to base an intelligent opinion.

Mr. SIMS. I did not know but what the gentleman had examined into the matter, and that we might by some amendment make the Government liable to damages.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, in deference to the suggestion from the Chair that the Chair already has sufficient information upon which to rule upon this point of order, and with great deference to the wishes as well as the opinion of the Chair, I shall therefore yield the floor in order that the Chair may make his ruling.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I myself, probably a couple of hours ago, reserved the right to make a point of order upon this section of the bill.

During the discussion I have prepared an amendment, which the chairman of the committee says he will accept. That being true, after I have explained my position about it in one minute, I will withdraw my point of order. My attitude in the matter is this, that I feel it to be somebody's duty, and particularly mine at this stage of the game, to look after the interest of the United States in these matters. At this time I am very strongly of the belief that this institution will save money both for the District of Columbia and for the United States, but I desire just a little more time to get information concerning it. If I had to vote now, I would vote for it, but I do desire a little more time for information. This bill asks for nothing except for an appropriation of some money with which they may investigate the matter between this time and when the next Congress convenes. Now, that will be ample time, but there may be doubt, and I think there may be a good deal of doubt, in the language of this section of the bill, as to whether or not it authorizes a future appropriation. The committee say they do not want to put this matter now in a shape that it will authorize a future appropriation, and I do not believe that it would, yet I can not say how some future Chairman of the Committee of the Whole will rule, and therefore I have prepared this amendment, which the chairman of the committee says he will accept:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the establishment of a garbage-disposal plant.

The committee has expressed their willingness to accept that, and I therefore withdraw my point of order.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, this discussion has gone over a very wide range of subjects, from garbage to law and schoolma'ams. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] suggested that this plant, if constructed, should be constructed inside the District of Columbia. Now, you can destroy garbage in the District of Columbia without odor and get an equal amount of benefit that you get from the garbage-reduction plant at Occoquan. I have visited the reduction plant in New York, 25 miles distant, situated on Barren Island. I have also visited a destruction plant, and in company with a gentleman from Massachusetts, a former Member of this House—I think, in the Sixtieth Congress—we investigated the plant. I have also written to Milwaukee, where they have a destruction plant, and I find out that there is more than one up-to-date method in handling garbage. I visited the Commissioner of this District, and I find that he is more in favor of the garbage-reduction plant than he would be of a destruction plant, and he is perfectly ready to give the authority for so favoring it. I have nothing against a garbage-reduction plant, and I am in favor of the $10,000 investigation, but the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin] would like to have it in the District of Columbia. Destruction plants are being used in other countries and in a number of cities in this country, and this is one of the latest and best methods that I have seen adopted. At sewagepumping plants in this city you can have a garbage-destruction plant, and over at another pumping plant you can also have a destruction plant. You can gather your garbage, which can be burned and which will furnish its own fuel, and you will save $40,000 worth of coal a year at these two pumping plants, and plenty of steam for use and for electricity can be created.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him for a minute?

Mr. LOBECK. Certainly. Mr. BURLESON. I desire to direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that the latest authority writing on the subject of collecting and disposal of municipal waste is Mr. William F. Morse, who is accepted throughout the country as an authority upon this subject, and he says:

Concerning the relative value of incineration and reduction methods for the final disposal of this material, much has been said and written. The problem is very complex. What is a merit in one city is a demerit in another. Generally speaking, in a city whose population is under the 100,000 mark, the returns from a reduction method of disposal are too small to warrant building a plant, unless the contract price paid by the city for the work is high and the term of contract long (10 years or more). For such cities cremation is unquestionably the method to adopt. Again, generally speaking, in a city whose population is over 100,000 reduction should be the method adopted if the cost alone is to be considered.

And in connection with the continuous statement with ref.

And in connection with the gentleman's statement with reference to Milwaukee I want to state that the engineer who constructed the Milwaukee plant, Mr. Rudolph Hering, has recently been called into consultation by the city of Toronto authorities, and whereas he caused to be erected in Milwaukee an incineration plant, yet when he came to the erection of the plant in Toronto, because of the size of the city, because of the experience he had had in the city of Milwaukee, he advised the authorities of Toronto to adopt the reduction process rather than the incineration process.

The gentleman is undoubtedly right, that in a smaller city the incineration process is the more economical plan, but the gentleman is wholly wrong when he contends that in a city of over 300,000 people the incineration process is the most economical, because all the authorities agree upon the proposition that in cities exceeding 300,000 population the reduction plant is the most economical method of disposing of city refuse.

Mr. LOBECK. In reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], let me read a letter from the health department of Milwaukee, dated December 29, 1911. If you count the Socialists in Milwaukee, it has more people than there are in

OFFICE OF THE HEALTH DEPARTMENT, CITY OF MILWAUKEE, Milwaukee, Wis., December 29, 1911.

Hon. C. O. Lobeck, Committee on the District of Columbia, Washington, D. C.

Committee on the District of Columbia, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: In answer to your letter of December 21, Dr. F. A. Kraft has directed me to forward you a copy of the pamphlet issued by the erecting company of the Milwaukee incinerator. This pamphlet describes the incinerator in some detail.

The Milwaukee plant has proven eminently satisfactory in the opinion of engineers in charge. The plant destroys garbage and refuse without the use of additional fuel, and creates as by-products clinker and steam. Though Milwaukee is not yet making use of this surplus steam, a power plant is in contemplation and will probably be erected in the near future. Experiments are now being made with the clinker in the hope that it can be utilized for cement blocks and other building purposes.

I have seen cement blocks made from this clinker. seen houses which were built and retaining walls which were built from the residue, and I know what I am talking about.

It is probable that this by-product, too, will be made use of in the near future.

According to the plant's engineers, destruction of garbage is complete, and they have not yet found a material that can not be destroyed in the fires. About a year ago the health department confiscated and destroyed in the incinerator three carloads of green watermelons. No fuel of any kind was used to assist in this destruction. The test, as is probably apparent, was an unusually severe one.

Trusting that this will answer your inquiries of December 21, I am, Very truly, yours,

F. W. Luening.

F. W. LUENING, Chief Bureau of Publications.

There are three different ways or methods of gathering garbage in this city. First, the housewife has to have three cans—one for garbage, one for ashes, and one for rubbish. Three distinct collections are made. If only one collection Three distinct collections are made. If only one collection was made, it could be done for half the money and the householder care for only one can. There is no smoke emerging from the large chimneys in the reduction plants; there is no smell, any more than there is in here.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr.

LOBECK] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOBECK. With pleasure. Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska think it would be practicable to dispose of garbage either by reduction or incineration unless the ashes were separated from the

Mr. LOBECK. Oh, no; it goes together. The ashes, the garbage, and the rubbish are put right together and burned together.

Mr. MADDEN. You can not burn the ashes. They are already burned.

Mr. LOBECK. There is 25 per cent of burning quality in the ashes of this District.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Does that take care of the tin cans and pieces of scrap iron, and so on, that get into the ordinary garbage collection?

Mr. LOBECK. But you do not put any tin cans through a reduction plant.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Of course, you do not.

Mr. LOBECK. The cans are destroyed at the same time and become part of the clinker residue.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. LOBECK. I will.

Mr. MANN. Where the ashes and the garbage are together.

what do they use with which to keep up the fire?

Mr. LOBECK. They have a system of air drafts that play on the fire, so that it furnishes or creates combustion, and it actually burns and is destroyed. I do not understand how it is done, but I have seen the work.
Mr. MANN. Where?

Mr. LOBECK. I have seen it at New Brighton.

Mr. MANN. A small plant?

Mr. LOBECK. It is a town of 100,000 inhabitants.

Mr. MANN. Where is it?
Mr. LOBECK. Out on Staten Island; and I also went out to the reduction plant that reduces the garbage for New York

Mr. MANN. I do not see how it is possible to burn ashes without something additional.

Mr. LOBECK. The ashes, the garbage, and the rubbish burn together. I do not know how it is done, but it does the work.

Mr. MANN. Of course, garbage is wet to begin with. Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the discussion is not on the point of order.

Mr. LOBECK. All right. All I care for is that when the commissioner reports he will report on all the latest methods of reduction, for I find by a statement in the Star of December 17, 1911, the following, which I thought was rather strange:

It is certain the measure will contain a provision of $10,000 for the preparation of plans for a garbage-disposal plant, to be located on the workhouse property at Occoquan.

REGARDED AS SURE THING.

In fact, the subcommittee has expressed itself in such a way that the commissioners have already selected I. S. Osborn, who built the disposal plant now being successfully operated in Columbus, Ohlo, as the man to draw up the specifications. After the plant is built Mr. Osborn will, it is expected, be retained to run it.

What I contend for is that the commissioners shall give us all kinds of plans. I do not care whether it is incineration or garbage reduction. I know that garbage has to be taken care of. It is necessary for the sanitation and health of this city and this District, and it should be done. But we want all the plans presented, all the up-to-date plans presented, on December 2 next; and I will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burnson] to amend his resolution to that effect. I do not know whether I will get the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] make a point of order?

Mr. CARLIN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fow-LER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 34, line 2, after the period following the word "dollars," by adding the following: "For investigating and reporting to Congress at the beginning of its next session upon the cost of the most economical method of collecting garbage and other city waste in the District of Columbia, including the preparation of plans and specifications and the employment of personal services and such other incidental expenses as may be necessary, $5,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. MANN. Mr.' Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I do not think the amount is sufficient.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARRETT). The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin] makes a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler].
The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.
Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, so that I can perfect them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Lobeck] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Playgrounds: For maintenance, repairs, including labor, equipment, supplies, and necessary incidental and contingent expenses, $3,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee if he can say with certainty whether or not these expenditures are to be made upon grounds owned entirely by the District of Columbia?

Mr. BURLESON. As I understand it, there are 11 of these playgrounds, and 8 of them belong to the District, while the others are on property leased to the District government. I am not able to state what proportion of the amount carried in the item is to be expended upon those owned entirely by the District government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in order that a separation may be made, I am perfectly willing to reserve the point of order so that the matter can be looked into. If any part of the amount is to be expended on grounds not owned by the District, then I will make the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not think the item is subject to a point of order, because these playgrounds are owned by the Government and are being maintained and operated by the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then by that the gentleman's position would be that there is authority given somewhere by law to expend thousands of dollars in having playgrounds operated on land that is perhaps not in the District of Columbia, and, in consequence, the District authorities have no right to fix them up.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that all the playgrounds are within the confines of the District of Columbia

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. This bill does not say so, and I should say that they should be limited to the District. Beyond that we have no right to go.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky reserve a point of order against the item?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The point of order is that there is no existing law authorizing the purchase or building up of playgrounds at all, and particularly on land not owned by the District. The burden is upon those who have charge of the bill to show that the playgrounds in question are upon land owned by the District.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the rule provides that an appropriation is not in order for any expenditure not previously authorized by law unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Under that rule the decisions are that that would not authorize the construction of a new building upon ground which had been purchased for that purpose if the building had not been authorized the construction of the purchased for that purpose if the building had not been authorized the construction. ized at the time of the purchase of the ground; but if you have purchased the ground, or if you have a building upon the ground, you are authorized to make an appropriation for its maintenance, the distinction being quite clear, as it seems to me.

You may provide the ground and put a limit of cost upon the ground. Having acquired the ground at the limit of cost, you can still make an appropriation for its care. You may provide a building to be constructed within a certain limit of cost, and the limit of cost may have been reached in the construction of You may still make appropriations for its the building. maintenance and repair, although there is no specific warrant of law for that purpose. And that is done under that provision of the rule which provides that an appropriation shall be in order when in continuation of public works and objects already in progress.

Now, here is a case where we have the playgrounds. They may be owned by the Government or not. We have the playgrounds and the equipment on the playgrounds, and this appropriation is only for the maintenance, repair, and so forth, of those playgrounds. Under that provision it is not to be presumed that the commissioners will go beyond their authority and construct a new building which is not warranted by the appropriation, or open a new playground which is not warranted by the appropriation; but having the playground, like having a building, under ordinary circumstances, we are warranted, without specific authority of law, in maintaining it, in repairing it, in providing furniture for it, in providing the necessary equipment for it. It seems to me this proposition is on all

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to ask a question there? Of course, there is nothing here to show, and the Chair has no information whether or not these are Government-owned playgrounds or whether they are loaned grounds.

Mr. MANN. It would not make any difference.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the Chair that they are either Government owned or Government controlled, and that this appropriation is for replacing the old and worn-out apparatus.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I should like to see the authority for it.

Mr. MANN. It would not make any difference whether the Government owns the ground, or is in control of the ground and owns all the equipment on the ground. No other authorization is necessary. The Government may own a building on leased ground, as the Chair will readily see. If it owns a build-ing upon leased ground, it is authorized to maintain the build-If it owns a playground upon leased ground, it is authorized to maintain the playground as a work already in progress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not very familiar with this playground situation in the District of Columbia, although it has been discussed every year for the last three or four years.

Mr. MANN. I think I have argued this point of order four

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman would not insist, whether the Government owns it or not, unless there has been some official recognition or taking over by the Government of a spot as a playground, that it would be in order to make an appropriation for its maintenance?

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all. Unless the Government has provided in some way for the existence of the playground and the starting of the work, it would not be authorized to start it here; but the Government has heretofore provided appropriations for the purchase of playgrounds and for their equipment, and if the Government has equipped a playground, as it has under previous provisions, then it is in order to make an appropriation now to maintain the playgrounds heretofore equipped. My recollection is that that identical question has been ruled upon in previous vears

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman's argument is

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor. Mr. MANN. I have concluded what I have to say. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I was going to say that the gentleman's argument that an appropriation can be made to supply or outfit a playground not publicly owned is exactly equivalent to this: That if the United States can acquire by lease for a short time, or somebody is willing to give to the United States, a piece of land in the District of Columbia, whether it is valuable or not, then that would authorize the erection of a million-dollar schoolhouse upon it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not think I am mistaken. Mr. MANN. I expressly stated my argument, and I think I made a clear differentiation between the right to construct a building upon a site already acquired for that purpose, where the building was not authorized, and the maintenance of the building when it had been constructed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Illinois will remember, in the first few words of my statement I said I did not desire to raise the point of order against property the legal title or fee simple of which had been acquired. Now, without examination, I do not believe that that point of order would be good, but I do believe that a point of order is good against spending $3,000, or any other sum, upon property that we do not own and which in a few years or a few months, we know not when, may be abandoned, and the permanent improvement thereon goes to the benefit of some one else.

Mr. MANN. That is a matter of argument. The very next item in the bill is an item for the equipment of a new play-

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My opinion is that the Government does own the playground in the next item, and I shall make no point of order against it.

Mr. MANN. But suppose the Government did not own it and it went into the bill for the equipment of a new playground. Does anyone contend that the Government, having equipped a playground, could not thereafter maintain it as a work in

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not the presumption that an item placed in a bill, as is this, refers to playgrounds under the control, in some way, of the Government?

Mr. MANN. It is certainly the presumption that the maintenance is for something already existing and within control of the Government

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is nothing to indicate that this money is to be used in any other way except for playgrounds owned by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The item before this was for the replace ment and repair of public scales, $200. Of course the Chair knows nothing about where the public scales are or whether the District owns them, but the presumption is that it does, or else it would not be in the bill.

Mr. MANN. They could not repair them if they did not have them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These playgrounds in the District of Columbia are now being maintained under the appropriations made in accordance with the law; and this appropriation is to continue the maintenance of those playgrounds.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If under this provision it is not possible for this money to be expended, at least in part, upon schools owned and operated by sectarians?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not; it has nothing to do with the schools.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It says playgrounds.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; it is playgrounds, and playgrounds maintained and owned by the Government that are now in existence. The purpose of this appropriation is to maintain them. I have an authority here which says that an appropriation to repair a bridge built by the Government is in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am not making a point of order on the maintenance of playgrounds owned by the Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is nothing to indicate that this appropriation is intended or could be used for any other grounds.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The law is that the burden is upon you to show that there is a statute authorizing it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is easy to do so. There are playgrounds existing at Rosedale, one at Georgetown, and one or two other locations, purchased under appropriations made by Congress authorizing their purchase. They are now in existence, and this appropriation is for their maintenance. it is not possible that where there is any existing public service consisting of a number of units, that, in order to make in order an appropriation for the maintenance of them, it is necessary to specify every unit in the language of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. It seems to be conceded by the gentleman from Kentucky, who makes a point of order, that there are a certain number of playgrounds-

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No, Mr. Chairman; I did not concede that. I said if there were playgrounds in this appropriation, publicly owned, I would not make the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. The Chair is chargeable with knowledge of that by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that there are a number of playgrounds established by law in the District of

As to whether there are other playgrounds that are not officially recognized the Chair has no information, but the Chair must presume that in the administration of the law those chargeable with its administration will confine their expenditures to the legal, legitimate playgrounds. The point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that for the continuation of a work, if any, in progress—that is, for the maintenance of an existing work—it is in order to make appropriation, is certainly well buttressed by precedent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. This language is for equipment,

The CHAIRMAN. For maintenance and repairs.
Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And it also says "equipment."

Therefore they may equip new ones.

The CHAIRMAN. Including labor, equipment, supplies, and necessary incidental expenses. The Chair thinks that is a fair construction of the rule, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 5, insert, after the word "dollars," the words: "Provided, That none of the money hereby appropriated shall be expended upon other than playgrounds owned by the District of Columbia or the United States."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I have a substitute that I wish to offer to that amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. Are there not playgrounds now for which we do not appropriate? There are playgrounds maintained by charity and subscription, are there not?

Mr. BURLESON. I have no information upon the subject, but I am inclined to doubt that. Undoubtedly this provision is intended to equip playgrounds that are owned or controlled by the Government. I think one of them is upon a public reservation which has been set apart, under the law, by the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds for playground purposes. Another one is upon a public park, which has been set apart by order of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds for that purpose.

Mr. CANNON. I have been solicited for donations, and I suppose every Member of Congress has, for the maintenance of playgrounds, and I am under the impression that there are playgrounds other than those that are cared for by existing law.

Mr. BURLESON. I think it was upon the idea that the appropriation made was inadequate for the purpose that the gentleman from Illinois was solicited to contribute.

Mr. CANNON. What does "ownership" mean? mean owned in fee, in lease, in occupation, or otherwise? Mr. BURLESON. I think the amendment might bring about some confusion, and I have offered a substitute for it, to substitute by inserting the words "established playgrounds." I ask for the reading of the substitute.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky proposes an amendment and the gentleman from Texas offers a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 5, after the word "expenses" insert the words "of established play grounds."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas offer that as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. BURLESON. As a substitute. It is not subject to a point of order because it is a limitation upon an appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is the point. I do not agree that it is a limitation. Mine is a limitation and is, therefore, within the rule. The gentleman's amendment is again subject to the point of order that I just made. He is wanting to get outside of playgrounds publicly owned.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest, and I make the point of order to that effect, that it is not a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that this is hardly a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. Whether it is subject to a point of order, standing as an original proposition, the Chair will not at this time say.

Mr. BURLESON. Then, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be regarded as pending, and I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky will be voted down, for the reason that it is liable to create some confusion with reference to the distribution of this fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Johnson of Kentucky), there were—ayes 5, noes 24.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think if the Chair will count he will find that there is a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky (during the count). Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which is in the Clerk's hands.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 5, after the word "expenses," in line 5, insert the words "of established playgrounds."

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I was not here when the gentleman discussed the proposed amendment. In what way does that help this section?

Mr. BURLESON. I do not think it changes it the slightest, except it makes it a little clearer that it is to be expended upon playgrounds that have already been established by the Government or owned or controlled by the Government.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Could it be expended in any other way than upon established playgrounds?

Mr. BURLESON. I do not think so. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. In other words, you can not expend it on playgrounds that are not in existence?

Mr. BURLESON. No.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I do not object, except it seems to me to be mere surplusage.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I suggest for the information of the gentleman from Ohio that the only playground to be equipped is carried in a separate provision, the next item, and that does not carry, by the way, maintenance. That has already been provided for, as I understand, and therefore it would be covered by this general item of maintenance of playgrounds.

Mr. CANNON. I doubt the propriety of the amendment. Perchance there may be established playgrounds other than these that are appropriated for. The paragraph does not need

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for playgrounds, $19,825.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order and I would like to ask the gentleman one question. I want to ask whether or not an item exactly like this in the bill a year ago was paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BURLESON. I have no information on the subject, but am quite sure it was.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I hope that it is; but in the report made by the District Commissioners to Congress setting out the items which were paid by the District alone this is not included in that.

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, there may have been an oversight in the preparation of that report; but I talked with one of the commissioners about it, and he assured me that the law was observed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I withdraw the point of order. Mr. MANN. The auditor has to pass upon that.

The Clerk read as follows:

For care, including salaries of all necessary employees, maintenance, and operation of the Washington Aqueduct, District of Columbia, filtration plant, and the plant for the preliminary treatment of the water supply, authorized water meters on Federal services, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, $91,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman in reference to these public meters for public buildings. What authority is there for it other than carried in an appropriation act and what necessity is there for it?

Mr. BURLESON. I will state candidly to the gentleman I do not think there is any authority of law other than that carried in the appropriation act. There is a great necessity for it.

Mr. MANN. What good does it do to put meters in a public building?

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that a meter materially diminishes the quantity of water that is used, especially where water is being wasted and the meter frequently enables those in charge of the water system to discover a leakage. In one public building or one service, I do not remember exactly the quantity, but thousands of gallons of leakage was stopped by reason of the fact that a meter was installed. It enabled them to discover the leakage and stop it.

Mr. MANN. It must have been a very dumb man in charge of the building who could not discover through the ordinary methods when there is a leakage of water.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The leakage was not in the building. Mr. FITZGERALD. This item to which the gentleman has directed attention is designed to enable the employees in charge of the operation of these plants to inspect and take care of the meters already installed in Federal buildings without any in-crease in the appropriation. There are at present meters installed in three public buildings, and this language merely permits the maintenance of those meters in those publc buildings without any increase of expenditures.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. These meters were put in last year. Mr. MANN. That would depend upon the construction of the phraseology as to what the language provided. Now, as I read the language I supposed that it was intended to provide authority to install meters.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not under this paragraph.
Mr. BURLESON. This item is intended for that purpose, because it starts-

Mr. MANN. I have often seen how a paragraph starts. It is for the care of certain things, and then authorizes water meters for Federal service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The installation of meters is contained in a different item.

Mr. MANN. It is not intended by this to provide any installation

Mr. BURLESON. Not at all. Just the care for the meters already installed.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuation of parking grounds around McMillan Park Reservoir, formerly known as Washington City Reservoir, $2,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order for the purpose of inquiring of the gentleman as to what is meant, on page 39, line 25, by the use of the word

Mr. BURLESON. This is a work that has been in progress for a number of years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Doing what?

Mr. BURLESON. Parking the grounds around the filtration plant. The filtration plant has been called McMinan Lark, and it is going to take a number of years to complete the

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I withdraw the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completing the purchase, installation, and maintenance of water meters, to be placed on the water services of the Marine Barraeks, Soldiers' Home, Howard University, Freedman's Hospital, Walter Reed Hospital, and Zoological Park, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, said meters to be purchased, installed, and maintained by and remain under the observation of the officer in charge of the Washington Aqueduct, $4,850.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that we have installed three meters in public buildings. There has been one installed in the Government Printing Office, one at the navy yard, and one at the Municipal Building, and this is continuation of that work. The engineer officer in charge of the aqueduct believes that the installation of these meters tend to decrease the waste of water and also, as I stated a moment ago, aid in the detection of leakage.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio.

hio. Mr. Chairman— Will the gentleman from Texas yield to The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentle nan from Ohio?

Mr. BURLESON. I will. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. It also enables them to determine the vast quantity of water that is used in Government buildings, in order to keep a check upon the maximum capacity of the water supply of the District. Ten years ago they thought they would have to increase the water supply by the creation of a new supply, but by this method and the method of detecting leaks that was found to be unnecessary; and we believe if they meterize these buildings, looking ahead as they have, they have 10 or 15 years of water yet. It is a check on the waste and a check on the amount of water available.

Mr. SAUNDERS. As a result of the information these meters have given, it has postponed for many years the necessity for enlarging our water supply.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I would like to submit for the further information of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] that during the hearing a request was made that these water meters be established at some 34 or 35 stated places—and when I say "stated places" I mean in stated buildings or in public grounds and it was the judgment of the committee that the meters would be allowed this year as a sort of experimental procedure to ascertain whether or not the judgment of the commissioner was well placed. So we authorized meters to be placed at the points named—the Marine Barracks, Soldiers' Home, Howard University, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I remember when they first started to install private meters in the water service in this town, and I have gone through the experience of water meters in my home city. I am one of those gentlemen who believe as long as there is an ample water supply it is desirable to use as much water as possible. I am not in favor of having a notice posted in every hospital room warning nurses and patients against the use of water.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not think that practice will result from

Mr. MANN. That will result when you commence to charge up against the institution the amount of water they use.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. There is no charge for the water. It is a check on the water.

Mr. MANN. You have a comparison between this one and the other one. One is using less water than the other. One is more economical in the use of water than the other. I am not in favor of commencing that kind of an experiment with the hospitals, where there ought to be perfect freedom and liberty in the use of water as long as there is plenty of water to use.

Mr. BURLESON. I am in full sympathy with what the gentleman suggests.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman ought to be in favor of Mr. BURLESON. I would say to the gentleman that there is no purpose to deprive any hospital or public building or any institution of all the water that it is necessary that it should have or should use. But surely the gentleman will not say that if there is a great wastage of water, if there is a leakage, we ought not to have some means of stopping the waste or the leak. The only purpose of this item is to install these meters with a view of advising those responsible of the fact that there is probably a wastage of water or a leakage of water occurring.

Mr. MANN. I have had personal experience with the use of water and of meters. I am not sure that the gentleman has had. It does not add anything to the discovery of leakages to have a water meter installed. There is already a proposition recommended by a Cabinet officer, that there shall be charged against every department the free-delivery letters that it sends out, so as to keep an accounting and give the Post Office Department due credit for the work that it does. It will only be a short time, if meters are put into public buildings, when the proposition will come along that every public building that uses water shall be charged with the cost, to go into the water fund, and the result will be in the end that there will be a desire on the part of Congress and the people, perhaps, to stop the use of water when there is plenty of water. I think it is much more desirable in this country to stop the pollution of water and to have plenty of clean, pure water for the use of the people than it is to pollute the water and stop the use of it.

Mr. BURLESON. I can assure the gentleman that he is wholly mistaken about the purpose of this item. It is not to prevent the use of water or to limit the use of water, but to enable those who are responsible for the proper conduct of the water system to discover leakages and to stop the unnecessary waste of water. There is no purpose on the part either of the Committee on Appropriations or those charged with the conduct of the water system to make any character of charge against any hospital, against any public building, or against any institution for that water that it uses.

Mr. MANN. I think that is absolutely true. I made no such charge against the committee or against the gentlemen who urged the adoption of the item. But any man who figures upon legislation makes a mistake if he does not figure upon human nature and the inevitable logic which follows legislation. If you provide here the method of putting meters into public buildings, so that the amount of water used in each public building is known, you at once, in the first place, commence to restrict the use of water, and in the second place, you inevitably invite a charge against the particular building for all the water that is used therein. I do not believe there is any escape from that final conclusion. I do not see where it does any good, except to spend money. I make the point of order on the paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes a point of order on the paragraph on the ground that it is new legislation. The Chair understands that it is new legislation and sustains the point of order. The Clerk will

The Clerk read as follows:

For remodeling the Georgetown Reservoir, Washington Aqueduct, to complete the works for the preliminary treatment of the water supply, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, $58,000.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a memorandum or brief, which I had at hand during the reciprocity debate, concerning the application of the most-favored-nation clauses of treaties. This brief is somewhat abbreviated and slightly revised. I think the Members might like to read it.

Mr. MANN. Is it a brief prepared by the gentleman himself or by somebody else?

Mr. McCall. I will have to vouch for it myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCall] asks leave to extend his remarks by printing a memorandum in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the memorandum referred to:

"MEMORANDUM RESPECTING THE PREFERENTIAL CHARACTER OF TARIFF REDUCTIONS BY THE UNITED STATES IN FAVOR OF CANADIAN PRODUCTS.

"Whatever tariff concessions in favor of imports into the United States from Canada the Congress shall adopt, in return for equivalent tariff concessions by Canada in favor of American products, will constitute, on the part of the United States, an exclusive and strictly preferential trade arrangement, which will involve no violation of the tariff treatment of the most favored nation offered to the world in the statutory minimum tariff of the United States. The benefits of this preferential-tariff treatment can not be justly claimed by any third country that is unable to offer to the United States substantial equivalency. It is impossible for any country of Europe, and perhaps any country which is not contiguous to the United States, to duplicate the conditions of economic relationship with the United States that are offered by Canada. This peculiar situation is based upon the following considerations:

CONTIGUITY AND IDENTITY OF INTERESTS

"A common boundary extending over 3,000 miles, a marked homogeneity in the population on either side and identity in their material interests in most of the activities of life, and extensive means of rapid communication by rail and water have, notwithstanding existing tariff barriers, contributed to bring about extensive and intimate commercial relations between the United States and Canada. The desirability of some special tariff arrangement involving mutual concessions for the regulation of this close neighborhood trade has long been apparent. This peculiar relationship is not paralleled in our relations with any country of Europe. Consequently, the Government of no European country can logically demand identity of commercial

"NO IMPAIRMENT OF THE PROTECTIVE TARIFF POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES.

"It has always been claimed by statesmen and economists who support the protective-tariff policy of the United States that a high scale of import duties is required by the industrial interests of this country in order to offset and countervail the ruinous competition threatened by foreign products manufactured at a lower cost of production than that prevailing in the The differential being only partially compen-United States. sated by the expense of transportation, protective duties are essential to cover the margin and thus place high-priced American labor on a footing with low-priced foreign labor.

"The wisdom and expediency of this economic policy has been recognized by many of the great commercial powers of the world, and when the governments of these powers establish a double tariff their minimum rates represent the measure of protection which they believe to be necessary in aid of the domestic industries.

When, however, these principles of tariff legislation are applied to our relations with Canada it is recognized that, so far as regards most natural products, many secondary food products, and some articles of manufacture, this important justification of our protective-tariff policy no longer exists, for the simple reason that the conditions of production in the re-spective countries so closely approximate to each other that the cost of raw material and labor is about the same.

"There is, moreover, great mobility in the agents of production, both capital and labor. The restraints upon their movement from country to country and back again are nonexistent. or so slight as to be negligible. Whenever a higher rate of wages prevails on one side of the boundary, a migration of labor from the other side is inevitable and a readjustment of wages must follow, for the scale of wages and the general conditions of production tend constantly toward an equilibrium. These economic facts are known to every student of the trade intercourse between the two countries, and the migration across the border of population and labor is almost equally strong in both directions. It is therefore just and proper that the tariff policy of the United States toward Canada should be differentiated, even sharply and radically, from that pursued toward European countries and the world in general. It is obvious that for the United States to extend to imports from Europe the benefits of exemptions and reductions of duty in favor of Canadan products would be destructive of the protective tariff policy so long as the differential in labor cost remains so great between the United States and Europe.

"INSTANCES OF EXCLUSIVE TABIFF TREATMENT BETWEEN NEIGHBORING COUNTRIES.

"There are several instances of mutually preferential tariff arrangements between contiguous countries, which are recognized by the rest of the world as proper exceptions from the rule of the most-favored-nation treatment, and these arrangements are not looked upon as instances of discrimination against third countries. The most important of these cases are briefly mentioned below:

" SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.

"By the terms of a treaty of commerce and navigation, concluded between Spain and Portugal on March 27, 1893 (modified by conventions promulgated, respectively, Nov. 28, 1896, and Mar. 18, 1897), these two countries extend to each other certain exclusive preferences and favors, which, on the ground of the regulation of the close neighborhood trade, are not regarded as within the purview of the treatment of the mostfavored nation in the foreign relations between either Spain or Portugal and the rest of the world.

"This treaty provides for mutual most-favored-nation treatment as regards treatment of nationals, navigation laws, port dues, consumption taxes, octroi taxes, etc. As regards tariff treatment, the convention divides commodities into six great -groups, as follows:

"Table A: Articles the product of the soil or industry of Portugal or Spain, which shall be free of customs duties on importation into the other country when imported across the land frontier or by river.

"Table B provides for the mutual free importation into the frontier zone (within 5 kilometers of the dividing line) of agricultural implements and tools, and vehicles for transporting goods belonging to proprietors within the zone and moving to other points across the frontier within the zone.

"Table C gives a list of articles which will be admitted into Portugal from Spain when imported directly by sea at reduced rates of duty.

"Table D gives a list of Portuguese articles to be admitted into Spain at reduced rates of duty when imported directly by sea.

"Table E enumerates the products of the soil or industry of than those established or which may be established for similar products of any other nation.

"Table F enumerates the products of the soil or industry of Portugal which shall not be subjected to other or higher duties than those granted or which may be granted to similar products of any other nation.

"Article 12 of the treaty provides as follows:

"The two high contracting parties reserve to themselves the privi-lege of granting to other countries the conventional duties of Tables C and D.

C and D.

"Any rebate, however, in the duties of Tables C and D is not authorized to a third country without the two high contracting parties having previously assented thereto."

"Article 22 provides:

"The exemptions from duties established in Table A will not be granted to a third country without the two high contracting parties having first assented thereto."

"Article 23 provides:

"Portugal reserves to herself the right of granting to Brazil special concessions which may not be claimed by Spain as a consequence of the fulfillment of the clauses of the present treaty."

"Article 27 provides that the treaty will remain in force 10 years and thereafter for periods of 5 years, unless denounced by either party 1 year prior to its termination.

"RUSSIA AND PERSIA.

"By the provisions of a convention between these two powers special privileges are extended in relation to the land-borne traffic between Russia and Persia, which privileges are denied to third powers.

"RUSSIA AND CHINA,

"On the Russian frontier there is a free zone extending 331 miles each side of the line. Within that zone imports and exports from either side are perfectly free. Going by land from Russia across the frontier, Russian imports will pay only two-thirds of the regular tariff duty. This is subject to certain conditions.

"Exports from China to Russia pay one full export duty only, but they do not pay the transit duty going from Tientsin to the frontier. There is some modification of the Russian agreement in the new Sungaii River regulations on the Russian frontier in Manchuria. The same free zone exists, and all exports from China to Russia pay the full duty except grain and beans and bean cake, which receive a reduction of one-third.

" CHINA AND BRITISH INDIA

"On the British Burmese frontier imports by land across the Burmese frontier from Burma into China pay 70 per cent of the Exports from China by that route pay 60 per cent of the Chinese export duty.

"CHINA AND FRENCH INDIA.

"The same arrangements exist as the foregoing between China and British India.

"THIBET AND BRITISH INDIA.

"On the Thibetan frontier the trade between Thibet and India is free.

"CHINA AND KOREA,

"When the Yalu River Bridge is completed so that there will be land transportation from Korea to China they are to enjoy the same privileges on that frontier as the most favored nation. " MOZAMBIQUE AND THE TRANSVAAL.

"By the provisions of a convention signed April 7, 1909, between the British colony of the Transvaal and the Portuguese province of Mozambique the contracting parties provided for the reciprocal free admission of all the products of each other excepting spirits. It is not certain that this agreement, which was intended to regulate neighborhood trade and to be absolutely preferential on both sides, has been terminated as the result of the formation of the Union of South Africa.

"ABYSSINIA AND FRANCE.

"A reciprocity treaty between these two countries was signed on January 10, 1908. It provides that French wines, cham-pagnes, beers, and nonalcoholic drinks shall be subjected on importation into Abyssinia to a tax of 8 per cent ad valorem instead of the 10 per cent ad valorem on all other articles. This differential treatment is in the interest of the neighborhood trade between Abyssinia and French East Africa.

" MOROCCO AND FRANCE.

"Under the provisions of the accords of 1901 and 1902 between these two countries exceptional customs privileges exist in the traffic between Morocco and Algeria.

" BRAZIL AND ECUADOR.

"By a treaty between these two countries signed May 10, 1907, it is provided that Ecuadorean products may enter Brazil and Brazilian products may enter Ecuador, in the Amazon Valley, without the payment of import duties. This treaty is made to promote the neighboring trade.

" CHILE AND LATIN-AMERICAN COUNTRIES.

"In her commercial treaty with Japan and again in the one with Switzerland, Chile has expressly stipulated that she may accord to Latin-American countries privileges which she is not bound to grant to Japan and Switzerland unless she grants them also to European countries and to the United States.

"THE COUNTRIES OF CENTRAL AMERICA.

"The ultimate free exchange of all products between all the Central American Republics is contemplated under the provisions of the Washington conventions of 1907.

" UNITED STATES AND CURA.

"One of the grounds upon which the exclusive character of the mutual tariff concessions made by the United States and Cuba in the reciprocity treaty of December 11, 1902, is maintained is the relations of proximity between them. The special considerations underlying this treaty were partly geographical and partly political. The former may be described as 'relations of proximity,' and are similar to those which existed formerly between the United States and Hawaii and which appeared in a treaty between the Governments of the two countries on January 30, 1875. The following recognition of the 'relations of proximity' involved in that treaty appears in a declaration annexed to a treaty between Germany and Hawaii concluded March 25-September 19, 1879:

"Certain relations of proximity and other considerations having rendered it important to the Hawalian Government to enter into mutual arrangements with the Government of the United States of America by a convention concluded at Washington the 30th day of January, 1875, 'the two high contracting parties have agreed that the special advantages granted by said convention to the United States of America in consideration of equivalent advantages shall not in any case be invoked in favor of the relations sanctioned between the two high contracting parties by the present treaty."

" OTHER DIFFERENTIALS.

"Several instances of exclusive reciprocal trade arrangements between noncontiguous and widely separated States might be mentioned; but perhaps these are not pertinent in this connection. Among them are the reciprocity treaties between France on the one hand and Haiti and Salvador on the other; between Germany on the one hand and Haiti and Salvador on the other; between Portugal and Brazil; and the preferential tariff reductions made by Brazil in favor of 15 or 16 classes of products of the United States. As regards these conventions it may be said that Haiti and Salvador decline to extend to the United States the benefit of their reduced rates; Portugal declines to extend to any third power the preferences in favor of Brazil; and Brazil declines to extend to any third power the reduced rates accorded to the United States.

"SPECIAL FRONTIER TRADE REGULATIONS IN EUROPE.

"In the case of several countries on the Continent of Europe special exceptions in the customs laws and regulations are made in favor of the frontier trade by the establishment of a free zone. The most important of these instances are as follows:

"GERMANY.

"The Bundesrath is authorized to grant free admission of meat, meal, and bakers' produce in limited quantities for the use of the frontier districts. In addition, there is a provision by which owners of farms across the frontier may import the produce obtained from such farms.

" FRANCE.

"There are certain free districts from which imports are admitted without the payment of duty. These are Haute-Savois and Gex. These districts are a kind of neutral territory situated between Italy, Switzerland, and France.

"SWITZERLAND.

"There are certain provisions which may be found in the Swiss customs law, article 5, letters 'M,' 'N,' and 'O.' Letter M' read as follows:

"Animals, farm implements, and other articles exported by the inhabitants of the country (Switzerland) for the cultivation of estates situated in a foreign territory not more than 10 kilometers from the frontier and which are reintroduced or reimported into Switzerland within a fixed period; likewise animals and articles which are imported into Switzerland temporarily by foreigners for the cultivation of estates situated in Switzerland not more than 10 kilometers from the frontier; in this last case, however, on condition that the neighboring States act reciprocally toward Switzerland and in accordance with the extent of such reciprocity."

"'N' reads as follows:

"Crude products of the soil produced in a State situated on foreign territory within 10 kilometers from the frontier and which are cultivated by inhabitants of Switzerland, either themselves or by agents in their employ."

"'O' reads as follows:

"Milk, eggs, fresh fish, crabs, snails, fresh garden products and field crops, intended for the markets or for peddling, brought by sellers or introduced into Switzerland in wagons; the wagons must follow an authorized route and be reported to the frontier customs house. These products are exceptionally free of duty."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the next item in the bill will probably excite considerable discussion. After it is read I will move that the committee rise. I ask the Clerk to read it. The Clerk read as follows

The Chief of Engineers, United States Army, may transfer to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the cast-iron water mains laid under his direction for the purpose of carrying water from Georgetown Reservoir to the city, which transfer shall include the transfer of the section of the Conduit Road from Eliot Place to Foxhall Road, under which these mains are laid, which section of road the commissioners are authorized to accept as a street of the District of Columbia, and also shall include the transfer of the bridge built to carry these mains across Rock Creek at Pennsylvania Avenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Kentucky both reserve points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair rules on the proposition I will move that the committee do now rise.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. House Document No. 394, being a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, of December 20, 1911, reporting that the Navy Department has considered, ascertained, adjusted, and determined the amounts due certain claimants on account of damages for which the vessels of the Navy were found to be responsible, was referred in the first instance to the Committee on Naval Affairs. A thorough investigation shows that it ought to go to the Committee on Appropriations. If there be no objection, that change of reference will be made.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 68. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Mr. José Pasos Diaz, of Nicaragua.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 17681) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Garrett in a point of order was pending to the paragraph last read.

The CHAIRMAN. At the time the committee rose yesterday

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky reserved that point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will reserve the point of

Mr. BURLESON. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to make a short statement with reference to this matter. The item against which the point of order is directed was embodied in the bill for the purpose of bringing the water mains used for supplying water to the people of the District of Columbia and the public offices within this city under the control of the commissioners. It was earnestly recommended by the engineer officer in charge of the aqueduct and under whose control these particular mains are at this time. This recommendation was acquiesced in by the mains would be brought if this item is carried in the bill. The sole purpose of the item was to bring about the unit of control of the water main supplying water to the city. Your committee believed it would result in better administration; they believed it would result in more economical handling of the situation if these mains were all under the control of one authority.

The gentleman objects to the transfer of a section of the Conduit Road from Eliot Place to Foxhall Road. That is now a public street, and whereas it is under the control of the engineer officer, it is still just as much a public street at this time as it will be if the item is continued in the bill, and it will be no more of a street and no more of a public thoroughfare than it is at this time. I hope the gentleman, in view of this statement, will not insist on the point of order, because I concede that it is subject to such.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there were two propositions submitted to the committee relative to the control of the water supply of the District of Columbia. One was the transfer to the District Commissioners of the control of the entire aqueduct system, and this proposition, which provides for the transfer merely of the distributing mains which are now under the control of the Federal Government. My recollection is that the proportion of the mains now under the control of the Federal Government is very insignificant. Originally, when the water supply was provided for the District, the entire matter of the acquisition and distribution of water was under the Federal Government, but since 1878, and even much earlier, all the distributive mains which have been laid have been paid for, not exclusively by the Federal Government, but either under the half-and-half plan or out of the water revenues of the District of Columbia.

The engineer officer in charge of the aqueduct made a statement that the portion of the distribution system under his control was so small that it would be very easy to transfer it to the District Commissioners, and that we would then have a system by which the work of collecting and bringing the water to a point where distribution would commence would be under the War Department and the distribution itself under the District engineer. Personally I have always been opposed to taking from the War Department the control over that portion of the system which it has at present, but that is not involved in this proposition.

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman make clear the differentiation between this item and the proposed transfer of all of the system from the War Department?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in the District distributing mains were originally laid by the Federal Government, and under the law the engineer officer in charge determines the conditions under which mains might be tapped for the purpose of supplying water to the inhabitants of the District of Columbia. These mains were laid originally chiefly for the purpose of supplying the needs of the Federal Government. Since 1878, if I recall the exact date, the mains that have been laid have not been laid entirely at the expense of the Federal Government, but were laid at the expense of the Federal Government and the District government jointly, or out of the water revenues of the District, and at present the extensions of the water mains are made out of the revenues of the water department. The engineer in charge of the original mains, which were laid by the Federal Government, states that with the development of the city the increased demands for the supply of water, these mains are not used exclusively for one purpose or the other, but are drawn upon jointly for the use of the Federal Government and for the residents of the city, and that in his opinion it would be desirable that the entire distribution system should be under the one control. There is no conflict of opinion whatever about this proposed transfer. Everybody is agreed as to its desirability, and it is entirely different from the proposition to transfer from the War Department to the District Commissioners the control of the aqueduct system and the filtration plant.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, does the War Department now exercise active control over these water mains, and who attends to the maintenance and repair of them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The War Department has control of them and maintains them; but my recollection is that the supply of water from these mains now is an insignificant feature of the distribution system of the District. For instance, since these mains were laid originally it has been necessary to lay down additional distributing mains throughout the same territory. In many places they run parallel. There is at times a question the Engineer Commissioner of the District, under whose control as to the advisability of which main should be tapped, and my own opinion is that by far the greatest number of additional taps are made on the later mains.

Mr. MANN. How are these mains originally laid by the General Government-at the expense of the General Governmentmaintained?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that these mains affected by this item are under the control of the engineer officer in charge of the aqueduct. If any injury results to them or any breaks occur, the repairs are made out of the funds furnished that officer in this bill.

Mr. MANN.

Mr. MANN. A separate appropriation?
Mr. BURLESON. A separate appropriation. If they are transferred to the Engineer Commissioner or to the District Commissioners, then any injury to the mains or the repairs will be made out of the current revenues of the water department, and no specific appropriation is carried in the bill for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. The appropriation that is now carried in the bill and in this bill for the maintenance and repair of these water mains is money paid out of the revenues of the water department, or half and half by the General Government and the District revenue?

Mr. BURLESON. Half and half by the General Government and the District government and not out of the current revenues of the water department.

Mr. MANN. If these mains are transferred to the District Commissioners from the War Department, how will they then be maintained and repaired?

Mr. BURLESON. Out of the revenues of the water department, and that will to that extent relieve the General Government of the burden of maintaining and repairing them.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to inform the committee what the present or past expense has been to the Government in the maintenance and repair of these mains?

Mr. BURLESON. I am unable to give that information, because it is carried in a general item.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in looking back over the appropriation bills for a great number of years I find that each and every one of them always makes a present by the United States of several valuable pieces of property to the District of Columbia before the appropriation bill is finally We all know that there is now a very earnest and extensive movement in the District of Columbia to have the water system owned by the United States Government given over to the District of Columbia. That has been asked, and seriously asked. It was in the estimates made by the Commissioners of the District. The opinion of the War Department was asked, believing that that department would assent to it; but The opinion of the War Department the correspondence discloses that the War Department insists that before that be done the United States Government be reimbursed to some extent for the money which the United States Government has put into this water plant. In the correspondence it is said that the District of Columbia has paid one-third of that amount and that the United States Government has paid two-thirds. Now, if that were true, then I say it would still be a very large gift to the District of Columbia upon the part of the United States; but that is not true. The District of Columbia has not paid anything like one-third of this amount. To-day and for a number of years the Government has been giving to the District of Columbia a certain portion of the receipts from the water system to be used in extending the water mains throughout the city of Washington. The receipts from that source now amount to three-quarters of a million dollars a Now, in addition to that, the assertion is made that the District of Columbia has paid one-third of this amount. When you begin to look into it you will find this: That the District of Columbia has paid very little except from the receipts derived from the water system owned by the United States Government; and, further, that the sinking fund created for the purpose of retiring the 3.65 bonds, the water bonds which the District of Columbia gave and executed to purchase her interest in the water plant, to the extent of millions of dollars, have been retired and paid for and destroyed out of a fund created for the purpose of retiring the 3.65 bonds. Therefore, I say that when you take this matter and analyze it from that standpoint the United States Government has far more than paid two-thirds of the value of the cost of this plant. But, aside from that, everything that is done or looking toward a gift upon the part of the United States to the District of Columbia is done upon the installment plan. Over here on the Eastern Branch of the river there is a public property consisting of 140 acres of ground, upon which is located a million-dollar jail and other valuable improvements. The plan was conceived of removing these penal institutions from the District of Columbia; and then, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin] said on yesterday, another step is taken toward putting another plant down there with a view of finally doing away not only with this million-dollar jail that is out there upon this 140-acre tract of ground, but doing away with everything else that is there; and, in that way, giving something additional from year to year to the District of Columbia.

Now, as I said a while ago, we know there has been already inaugurated a move to give over the water plant to the District of Columbia, and in this section of the bill lies the first step in carrying the proposition to give over this entire plant of the District of Columbia. Now, they take the initial step in this section of this bill to turn over to the District of Columbia a part of that system, and then next year we will find another part of that system, and then next year we will find another step to turn over another part of it probably; and I propose, in so far as I can, to stop the gift of this great and valuable plece of property to the District of Columbia right here, if I can, and stop it in its first step; and then, also, to stop, if I can, the further donation of public property as provided for in this other section as a gift to the District of Columbia.

Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. MANN.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes. Mr. MANN. And I ask the gentleman for information. These mains having been laid by the General Government, if we turn them over to the District government do we still get the benefit of the use of the water free?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I can not answer the gentle-man's question. This thing has been sprung so hurriedly and is attempted to be passed with such haste that I believe nobody, except the members of the subcommittee on the District appropriation bill, has any information.

Mr. MANN. Well, I take it-I had the same objection to this item that the gentleman has expressed in mind at least before the item was reached-

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman I have not yet had an opportunity to read the hearings, I have been so busy, and they have been accessible for such a short

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman his opinion on this supposed state of facts. If we have water mains belonging to the General Government which we use for the purpose of supplying water to the Federal buildings, and we should turn those mains over to the District of Columbia and we will still obtain all the water we want free, of course—I do not know whether that is practicable—from the mains, would not it probably be a desirable thing to do?

Well, I say to the gentleman I

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Well, I say to the g can not express an opinion and answer the question. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I can answer the question is no doubt in the world that if this transfer is made the water will be furnished free to the Government buildings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I want to state that the engineer officer of the War Department, in charge of this portion of the distribution system, makes the statement that the mains laid exclusively by the Federal Government are insufficient to supply the needs of the Federal buildings

At present these buildings are being supplied partly from the mains laid by the Federal Government, partly from mains laid at the expense of the Federal Government and the District of Columbia-half and half-and partly from the mains laid and paid for out of the revenues of the water department. I have the same objection as has the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Kentucky to the transfer of the aqueduct system.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. One of the several objections which I have to this is that this is the first step looking toward that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am so fixed in my opposition to the other transfer that if I believed this was the first step I would be opposed to it, but I believe this is a desirable thing to do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

of order

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a point of order that the paragraph is new legislation. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Chief of Engineers, United States Army, is authorized and directed to transfer to the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as a public highway the strip of land 50 feet in width, designated as lots 15 and 18, square 2527, and extending from Wyoming Avenue to Kalorama Road, said lots having been purchased in connection with the construction of the Washington Aqueduct tunnel: Provided, That when said highway is improved the air shaft now located thereon shall be turned at a sufficient depth below the street level and brought up into a vault, to be constructed under the sidewalk.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I reserve a point of order on that section for the purpose of securing some information.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that there are the same general reasons obtaining for carrying this item in the bill as for carrying the last item.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I was simply asking for information, Mr. Chairman, about it.

Mr. BURLESON. I will repeat to the gentleman that the same general reasons obtain for carrying this item in the bill that existed for carrying the preceding item in the bill, and I admit it is subject to a point of order. The purpose was to place it under the control of the officer in charge of the distributing mains.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. This section recites the fact that the United States bought this piece of land which it is herein proposed to give to the District of Columbia, and I would like to know why it is that it is now asked that the District of Columbia pay no part of the purchase price of that piece of land that is now proposed to be given to the District?

Mr. BURLESON. I will say that I am not in accord with the views expressed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the views expressed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]. I believe that the aqueduct and Conduit Road should be turned over to the District Commissioners. we could do this, it would relieve the General Government, in round numbers, of the burden of $100,000 annually, which is carried in this bill and imposed upon the General Government, and impose that burden upon the revenues of the water system, where it properly belongs. These two were items which the Chief of Engineers and the chief officer in charge of the aqueduct recommended and insisted should be carried in the bill for the purpose of effecting the transfer to the control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia were in accord with that recommendation and assented to it, and asked that the transfer be made. The general purpose, as I say to the gentleman, was the bringing about unity of control or one authority to manage the distributing mains of the water system of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say this situation is somewhat different from the other situation referred to by the chairman of the subcommittee, and stands upon somewhat stronger grounds. This strip is intended to be a part of a continuous highway, to be paved, and maintained. There is no reason why the Government should continue to own a little piece of land under a highway to be operated by the District of Columbia, to be paved by the District of Columbia, and to be maintained hereafter by the District of Columbia. As I have said this particular piece of property will be a part of a street. It is contemplated to be improved as a street, it is contemplated to be paved as a street, and, therefore, as a matter of symmetry it ought to be turned over to the authority that is now maintaining, improving, and operating the streets of the District of Columbia.

With respect to its value, I may say that it has some value, but the strip has no salable value. It can not be sold to a private owner, for a private owner can not put it to any use.

If the Government continues to hold it, it will receive no revenue from it, and it can not put it on the market for sale to private persons, for the reason that its location is such that it can not be utilized by a private person. As I have said I do not understand that this land is of any value to the Government and see no reason why it should not be transferred, for the reasons given, to the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Out of what fund was this property purchased?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Originally, does the gentleman mean? Mr. MANN. I say, out of what fund was this property purchased? In other words, was this property purchased at the expense of the General Government, or partly at the expense of the General Government and partly at the expense of the District, or out of the water fund?

Mr. SAUNDERS. As I understand, without undertaking to speak by authority on the subject, it was purchased altogether by the General Government.

Mr. BURLESON. Originally it was purchased by the General Government.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is as I understand it. Mr. MANN. If it was purchased by the General Government and is of any value and is now to be turned over as a street, why should not the District government contribute half the expense?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Oh, it is a small matter. The General Government owns a strip of land at this point which has value, you may say, with reference to its use as a street, but no value outside of that. You can not sell it. It has no market value. If offered for sale, it will not be taken by private bidders

Mr. MANN. That may be true, but suppose this was private property and was taken by the Government as a street. In that case, on the half-and-half principle, one-half of the expense would be paid by the District.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I concede that that would be so, and we do not make any claim to the contrary.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. This lot, as I understand, lies between Wyoming Avenue and Columbia Road?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Does that lie near that apartment house known as Windsor Lodge and other neighboring places?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I can not say as to that

Mr. SIMS. Have not the District authorities been trying to open an alley back of those apartments? And is it not a fact that because this property is owned by the Government that alley can not be opened?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I can not say about that.

Mr. SIMS. There is great opposition to that alley being opened up, if I am not mistaken as to this 50 feet of land.

Mr. SAUNDERS. So far as the committee is concerned, we have no objection whatever to the District paying one-half of the price of this property.

Mr. SIMS. Those people do not want the alley opened up, if it is where I think it is, no matter who pays for it. That alley will permit the running of market wagons back of this apartment house, making a great deal of noise. But I admit that I do not know where Kalorama Road comes in.

Mr. BURLESON. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that this proposition did not come from the District Commissioners, but from the other end of the line. It came from the engineer officers in charge.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; and I understand that a gentleman connected with the Government service has a house there, and wants this alley opened up for his benefit, and that on that account he is anxious to accomplish this. I live there, and I know that there is a great deal of complaint against that alley being opened, if it is where I understand it to be.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Permit me to read an extract from the

Maj. Judson. There is an item that we would like to have inserted on page 107.

(The item referred to by Maj. Judson follows:)

The Chief of Engineers, United States Army, is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as a public highway the strip of land 50 feet in width, designated as lots 15 and 18, square 2527, and extending from Wyoming Avenue to Kalorama Road, said lots having been purchased in connection with the construction of the Washington Aqueduct Tunnel: Provided, That when said highway is improved the air shaft now located thereon shall be turned at a sufficient depth below the street level and brought up into a vault to be constructed under the sidewalk. The following correspondence regarding the accompanying item has been had between the commissioners and the Secretary of War:

United States Engineer Office, 920 Seventeenth Street NW., Washington, D. C., October 30, 1911.

The CHIEF OF ENGINEERS UNITED STATES ARMY, Washington, D. C.

The CHIEF OF ENGINEERS UNITED STATES ARMY, Washington, D. C.

Sir: 1. I have the honor to invite your attention to the suggestion contained herein regarding the disposition of a certain piece of ground belonging to the Washington Aqueduct, being a strip of land 50 feet wide situated between Connecticut Avenue and Twenty-third Street NW., and extending from Wyoming Avenue to Kalorama Road.

2. This piece of land was purchased at the same time as other parcels of land in connection with the construction of the Washington Aqueduct. Tunnel of the Washington Aqueduct. At the present time in the section of the parcel of land facing Kalorama Road is contained a concrete shaft with an opening 6 inches in diameter, serving as an air shaft to the tunnel beneath.

3. The general elevation of the surface of the ground of this piece of land is higher than the improved property adjacent to it on both sides, and to make it presentable and to keep it in such condition would require a considerable expenditure of funds from the regular appropriation for the maintenance of the aqueduct, which it is desired to avoid if practicable. The land in the vicinity is being occupied by residences of the first class, and the ground itself would probably bring, if sold, more than $1 per square foot. It would not, however, be possible to sell to private parties the section of land facing Kalorama Road containing the air shaft.

4. It is recommended that this property be improved by opening a street over it by the engineer department of the District of Columbia, provision to be made for the air shaft by turning it at a sufficient depth below the street level and bringing it up into a vault to be constructed under the sidewalk, as has been done in the case of the air shaft to the tunnel at Thirteenth Street.

5. It is believed that in order to accomplish this it will require the action of Congress, and it is therefore suggested that if the recommendation meets with your approval that this paper be referred to the Commissioners of the District o street in this location be submitted for the action of Congress, as in the case of the opening of any other streets in the District of Columbia. Very respectfully, Licutenant Colonel, Corps of Engineers. "[First indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, Washington, November 8, 1911.

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War, recommending reference to the honorable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for their consideration.

W. H. BIXBY, Chief of Engineers, United States Army. [Second indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, November 9, 1911.

Respectfully referred to Hon. Cuno H. Rudolph, president Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for the consideration of the commissioners.

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER, Assistant Secretary of War.

[Third indorsement.]

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT, November 13, 1911.

I move the within paper be returned to the Secretary of War with the following indorsement:

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

The commissioners believe that eventually the land referred to within should be paved as a street. The improvements, it is thought, however, should not be made until some time in the future, when the utility of a street would be greater than now. There are many miles of streets dedicated within the District and now publicly owned which are not yet improved, and the improvements made each year are of those street lands publicly owned which are most necessary in any one year.

W. V. Judson,

Engineer Commissioner.

Mai Judson Col Langfitt wrote a letter to us, asking whether we

Maj. Judson. Col. Langfitt wrote a letter to us, asking whether we did not think there should be transferred to us a piece of land that belongs to the water department. It is a strip of land 50 feet wide, connecting Wyoming Avenue with Kalorama Road, about the middle of a very long block. We think it should be turned over to us, and to do that will require the action of Congress.

Mr. SIMS. If there is no intention of opening it immediately, I see no immediate need of the transfer of this property.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I repeat the committee is perfectly willing for the District to pay one-half of the expense carried in this

Mr. SIMS. I am not talking about who shall pay for this. We do not want it at all. Mr. Chairman, is the point of order

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is insisted upon. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

GREAT FALLS WATER POWER.

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed, through the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, to investigate and report to Congress at the beginning of its next session on the questions of the present water supply in the District of Columbia and the sufficiency of its source at the Great Falls of the Potomac River to supply the present and future needs of the United States and of the District of Columbia for water; also the availability of the water power at said Great Falls or vicinity on the Potomac River, or between Great Falls and the District of Columbia, for the purpose of supplying light and power for uses of the United States and of the government of the District of Columbia, and to prepare complete plans, maps, specifications, and estimates for the production, distribution, and utilization of the maximum electrical power that can be economically created and employed for such uses, including street lighting in the District of Columbia; said plans, maps, and specifications shall be sufficient in detail to form the basis of a contract or contracts for the execution of the work, and the map, supplemented if necessary by a report, shall indicate all of the lands that are required to be taken or flowed and the water and water rights that are required to be taken or flowed and the water and water rights that are required to be taken for the purpose of the execution of the project. For expenses of this investigation and report, including all necessary expert and other personal services, there is appropriated the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. necessary

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of getting some information upon the subject, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, during the last fiscal year the daily consumption of water in the District of Columbia reached the enormous figure of 60,380,000 gallons, or 178 gallons per day for every man, woman, and child in the District. Unless something can be done to diminish the consumption of water, by the installation of meters not only for private residences, but also in public buildings, the necessity confronts the Congress of the United States of taking some step looking toward an additional source of water supply.

Under present conditions the water system of the District of Columbia is not only one of the most efficient systems in the country, but we are furnishing the people of the District of Columbia with the cheapest water service in the entire United States, if not in the world.

The lighting system of the District is not so advantageous or favorable as the water situation, and we were impressed with the idea that inasmuch as the General Government now owns a considerable amount of the property at Great Falls, an item of this character should be carried in this bill for the purpose of having a thorough investigation to see what can be done toward the utilization of the power up there, for the purpose of furnishing, through municipal control, light as well as water to the people, and to the officials living within the confines of this city. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] is thoroughly acquainted with this situation, and I ask that he be permitted to continue without interruption for 10 minutes, for the purpose of further explaining this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FOWLER. Before that is done I want to ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler]?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly. Mr. FOWLER. The point I am interested in is this: Has the Geological Survey ever made any investigation of this question?

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] is fully acquainted with the situation, and will explain to the committee, including that very point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, your subcommittee, in presenting for the consideration of this House the bill now before the Committee of the Whole, recommended three provisions that were incorporated into the bill, which provisions, in my judgment, marked great progress in the municipal operations of the District of Columbia, namely the garbage-disposal plant, the municipal asphalt plant, and now the Great Falls water-power project.

It should be stated at this juncture that the only objection raised now to this provision of the bill is the same and the exclusive objection which was raised to the other projects I have named-merely a parliamentary objection, the question of jurisdiction as between two committees. Your subcommittee, in pre-paring this bill, exercised the greatest possible care in the securing of information. Not only were the principal officials of the District brought before the subcommittee, but we called before us the subordinate officials in the various departments for the purpose of ascertaining whether there were cumbersome business methods in the municipal operations of this city and District. This was not intended as a reflection upon the present administration in the District of Columbia, but it was our aim to gain the fullest possible benefit of the provision known as the Holman amendment to the rules.

After extensive and exhaustive hearings a subcommittee is very often enabled to discover, without a large amount of difficulty, the presence of obsolete methods of administering government, and by a slight change in legislation accomplish tremendous economies. That is what prompted your subcommittee to report these three projects. No one has doubted their wisdom. No one has disputed the statement that great economies can be effected through their adoption.

The only objection raised is a parliamentary one, the belief that these projects should go to the District of Columbia Committee. And now we are faced with this situation: The chairman of that committee admits that the only committee from which this legislation can come has been unable to procure a quorum for the consideration of this or any other legislation. So that the Holman amendment will not accomplish the great things in this House which we thought it might.

With respect to the Great Falls project, I intend to make this as comprehensive as I can, to present it in such a way as to leave upon the minds of the Members of this House the same impressions which were made upon my mind, the mind of a layman.

Great Falls is located about 12 or 13 miles above the city of Washington. Its elevation is 150 feet. The next important point in connection with that great project is the Dalecarlia Reservoir, now maintained for water purposes, just a mile or two out of the city. The distance intervening between Great Falls and this reservoir is about 10 or 11 miles. The elevation of Great Falls is, as I say, over 150 feet. The elevation of this reservoir is only 131 feet.

It is planned to divert a volume of water equal to 800 cubic feet per second from the dam already owned and operated by the Government for water purposes at Great Falls. This water, in volume 800 cubic feet per second, will be conveyed through a canal from Great Falls to Dalecarlia Reservoir, the difference in grade being sufficient to induce the flow by gravity. When the water once reaches the reservoir, which is a simple engineering proposition, we find this situation: Dalecarlia Reservoir rises above the Potomac River in a great bluff at that point. These waters are now ready to be delivered into power wheels of the great power plant, and the drop for power production is 135 feet.

Now, gentlemen, we have heard much stated in this House and in past Congresses with respect to the expediency of developing greater water-power plants in Alaska and throughout Western States. Here we have within 15 miles of the Capital the most natural facilities that are afforded anywhere for a great water plant. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] inquired whether a survey had been made by the Geological Survey. Two preliminary and incomplete surveys have been made under governmental auspices, one by Army engineers about 20 years ago. It was not completed because of insufficient available funds. Within the last year the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to a request from the District Commissioners, called upon the Geological Survey for a report on the availability of Great Falls for power production, and it has

As I have said before, it is not exhaustive, it is not complete, because they did not have the necessary funds available to carry out the great work. But they report it as their positive conclusion that by diverting the waters-and there is abundant volume there the year around to make a perennial flow of 800 cubic feet per second-into the canal, carrying it to Dalecarlia Reservoir, and emptying it into the power plant there will be developed 12,000 horsepower. That would be sufficient to meet the lighting necessities-and when I say the lighting necessities of the city of Washington I mean that it will take care of the street lights and the lighting of all public buildings and have an abundant surplus. This surplusage can be easily sold, but it will in time be taken up by increased public necessities. ever, the capacity of 12,000 horsepower will be sufficient to meet the lighting necessities until 1935.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has

Mr. BURLESON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks that the gentleman from Ohio be allowed to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FOWLER.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. The matter I was interested in was the extent to which the Geological Survey has investigated this proposition. I understand the gentleman to say that there has been an incomplete survey made and that it was not complete because of want of funds. I desire to inquire if the Geological Survey has not men already on a salary who could make the investigation without this additional appropriation?

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I will say for the information of the gentleman that we went into this very subject, except in a different way. The original provision made the available for the purpose of employing experts, and in the interest of economy and, as we believed, in the interest of improved efficiency, we provided that the work should be done under the control and authority of the Army engineers. With respect to the report which has been made by the United States Geological Survey, I would say this: The engineers made a topographic map; they made charts and profiles, show-ing the amount of land which is owned by the Government at Great Falls and by private and corporate parties, and the report showed the elevation of the Potomac River at certain points and the drainage area of the Potomac. There were pointed out also the opportunities for the construction of reservoirs along the Potomac River, both north and south of the Great Falls, and then the Gelogical Survey report elaborated on the natural facilities which make the project practicable. The opinion was expressed without reserve that there was no possible question, from an engineering standpoint, about the feasibility of the plan. Then there was submitted a statement with respect to the cost of installing a plant. It carried also the details of maintenance and depreciation, overhead cost, and

Mr. FOWLER. What is it that the War Department can do that the Geological Survey has not already done or could not do in the future, if this question were submitted to it?

Mr. COX of Ohio, I would state for the information of the gentleman that in discussing this project we were in conference many times with the engineer commissioner-and, by the way, he is one of the most competent Army engineers in the country. He was called in to the advisory board in the construction of great works at Keokuk, Iowa. We were constrained in large degree to take his advice. It is his opinion that an appropriation even of $10,000 is insufficient, because plans and specifications are to be made; but, following the general plan of economy of this House, we cut the estimate to $10,000 and threw it into the hands of the Army engineers, because they are having more to do with these operations than is the Geological Survey.

Mr. FOWLER. That does not answer my question. not desire to take the gentleman's time, but I want to know what the Army department or the Engineer Corps could do that could not be done by the Geological Survey?

Mr. COX of Ohio. In the Geological Survey they have geologists. Naturally they are competent to submit contours and topographic maps. Quite naturally that must be the operation precedent to the work of engineers. It was desirable to see what the natural facilities were. When the Geological Survey reports the lay of the land, then the engineers come in and play their part and prepare plans. It is not a thing to be carried out finally by the Geological Survey. They can be very useful, however, in the initial operations.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX of Ohio. Certainly, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I would like to ask what the attitude of the Geological Survey toward this project is. Do they favor it or not?

Mr. COX of Ohio. The Geological Survey reports that it is a practicable project, that ample water power can be developed, and that the cost of construction will be of such an amount as to make it a matter of economy for the Government.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Do they report any reason why they did not do this a great many years ago?

Mr. COX of Ohio. There has been no authority of Congress given for anyone to prepare a great water plant at Great Falis. Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not mean a great water plant, but I mean a recommendation in relation to it.

Mr. COX of Ohio. They have never been called upon to make a recommendation until this last year. The Geological Survey has never been called into this operation or into the subject at all until some time within the past year.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The reason that I ask is that the Geological Survey calls itself into operation in relation to all of the streams in the West, and recommends the withdrawal from public entry of every little stream that has a foot fall in our country.

Mr. COX of Ohio. That is the public domain. There is the most logical distinction as between the two situations.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The streams and waters in them are not public domain. The land itself may be, but I was wondering whether or not the power is as important in the East as in the West, in the estimation of the Geological Survey.

Mr. COX of Ohio. There is no department of the Government that could go into this project without the authorization of Congress. The situation stated by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] and this situation are entirely different. I am sure they are not on all fours at all.

The cost of installing the plant-and there is no variance in views with respect to this—would be $2,700,000. The cost of installing the lighting facilities, stations, and so forth, would be $1,900,000. The total cost of the plant, then, putting in the facilities for delivery of light to the streets, would be $4,600,000. Figuring the interest charge at 3 per cent, the interest upon bonds in this amount would be $138,000. Operation, maintenance, and depreciation of the power plant would be $178,000; the depreciation of the lighting plant, $190,000.

The interest as stated is $138,000, making a total of fixed charges, $506,000. Now, let us see what we have on the credit The street lighting now costs $386,000 per year: would be, with a horsepower capacity of 12,000, a night excess of 10,120,500 kilowatts. Selling this at 1 cent per kilowattand the Government is now paying 3 cents-the income would be $101,250. Then there would be a day excess which would take in substantially the entire capacity of the plant, or 15,678,000 kilowatts. Figuring this at 1 cent, you have another item of income of $156,780, or a total income of $644,000, more than $100,000 above all fixed charges, overhead expenses, and so forth. Now, there is a further thing which enters into this. This present plan also provides that there shall be diverted into the aqueduct an additional quantity of water to be consumed through the waterworks department of the city of Washington. The added flow of water for the purpose will be about 100 cubic feet per second, so that this plant will obviate the necessity of extending the waterworks department within the next few years, and that alone will cost, it is estimated, $1,500,000

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield for a question in that connection?

Mr. COX of Ohio. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. SIMS. If this is done and the water supply is increased, then it will not be necessary to put meters in private houses, will it?

Mr. COX of Ohio. Well, that would be purely a matter of

There would not be any necessity for it. policy.

Mr. SIMS. It is now contended that it is necessary, so as to economize on the water supply to the end that the present facilities may furnish a sufficient amount. With these large facilities, I take it, there will be no need to put meters in private houses.

Mr. COX of Ohio. That is purely a matter of policy and administration. What the gentleman seeks to find out, I think, is this: This would give an almost unlimited water supply to the city of Washington. Mr. SIMS. Well, I hope it will.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Now, some one has said that lands down about the Great Falls are owned by private and corporate interests and that this might be construed as a plan to enable those people to unload their possessions on the Government. my deliberate judgment that the Government will not find it necessary to buy a single acre of ground. I have here a plan and profile, which shows that on the Virginia side of the river, at the end of the dam, the Government owns 6.2 acres. It, of course, owns the dam. On the other side of the river, immediately where the dam itself ends on the Maryland side, the Government owns 19.5 acres. It owns 5.5 acres at what is called the Gate House. There is then a large tract of ground extending from Great Falls down to what is called Cupid's Bower. The extent of this tract of land is 11 miles. The Government has an undivided half interest in this property. In short, the Government owns 84.5 acres of ground immediately adjacent to the Great Falls dam.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman still another question before he closes. Are there any rights granted to private interests or corporations by the Government the value of which this legislation would affect or would lay us liable to any claim for injury under some congressional grant that has heretofore been made?

Mr. COX of Ohio. The information is that there would not be the slightest conflict in that respect in developing this power, and this one feature only presented itself as a possible complication: Certain interests in Washington-I assume they are in Washington, because there is a great deal of land owned by the Great Falls Power Co. below the Falls—might contend that by the diversion of this water into the canal there will remain an insufficient supply of water south of Great Falls; that they purchased this land for the purpose of power development and the price which they paid was determined by the project they had in anticipation, and that the Government plan now inter-feres with their development to such an extent that they might seek to claim damages.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman further.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has

Mr. MANN. How much more time does the gentleman need? Mr. COX of Ohio. I have concluded unless some of the gentlemen want to ask questions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman this: Has this power company rights there that it obtained by special authority of Congress? Are we estopped, in other words?

Mr. COX of Ohio. My information is that they have simply purchased for the most part the tract of ground that was owned by the late Gen. Ben Butler.

Mr. SIMS. That was acquired from private individuals and not under special authority of Congress?

Mr. COX of Ohio. They have absolutely no franchise rights from Congress.

Mr. SIMS. I am in sympathy with the object and purpose of the legislation and hope there is nothing which will block it.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I want to say for the information of the gentleman, and likewise for my other colleagues here, that the report shows that, by raising the dam, water power to the extent of 80,000 horsepower can be developed, and in the elaboration of that idea this statement is made:

The contemplated use of the power to be created is: First, all public service in Washington; second, electrification of transportation lines between Alexandria and Baltimore; third, service of manufacturing enterprises in this vicinity; fourth, the possible electrification of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad east of Cumberland and of the railroad from Alexandria to Richmond.

So the possibilities apparently are boundless.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman does not want to do anything to encourage manufacturing in the District of Columbia?

Mr. COX of Ohio. No, sir; nothing whatsoever. Mr. SIMS. Unless it is material to be used by the District in some of its municipal functions?

Mr. COX of Ohio. I will say primarily it would be the desire to put this power plant in here for the purpose of lighting the streets, thoroughfares, and public buildings. Such surplusage as there might be could be disposed of to the electric light company, private consumers, or transportation companies.

Mr. SIMS. Electric railways operated in or out of the District?

Mr. COX of Ohio. And there is sufficient here and about Washington to more than take up the capacity of the plant in contemplation. But the plant which is recommended new, in the first instance, only has a capacity of 12,000 horsepower.

Mr. SIMS. But may be increased as the needs arise? Mr. COX of Ohio. Yes, sir; by the construction of reservoirs.

Mr. SIMS. The Government owns all the property that will be needed, as I understand, in this construction and operation? Mr. COX of Ohio. Absolutely.

Mr. SIMS. It dother proceedings? It does not have to go through condemnation or

Mr. CARLIN. The Great Falls Power Co. owns all the land at the falls on the Virginia side of the river and the Government does not own an inch of it.

Mr. BURLESON. You are mistaken about that.
Mr. CARLIN. I beg your pardon, I am not mistaken.
Mr. BURLESON. We have sources of information that are quite as reliable as the sources of information of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin]. There is a chart here submitted by the colonel of engineers, Mr. Elliot.

Mr. CARLIN. Of what date is that?

Mr. BURLESON. Three days ago.

Mr. CARLIN. I happen to represent the power company on that side of the river, and, although the gentleman may not consider this reliable, I know they contend they own every inch of that land. And I know they had several suits in reference to it, in which I was present as counsel, and nobody has been able to maintain a suit against them up to the present time.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I imagine the Great Falls Co. is enthusiastically in favor of this project?

Mr. CARLIN. I should think so.
Mr. COX of Ohio. I will state for the information of the gentleman that the Government owns 6.2 acres on the Virginia side of the river. On the opposite side of the river they have an undivided half interest in a stretch of ground that runs from Great Falls to Cupid's Bower.

Mr. CARLIN. Six and one-half acres is hardly a speck on the map in comparison with that which belongs to the Great Falls

Power Co

Mr. COX of Ohio. The Government owns in all 85 acres at the dam.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman is mistaken,

Mr. COX of Ohio. I am not mistaken.

Mr. CARLIN. I think you are. The Great Falls Power Co.

owns the property at Great Falls.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 10 minutes.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I will state that I have concluded my remarks, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I understood a point of order had been made against the paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. It was reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order was reserved against the paragraph. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] insist upon his point of order?

Mr. CARLIN. I reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to this investigation. In fact, I think it ought to be made, provided it can be made within the cost that is now set out in the bill; that is, $10,000. I am apprehensive, however, that when the question comes up again an additional sum of money will be asked for to carry on this investigation, and then the Chair will hold that, this having been done, it authorizes the completion of that investigation once begun. I am desirous of limiting the amount to $10,000, and I have been conferring with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] and with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] about an amendment that will reach that. If that can be reached, I will withdraw my point of order.

CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky JOHNSON] states that under a certain contingency he will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, want to call the attention of the House to this fact-

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. Let the Chair understand the situation.

Mr. CARLIN. I reserved a point of order. There is pending now before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of this House this identical legislation, and in addition to it information is called for as to whether the Potomac River can be made navigable from Cumberland, Md., to Washington. I am advised that all of that information can be had for about $10,000.

Now, this matter is plainly a matter for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to deal with. The Committee on Appropriations and the subcommittee thereof on the District of Columbia has nothing to do with it. But I do not want to interfere with these matters, which seem to have a good public motive behind them, and interpose an objection. But if we are going to have river and harbor legislation engrafted by the Committee on Appropriations upon the District of Columbia appropriation bill, then let us have such legislation as will comprehend the whole subject and which will give the House the information that it desires upon the whole subject, and not have the Engineering Department of the Government making an investigation and spending the Government's money at one time under a bill coming from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and at another time under a paragraph like this upon the District of Columbia appropriation bill, thus duplicating the expense to the Government. So that, in order to save expense, I want to add this line to the paragraph now under consideration, if the gentlemen will consent to it. I do not know whether they will or not. They seem usually to want to have their own way about things, and if they can not have their own way then they say somebody else must take the responsibility of defeating legislation. But here is a bill which I introduced on January 16, and if Members will take this paragraph now under consideration and compare it with what I shall read they will find that the very same item is included in that paragraph. My bill reads:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be made an examination and survey of the Potomac River from Washington, D. C., to Cumberland, Md., with a view to obtaining slack-water navigation, including a full consideration of water-power development and utilization.

Now, what is the difference between this bill and the paragraph now under consideration, contained in the District of Columbia appropriation bill? You include a consideration of waterpower development and utilization, but in order to get that legislation you have got to go to the headwaters of the Potomac River at Cumberland, Md., and make the very survey and estimate which this bill provides for. Therefore I ask the chairman of the subcommittee if he would be willing to include this line as an amendment to his paragraph, providing that at the same time that they make this report they shall make an examina-tion and survey of the Potomac River from Washington, D. C., to Cumberland, Md., with a view to obtaining slack-water

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that I have no authority from the committee to accept an amendment of that character. The gentleman can offer it as an amendment when it is brought before the committee upon its merits. Surely he does not want to sandbag the Committee on Appropriations into the acceptance of an amendment. I am perfectly willing that after this item of the bill has been passed the gentleman shall offer his amendment. He has a perfect right, if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] withdraws his point of order, to offer that as an amendment to this item and have it passed

Mr. CARLIN. I thank the gentleman for his information. The gentleman seems to think I do not know what rights I have in the House. The gentleman from Texas has a perfect right, when I offer my amendment, to make the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. BURLESON. Does the gentleman want to engraft upon this item a provision that is not germane to it but wholly

Mr. CARLIN. Not at all; but I do not want the chairman of this subcommittee to suggest to me that I can offer an amendment without at the same time advising the House what he proposes to do when I do offer the amendment.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I want to submit an inquiry, in order that the record may be as complete as possible with respect to important information on this subject. The gentleman made the observation that the Government owns no land on the Virginia side of the river in the vicinity of the Great Falls.

Mr. CARLIN. That is my understanding.

Mr. COX of Ohio. We do not agree as to that; but conceding that the gentleman is right, I would then like to have the gentleman from Virginia tell me the necessity of the Government having any land on the Virginia side, because the water will be diverted into the canal on the Maryland side, and we now own the right of way for the canal down to the reservoir.

Mr. CARLIN. I should dislike very much to tell the gentleman all that I do know on that subject and all that I think with reference to this subject; but I had passed from that to this simple little request, that while expending $10,000 of the people's money the committee give us the full information on the subject. I do not ask that you include another cent of cost in your bill. I do not want to increase your cost; but when for the same cost, the same $10,000, you can give Congress the full the same cost, the same $10,000, you can give congress the funinformation, why not do it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr.
CARLIN] has not indicated that unless this arrangement be made he will make the point of order against the pending provision in the bill, but I assume that is what he contemlates. The pending provision in the bill is a matter which was plates. The pending provision in the bill is a matter which was inserted by the committee because it has a distinct, positive association with the administration of the District government. An exhaustive investigation convinced the committee that it might result in great economy in the administration of the District government. From time to time during this session of Congress it is quite likely that the Committee on Appropriations will make such recommendations to this House for its consideration, and it might just as well be distinctly understood now as at any other time that in order to secure legislation of the character contained in the bill in the pending provision I shall not agree to make any bargain by which extraneous matters shall be included. Those who desire to antagonize provisions, whatever their reason be or whatever reason they assign, have a perfect right to do so. I have never complained of anybody exercising his right on these bills under the rules of the House; but I do not propose to have this committee, so far as I can prevent it, placed in a position where it must bargain with Members to obtain legislation that is universally conceded to be desirable.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me to allow me to ask a question?

Mr. CARLIN. I yielded to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to me?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes. Mr. GARNER. The There was one statement made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin] that attracted my attention, and I think possibly attracted the attention of other members of the committee, and that was that the River and Harbor Committee are preparing to have this work done at a total expense of not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's bill was introduced on the 16th day of January and this is the 19th day of January. This item has been under consideration not for three days, not for three weeks, but it has been discussed for several years in the Committee on Appropriations. I do not know the source of the information which I believe the gentleman is sincere in giving to the House, but I do know from my experience that it is more satisfactory to rely on recommendations as to cost of various services after investigations such as have been made regarding the pending provision than on voluntary information obtained on the floor of the House. I will say very frankly to the gentleman from Virginia, because I will not take advantage of him or anybody else on matters of this kind, that if the amendment, which he has indicated he will offer, is offered as an amendment to the pending provision of the bill, I shall make the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman does not give me any information that I did not possess before.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wanted to state publicly what I have already stated to the gentleman privately

Mr. CARLIN. I am sure that my friend from Texas [Mr. Burleson] did not know that when he suggested to me to withdraw the point of order and offer it as an amendment, or he would not have made the suggestion.

Mr. BURLESON. I want to say that as to the jurisdiction of the River and Harbor Committee it has no jurisdiction whatever over the Potomac River above Great Falls, because it is not a navigable river, and the River and Harbor Committee could not deal with the subject matter that we are dealing with The gentleman will admit that the amendment he proposes is not germane to the item that is carried in this bill.

Mr. CARLIN. The position of the Appropriation Committee in notifying Members of this House that they will not consent to have items which they bring in upon their appropriation bill changed at the request of Members of the House is a declara-tion of arbitrary power that they might be able to enforce under some conditions and under some circumstances, but when they stand before this House with a provision put in their bill in violation of its rules, then they have no right to complain if a Member asks as a concession that an amendment be allowed by agreement.

This paragraph is in this bill in violation of the rules of this House. It comes from a committee that has no jurisdiction to consider this subject and is an arbitrary exercise of power. They have no right to complain if a Member asks for the privilege or consent of the committee for an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee has not found any fault with the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman did not find fault, but he wanted to have it appear that somebody was asking something wrong when they asked that the paragraph in the appropriation bill be amended by agreement on the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did nothing of the kind. It is possible that the gentleman might offer some amendment to a paragraph that would be in order and which the committee might think would be an improvement, but it is very doubtful.

Mr. CARLIN. Yes; I think it is very doubtful! I do not think any suggestion could be offered the committee in its present state of mind that they would accept. The position of the gentleman's committee, it seems to me, is that "You will take what we offer or you will get nothing." We are not in that frame of mind, and we are not to be frightened against making points of order, because the gentleman can not always have his

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not objected to the gentleman's making a point of order. I have said repeatedly that I never find fault with a Member for exercising his rights under the rules of the House. He takes that responsibility as an individ-ual Member. But I do not propose that gentlemen shall take advantage of a particular rule in order to get certain things of which the committee has no knowledge ingrafted on the bill.

If the gentleman is to be charged with all the good in legislation, I am afraid, with the limitations of his mind, that we will never be able to finish the business of the session, because no man can speak for all the good intentions of 400 Members of this body.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So far as the conduct of this bill has disclosed, the gentleman who assumes to exercise a discriminating veto on all matters relating to the District of Columbia is not the gentleman from New York, but the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. CARLIN. I have not taken this position since my own Democratic associates have been in control of the Appropriation Committee, but when gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber were in control of this body it was a common complaint that when the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia was presented it always contained as many matters of legislation as it did of appropriation.

It is a common disease with the Committee on Appropriations to undertake to usurp the functions of other committees of this House and then tell Members that they will not consent to have them violate the rules; that they will invoke the rule against any proposed amendment and make the point of order because it is not germane, when, as a matter of fact, the whole subject matter of the paragraph is not germane. I ask in the name of good conscience to what section of this bill this paragraph is germane?

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CARLIN. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Ohio. If I have understood the gentleman correctly, he is in favor of this legislation. He simply opposes its being made a part of an appropriation bill. The gentleman has heard the statement made by the chairman of the Com-mittee on the District of Columbia that he has been unable to get a quorum of his committee. We are agreed as to the wisdom of this legislation, and we all know the only way it can be procured is in the Committee on the District of Columbia, unless it is procured in this way. The gentleman has information that that committee can not get a quorum, and I ask the gentleman why it is not a part of wisdom to permit it to become a law in this way?

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman is mistaken. I have just tried to make it plain that this is a matter that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have control of, and I expect they have never been without a quorum in the history of this Congress. But, gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee, I do not want to interfere with your legislation, though you seem to think that anybody who wants to perfect and improve it is hostile to what you desire to do. I have no such purpose as that.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes.
Mr. SAUNDERS. If this amendment in which the gentleman is interested and has offered is objected to, is the gentleman going to make a point of order to the section?

Mr. CARLIN. Oh, my colleague is anticipating.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If the gentleman is going to do that, I just want to bring matters to a head, so that we may go on to

Mr. CARLIN. That is another thing that the Committee on Appropriations can not do until other gentlemen are through. They can not bring matters to a head until other gentlemen bring them there.

Mr. SAUNDERS. We can raise the point of order ourselves. Mr. CARLIN. Oh, yes; the gentleman can make a point of order himself. I do not want to make this point of order. I have no desire to interfere with the wish of the Committee on Appropriations in this matter. I simply object to the criticism which was administered and the inference that anybody who offered an amendment could understand that no agreement could be reached if the amendment were in violation of the rules of the House. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the whole paragraph is in violation of the rules of the House and that the gentlemen must have known that when they introduced the bill.

One word more and I am done. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] asked me on yesterday if I could find any cause to complain of the committee for a reduction of salaries in the District government. At that time I was diverted by another discussion, but I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the fact now that an order has been issued by the District Commissioners within the last three days reducing the salaries of all the employees at Occoquan from 15 to 25 per cent, because, said the evening papers of the city of Washington on yesterday, the District Committee-

Mr. COX of Ohio. Because of a deficiency in last year's bill.

Mr. CARLIN. I think that is true.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Then why blame this committee having in charge this bill?

Mr. CARLIN. I do not blame the committee.

Mr. COX of Ohio. We have nothing to do with that deficiency. Mr. SAUNDERS. We did not reduce those salaries.

Mr. COX of Ohio. There was not a single reduction made at

Mr. CARLIN. I do not blame the committee for that. I shall blame the committee if it is allowed to continue any longer. That is where the committee will be to blame-if these men are to be allowed to remain out of employment, if their salaries are to be reduced 15 to 20 per cent, and prisoners are to be allowed to escape from that institution because of lack of employees. The committee can not escape that responsibility any longer.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not confining himself to a discussion of the subject in hand.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman need not make the point of order, for I have finished.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin], who has just taken his seat, is entirely within his rights if he chooses to make a point of order on this paragraph. I think he is also entirely within his rights if he agrees with the members of the Committee on Appropriations not to make the point of order, if they will agree to an amendment. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] inadvertently referred to sandbagging the committee. It has always been considered in the House where an Appropriation Committee reports an item in an appropriation bill that is subject to a point of order, that it was perfectly within every right of a Member who objected to the form of that provision to reserve the point of order and ask whether the committee would accept an amendment, but that is not sandbagging a committee at all. That is proper legislation, because proper legislation is compromise legislation. I hope that will help to soothe the feelings of my friend from Virginia.

Mr. CARLIN. Oh, my feelings were not all lacerated. gentleman from Texas seems to be offended about something.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will not make the point of order. I do not know whether the water power at Great Falls can be made available for the use of the District of Columbia or not. No one else knows.

But everybody who is at all familiar with the situation does know that there is a large water power here now which is not With the development of water power in the being utilized. country and the creation of electric power through water power there has been a great change of feeling and sentiment in the country with reference to the utilization of water power which is going to waste, not only in the West but in the East. We have here at Great Falls this power, now going to waste, which, if we can utilize it so that as a result we obtain power at a less cost than we now pay in the way of lighting and in other ways, we ought to do that. There have been surveys by the Geological Survey for the purpose of ascertaining certain advance information, and it is absolutely certain that in order to know whether this power can be utilized properly it is necessary to obtain the services of some expert engineers who are familiar with the development of water power. There are no such engineers in the employ of the Government. We have no occasion to develop water power generally, but there are expert engineers in the country who are able to say, after an examination of falls or a stream, whether it can be properly developed and utilized in the form of electric current, and I hope, therefore, that the gentleman from Virginia will not make the point of order. If the Committee on Rivers and Harbors presented a project to this House in a river and harbor bill for the development of this power it would be subject to the point of order. The gentleman from Virginia has intro-duced a resolution which has gone to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. He and his constituents are as much interested as anybody in the development of this, and the gentleman from Virginia knows that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors does not report these resolutions, as a rule, by themselves, but they come in a river and harbor bill, and in a river and harbor bill the item which the gentleman proposes is subject to the point of order, because the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has no jurisdiction over the subject of the development of water power for use in the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia make the point of order?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say one word. Evidently the remark I made was misunderstood, because had no purpose of saying that the gentleman from Virginia did not have the right to offer this amendment. The purpose I had in mind was to make it clear, as the man in charge of this bill, that I had no right to accept an amendment of the character offered by the gentleman from Virginia, because it was not germane to the item under consideration. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] has expressed to me a willingness to withdraw his point of order-and he is chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia and is not complaining that we are trenching upon the jurisdiction of that committee, because he recognizes the fact that action ought to be taken on this item at this time-if a certain amendment which he will offer will be accepted by the committee; and in view of that statement I now ask the gentleman from Virginia if he will not withdraw his point of order and let the item in the bill be voted down?

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I had no disposition to sand-bag the committee. I had no desire to prevent the passage of this paragraph in the bill. I had but one motive, and that was that the Government should not be made to pay twice for the same information. I had but one desire, and that was the desire of economy, and as my friend had recently become the great apostle of economy I did entertain the hope that he would be willing to economize along that direction; and as evidence that I am a well-disposed man and not inclined to interfere with improvements in Washington City, or even with the arbitrary will of the Appropriations Committee, except occasionally, I withdraw the point of order. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 42, line 16, after the word "project," insert: "Provided, That the total cost of the investigation and the services authorized by this paragraph shall not exceed the sum of $10,000."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment

Mr. CARLIN. One moment, if you please. I would like to know of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if that amendment is by agreement with the committee?

Mr. BURLESON. We think it is a germane amendment to this item, and for that reason we are perfectly willing the committee should pass on it.

Mr. CARLIN. I understand you have agreed to this amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. I say I have no objection to it. I have no authority to accept the amendment and decline to accept the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the gentleman from Virthat the gentleman considers this amendment more effective to do what was intended by the committee-to limit the cost of this investigation to $10,000.

Mr. CARLIN. I just wanted to inquire if the gentleman from Kentucky had the temerity to ask the Committee on Appropriations to consent to an amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have already suggested that perhaps the gentleman from Virginia could suggest an amendment and offer it that would be germane to this provision and which would improve it.

Mr. CARLIN. But the gentleman has not answered my question. But I will not press for any further answer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the gentleman's question? Mr. CARLIN. My question is whether this amendment was by agreement with the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Officers: Superintendent of public schools, $5,000; 2 assistant superintendents, at $3,000 each; director of intermediate instruction, 13 supervising principals, and supervisor of manual training, 15 in all, at a minimum salary of $2,200 each; secretary, $2,000; clerk, $1,400; 2 clerks, at $1,000 each; clerk to carry out the provisions of the child-labor law. $900; 2 stenographers, at $840 each; messenger, $720; in all, $52,700.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer to the second line.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr.

LOBECK offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. LOBECK. Amend, in line 2, by striking out the word "five," after the word "schools," and inserting the word "six." Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 2, page 43, strike out the word "five," after the word "schools," and insert in lieu thereof the word "six."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has a point of order been reserved on

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order was reserved on the amendment by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson].

Mr. LOBECK. The superintendent of public schools, who was engaged to come here this year, was under an implied promise that he was to receive $6,000 per year. He left a positive that he was to receive $6,000 per year.

tion that paid him the latter amount.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Who had authority to make that promise, and who did make it?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Where did they get the authority? Mr. LOBECK. They probably took the authority, as they do

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Do we have to carry out their promises?

Mr. LOBECK. It was public talk at the time in the press. Mr. FITZGERALD. Public talk does not bind the Government.

Mr. MANN. While it may have been public talk, that is the first I have heard of it.

Mr. LOBECK. It was in the public press, and that is where I got it. I did not get it from the superintendent of public schools, for he has not even mentioned the subject to me. But I only state in fairness to this gentleman that he ought to be entitled to the wages that it was understood he should be

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to inform the House whether the school board has reported to the House or the Committee on Appropriations in any way that they made such a promise?

Mr. LOBECK. All I know is that $6,000 was asked for in this estimate here.

Mr. MANN. What I inquired was whether they had reported to the House or the committee in any way that they had made such a promise.

Mr. LOBECK. That I do not know, sir. I could not tell you that.

Mr. MANN. If they made a promise of that kind, common etiquette would require that they report the fact.

Mr. BURLESON. There was no authority. Nobody was authorized to make such a promise.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman say the estimate provided for $6,000?

Mr. LOBECK. My recollection is to that effect.

What authority have those who make estimates Mr. SIMS. in the District of Columbia to bring in estimates exceeding what the law allows to be paid?

Mr. LOBECK. All I know is this:

Superintendent of public schools, increase of $1,000. Submitted under the act of June 11, 1878.

Mr. SIMS. Who makes that estimate or suggestion here?

Mr. LOBECK. I suppose the Commissioners of the District of Columbia sent the estimate in.

Mr. SIMS. Do they make suggestions as to what shall be done in the way of legislation or increase?

Mr. MANN. They submit it.

Mr. SIMS. It is in the nature of a suggestion, then, or argument?

Mr. MANN. The estimates show that it is in the nature of a suggestion.

Mr. SiMS. I did not know who was doing all this stirring up of increase of salary. I thought maybe it was some Member I did not know who was doing all this stirring who had a friend at court.

Mr. LOBECK. I only got this from the estimate. the talk in the public press at the time. I bring this matter up, and if the Members here do not care to adopt the amendment, I have made my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas make a

Mr. BURLESON. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that the super-intendent of schools is undoubtedly a very competent and worthy gentleman, but he has just recently been called to the District of Columbia and placed in charge of the District schools, and the committee did not deem it necessary at this time to make an increase of this salary. Next year, when we have an opportunity to receive the recommendations made by the superintendent of public schools—

Mr. MANN. And after the election is over—
Mr. BURLESON (continuing). And know how he is managing and conducting the schools, if it is shown and demonstrated that he is receiving a less salary than he ought to receive I have no doubt that the Committee on Appropriations will then increase his salary. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN The point of order is sustained. The

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Librarians and clerks in class 1, five in all, at a minimum salary of $500 each.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order against the paragraph about to be read, entitled "Longevity pay."

The CHAIRMAN. We have not reached that paragraph yet, will suggest to the gentleman. On line 17, page 45, is the last paragraph that was read.

When we reach it I desire to be recognized, Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that when that paragraph is reached I desire myself to be recognized. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Longevity pay: Longevity pay for director of intermediate instruction, supervising principals, supervisor of manual training, principals of the normal, high, and manual-training schools, principals of the grade manual-training schools, heads of departments, director and assistant director of primary instruction, directors and assistant directors of drawing, physical culture, music, domestic science, domestic art, and kindergartens, teachers, clerks, librarians and clerks, and librarians and the paid in strict conformity with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, as amended by the acts approved May 26, 1908, and May 18, 1910, $300,000.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the Chair understand the gentleman from Virginia to say that he desired to be recognized to make a point of order?

point of order:
Mr. CARLIN. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that the gentleman from Virginia make it.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I stated to this House that to-day I would be able to demonstrate that the appropriation of $300,000 for longevity pay for teachers would create either a deficiency or deprive those teachers of their

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular der. The gentleman in charge of this bill has offered an amendment, and we propose that the consideration of this bill shall be carried on in the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia reserve the right to make a point of order?

Mr. CARLIN. I reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the gentleman make his point of order now.

Mr. CARLIN. Before I do so, Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire about this amendment. I have not had an opportunity to see it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] does not seem to be willing to give anybody an opportunity to understand these things.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order. The pending paragraph of this bill should be considered in its regular order. Other paragraphs to the bill can be considered in their order later.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment offered be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 46, in line 11, after the word "dollars," insert ", together with the unexpended balance, $75,878.06, of the appropriation made for 'longevity pay' for the fiscal year 1911."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, in 1909, upon estimates furnished to the Committee on Appropriations by the school board-

Mr. MANN. Is that the reappropriation of $75,000?

Mr. BURLESON. That is the reappropriation. Upon estimates submitted by the board of education, the sum of $146,900 was appropriated for longevity pay. At the end of the fiscal year it was ascertained that $15,317.56 of that appropriation remained unexpended.

For the fiscal year 1910 the school board submitted an estimate to the Committee on Appropriations, through regular channels, for $210,000, which was appropriated, and of that sum $190,150.98 only was expended, leaving an unexpended balance of $19,849.02.

In 1911 the school board submitted, through regular channels, to the Appropriations Committee another estimate, and an appropriation of $355,000 was made for longevity pay. At the end of the fiscal year it was ascertained that $76,075.73 remained unexpended.

Mr. GILLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question for information?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.
Mr. GILLETT. Was there any change in the law during that time?

Mr. BURLESON. Between the time that the estimate was submitted and the appropriation bill was finally passed there were certain teachers added to or advanced to certain classes, which gave them increased longevity pay, necessitating an increase of the amount to be utilized for longevity pay, but not-withstanding that fact there remained unexpended of this appropriation $76,075.73, as stated to the Appropriations Committee by the auditor when he was called upon for data bearing on this subject matter.

I will not go into the reasons for this overestimate. The probable reason was suggested by a gentleman upon this floor yesterday. I do not care to discuss it. It is sufficient to say that an overestimate was made of the amount actually needed of $76,075.73. Consequently when the Committee on Appropriations considered this item this year we reached the conclusion that we would seek other sources of information. Whereas the auditor of this District prior to this year did not have the data upon which estimates could be made, he was, at the request of the Committee on Appropriations, put in possession or put himself in possession of the data, making a card index of the teaching force of this city, and he has submitted to us an estimate which shows that we can easily make available the amount of excess of appropriation made last year for the fiscal year 1913 and not endanger in the slightest the pay of a single teacher within the confines of the District of Columbia.

The committee will understand that under the law when an appropriation is not fully expended the balance remains available for two years. Consequently this excess of $76,000 will continue tied up in the Treasury of the United States under and by virtue of the law of 1911 unless this amendment which I have offered is adopted by this House. Unless I am forced to do so, I do not care to go into the reasons why this excess of estimate was made, but I believe there was a reason for it, and if it becomes necessary I can state what that reason was.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.
Mr. CANNON. The bill as reported to the House carries for this purpose an appropriation of $300,000. Is that right? Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Providing for the service for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. BURLESON. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913. Mr. CANNON. Three hundred thousand dollars. Now, the Mr. CANNON. gentleman finds that there was appropriated last year $76,000 more than was expended.

Mr. BURLESON. In round numbers, $76,000.

Mr. CANNON. This amendment reappropriates that amount. Mr. BURLESON. Makes it available for the fiscal year 1913.

Mr. CANNON. So that when the aggregate of the appropriation is footed up it will fail to show the amount of $300,000 plus $76,000, because of the subterfuge-I do not say that offensively-of reappropriating this amount of $76,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We give credit for that amount that is reappropriated.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that we were not attempting to keep anything under cover. We wanted to direct attention to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations were aware that year by year the school board have been overestimating for longevity pay. That was the purpose of it. We believed that it would result in better administration in the future and in economy.

What was the estimate for 1913? Mr. CANNON.

Mr. BURLESON. The first estimate that reached the Committee on Appropriations, and did not come through the board of education, was $375,000.

Mr. CANNON. The former official estimate was $375,000.

Mr. BURLESON. Three hundred and seventy-eight thousand dollars.

Mr. CANNON. Now the amount recommended is $300,000, and the gentleman proposes to reappropriate $76,000 plus the $300,000. Does he propose, if that amendment should be agreed to, in lines 9 and 11, to change the $300,000 to $376,000?

Mr. BURLESON. That would be wholly unnecessary.

Mr. CANNON. And yet, when you come to foot up the appropriations this $76,000 that is reappropriated rather than appropriated does not appear in the appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to say that that is not an unusual thing, and in the estimates submitted by the administra-tion to Congress this session the aggregate of the estimates apparently are considerably reduced by virtue of the fact that the administration itself has requested very large reappropriations.

Mr. CANNON. That is all right if the gentleman will allow me

Mr. BURLESON. Let me answer the gentleman's suggestion. I want to assure the gentleman from Illinois that there was no consideration of politics in this matter. The committee did not do it for the purpose of covering up anything or diminishing the total appropriations of the bill. It was done for the purpose of pointing a moral and to bring attention to the fact that the school board has been overestimating that item for longevity pay for three or four years. I want to inform the gentleman that this morning I ascertained from the auditor that the last appropriation made is in excess of what will be needed by probably $30,000. In next year's bill, if I can influence the situation, it is my purpose to reappropriate that $30,000 just as we reappropriate this, in order that there may not be an un-expended balance for teachers' pay that can be used as a basis for operation by some other bill that is before a committee of this Congress

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas, strong of voice and clear of mind, has now informed the House that the estimate last year was too large, and that there was appropriated $76,000 more than was needed, and which $76,000 is in the Treasury and would lapse under the law. He now offers this amendment of $76,000, and says we are asked to reappropriate it. If it is not reappropriated, it will not be available. If this amendment is defeated, and we make it an appropriation of $376,000, then the appropriation will be available, and no more so than if we reappropriated it.

There will only be this difference: When the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations arises on the last day at the adjournment of this session of Congress and gives the statement of appropriations in toto, and shows how much less the appropriations are than they were last year or how much they have been increased over last year, and apologizes therefor and explains there will be $76,000, so far as the District of Columbia appropriations are concerned, that will not be covered by that statement. It will make no difference which way it is to the House before I could call attention to the error. But I done, whether by reappropriation or by appropriation. The teachers will be paid. But the country will be informed of $76,000 in the aggregate less than the truth of the appropriations.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that at the end of this session of Congress we will have reduced the appropriations of this Congress far beyond the petty sum of $76,000, and we will not have to do so by reappropriating unexpended

Mr. CANNON. Oh, that is thundering in the index. propose to impose on the country $76,000 by way of reappropriation, which will give that much more than the bill carries on its face. It is not a great matter, but, after all, it looks to me to be a little peanutty. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Texas in reference to the reappropriation. Under the law, as I understand it, at the end of the fiscal year money that has not been expended is applied, so far as the District's share is concerned, on the floating debt due from the District to the United States. There is a floating indebtedness from the District to the United States which draws 2 per cent interest.

Mr. BURLESON. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to tell us when this charge on the books is made for the fiscal year 1911?

Mr. BURLESON. It will not be made until two years after the appropriation has been made, because the unexpended balances are available for the year for which the appropriation is made until the expiration of two years thereafter.

Mr. MANN. So that the District keeps on paying 2 per cent on this fund, although, as a matter of fact, it is in the Treasury, not available for the District, but, in fact, available for the Government of the United States.

Mr. BURLESON. That is true, and I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. That is an additional reason why this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is any reason one way or the other, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. BURLESON. In fairness to the District, they ought to be relieved of the burden of the 2 per cent at as early a period as possible.

Mr. MANN. But the reappropriation will run it two years longer.

Mr. BURLESON. No; the reappropriation will utilize the fund that will stay in the Treasury, and they will not be burdened with the 2 per cent interest. They will be relieved of

Mr. MANN. The reappropriation will have the same effect upon this sum of money as though it were an original appropriation.

Mr. BURLESON. That is true.

Mr. MANN. It will not lapse into the Treasury until two years after the end of the fiscal year 1913.

Mr. BURLESON. Provided it is not expended during the fiscal year 1913.

Mr. MANN. That portion that is unexpended. I have often heard so much criticism here about how the District was imposing upon the Government that it seemed to me proper to bring out the fact that this seems to be a case where the Government is using the money itself and still makes the District pay interest upon it.

Mr. BURLESON. That is right.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is well for the House to understand that we can not always safely rely upon the sys tem of reasoning which my good friend the chairman of this committee yesterday denominated sane reasoning, and of which he boasted. He told this House, in response to my statement, that economy had been perfected and that corruption had perhaps been avoided. I made the statement to the House that to-day I would produce the figures to show that if the paragraph for which the gentleman was contending in the bill become a law, the good women school-teachers of this community would lose $75,000 in their salaries. He stated that that was not the case. The appropriation referred to, to be exact, in the paragraph is $300,000. To-day, while I was on my feet, in order to elicit the fact that the Appropriation Committee, through this "sane" system of reasoning, had actually made a mistake of $75,000, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations called for the regular order in order to take me off my feet, so as to give the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson], the chairman of the subcommittee, an opportunity to make his explanation happened to know that although the regular order took me off my feet at that time it can not take me off my feet now.

Mr. Chairman, let us see if we are right. I am not so sure that we are correct now. I understand that the actual amount of money paid last year for longevity pay was $355,000. If that is true, then there is not an unexpended balance of $75,000.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman want information upon this subject?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes; of course I do. I am trying to save these ladies their pay.

Mr. BURLESON. I have it here. For the fiscal year 1911, $278,924.27 was paid.

Mr. CARLIN. I understand that. Mr. BURLESON. This is a statement furnished the committee by the auditor of the District.

Mr. CARLIN. Yes; and here is what the gentleman said yesterday. I quote from the gentleman, in what he said yesterday, on page 1129 of the RECORD:

Mr. BURLESON. The District auditor. The auditor stated that he did not have the data upon which a calculation could be made, and he felt sure that a reduction of $5,000 could safely be made. But inasmuch as an excess appropriation of $76,000 had been made the year before, we reached the conclusion that $300,000 was ample at this time.

Mr. BURLESON. As we have demonstrated.

Mr. CARLIN. As you have demonstrated. Now, let us see what the gentleman said in addition to that. In response to my question of what the necessity was for putting the paragraph in the bill, he said:

For the simple reason we do not propose to appropriate an amount in excess of what is needed. It leads to extravagance first and next to corruption. Surely the gentleman would not contend for an appropriation that leads to such ends?

Again, I wish to quote from the gentleman. I insisted upon his reading a letter which I supposed to be in his pockets. had been informed that he had a letter from the auditor which would show that it would require at least $373,000 to pay the ladies this year, and despite that statement from the auditor, he was insisting upon the paragraph appropriating only $300,000, and this is what he said:

Mr. Burleson. The same authorities that made the calculations for the years 1900, 1910, and 1911, I suppose, made the calculation for the gentleman from Virginia, and yet in the year 1909 there was an excess appropriation of $15,317.66; in the year 1910 there was an excess appropriation of $19,849.62; and in 1911 there was an excess appropriation of $76,075.75. Does the gentleman from Virginia, in the face of those figures, insist that that is good administration?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be given five minutes further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may be given five minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CARLIN. Again the gentleman from Texas stated:

I will state to the gentleman that we had that same information before we ever acted on the item. The information we secured from the superintendent of public instruction was obtained from the auditor.

Now, gentlemen of the House, I have but one desire in this matter, and that is to see that these good women receive their pay. I was sure that the gentleman had fallen into an error and I wanted to point it out.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. CARLIN. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. The ge statement from the RECORD. The gentleman has not read any erroneous

Mr. CARLIN. Well, let us see. The gentleman asked for an appropriation of $300,000, and after I called attention to it The gentleman asked for yesterday he asked for $75,000 more this morning before I had a chance to say a word. Something happened between yester-day afternoon and this morning. If the gentleman had that information yesterday, and the gentleman intended to change that item, the gentleman would simply have had to state so and that would have ended a long controversy covering an hour.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman will bear me witness, I requested that the gentleman delay until we reached this item when I told him this matter would be fully discussed. We did have the information that is furnished in the letter alluded to by the gentleman. We had it from the auditor. We knew exactly what we were doing when we appropriated the $300,000. We intended to make available the excess, the unexpended balance, for 1911 in order to bring notice home to the people who had been making these excessive estimates that the Committee on Appropriations knew exactly what was being done.

Mr. CARLIN. I will say, Mr. Chairman, then we can understand that it is the policy of the Committee on Appropriations that whenever they are going to ask for $376,000 they will print in the bill $300,000 and then offer an amendment on the floor. That is the gentleman's "sane system" to which he referred yesterday.

Mr. BURLESON. I am not responsible for the gentleman's process of reasoning

Mr. CARLIN. Why, surely not; and sometimes the gentleman does not seem to be responsible for his own. [Laughter.] The fact remains before the committee that we are told this morning by the chairman of the committee that he put deliberately a paragraph in this bill appropriating only $300,000 for the school teachers of this town, with the intention of making it $376,000. I accept the gentleman's statement. I have only to express the regret that the gentleman did not give us the benefit of his good intentions before and we would not have had occasion for this controversy; and I congratulate the House, finally, upon the fact that its good purposes will be carried out and the teachers of this town will receive their longevity pay to which they are entitled under the law. I only rise now, Mr. Chairman, to say to the chairman of the sub-committee on appropriations that I am informed—and this is not for a subject of controversy; I have gotten this from a committee that ought to know-that the actual amount paid last year under the longevity pay was $355,000. If that is correct, then there is not enough money here now to pay the balance of

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that he confuses in his mind the amount appropriated and the amount ex-I have read to him two or three times a statement from the auditor that for the fiscal year 1911, $350,000 was appropriated and that $278,924.27 was expended, leaving an unexpended balance of over $75,000; and I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that it is good administration to appropriate largely in excess of the amount which is to be used for a given purpose?

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I-had but one object, my principal object being accomplished, and that was to give this House the benefit of the facts. You can judge, gentlemen, whether or not it is good administration to ask for $300,000 when you intend to make it $376,000, or whether it is good administration to ask in cold type for what you intend to ask in order that the House may be informed. I was under the impression that a mistake had been made, and I wanted to correct it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. CARLIN. I did not want to be captious yesterday, and to say to the gentleman that if anybody seems to differ with him it should not be the occasion for hostility-

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, not at all; it always gives me pleasure to set the gentleman straight; it always gives me pleasure to

Mr. CARLIN. It would give me great pleasure if the gentleman would do so. I leave it to the committee in this case if have not set the gentleman straight, somebody has. Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. CARLIN. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman give some information about this longevity pay? Last year the amount of longevity pay was $278,000, and for the next year it is to be $378,000. Will not the gentleman tell us how rapidly it increases and what the longevity pay is?
Mr. BURLESON.

I can give the gentleman the information. Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] has the information.

Mr. CARLIN. I can say this: That at this time I am informed it is very difficult to tell in what amounts it progresses. The number of teachers who would be entitled to longevity pay is affected by resignations, deaths, discharges, and sometimes by matrimony.

Mr. MANN. What is the basis of longevity pay? How much is it?

Mr. CARLIN. The maximum is $150 a month, and the minimum is governed by the time of service. But the maximum longevity pay is $150 a month.

Mr. MANN. That is the maximum pay?

Mr. CARLIN. For any teacher, under the longevity act, the maximum pay is $150 a month, as I understand.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to tell how much the longevity pay increases the pay of teachers? We are constantly told that the teachers are not as well paid in Washington as sewhere. How much increase comes from longevity pay?

Mr. CARLIN. It depends on how long they serve. It means elsewhere.

to the teachers of Washington $370,000 a year.

Mr. MANN. We paid to them last year $278,000.
Mr. CARLIN. Two hundred and seventy-eight thousand dollars. The point I was trying to make when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] interrupted me was in reference to his irresistible inference that the item of $355,000 appropriated last year would lead to corruption, or might do so, and yet this year he appropriates $376,000. It seems to me the gentleman did not intend to use the word "corruption." I do not think he used it advisedly.

Mr. BURLESON. I used it advisedly. I make the statement that the practice of appropriating amounts largely in excess of the amounts required affords a temptation to administrative officers to absorb that fund. If it is not necessary, and the desire overcomes their consciences, they will first resort to extravagance in order to absorb it, and extravagance will ultimately lead to corruption. I still assert that it is all wrong to appropriate amounts largely in excess of what is needed for a given purpose

Mr. CARLIN. How much are you appropriating now in excess of what is needed for the given purpose?

Mr. BURLESON. In 1912, as I have stated to the gentleman, according to the estimates of the auditor, $30,000 in excess of what was needed was appropriated; in 1911 an excess of $75,000 was appropriated; in 1910, $19,000; in 1909, $15,000; with a bill pending in the Congress providing that unexpended balances for teachers' pay be used to pension teachers,

Will the gentleman do me the kindness to Mr. CARLIN. answer my question? My question was: How much in excess of what is necessary are you now appropriating?

Mr. BURLESON. Thanks to the activity of the sane action of the Committee on Appropriations, we are not appropriating a dollar in excess of what will be needed, or we give them a margin, prabably, of $2,000.

Mr. CARLIN. Then we have an increase in the longevity earnings of the teachers of nearly $100,000 over last year?

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman could not give the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] the information that he asked, and he was not expected to do it, but I can give, with the permission of the gentleman, exactly what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLIN. This discussion seems to excite my friend.

Mr. BURLESON. Not at all.

Mr. CARLIN. I told you a moment ago I was not hostile in any way. I am ready to get at the real truth.

Mr. BURLESON. I wish to assure the gentleman he is doing no harm.

Mr. CARLIN. I seem to excite you, and I do not want to do it, because a gentleman at your age of life ought not to get But I do state that it is a remarkable thing to me, and I can not understand it, how the longevity pay was over $278,000 this year and it is now proposed to appropriate $376,000, and we are not willing that any unexpended balances— Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CARLIN. I will yield to the gentleman if he will get me more time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can get more time. The gentleman wanted the amount increased, did he?

Mr. CARLIN. I did.

The gentleman has called the attention of the Mr. MANN. Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to the necessity of increasing the amount. He has forced the Committee on Appropriations to recommend an increase of $78,000. What more does the gentleman want, for goodness [Laughter.]

Mr. CARLIN. Nothing on earth, except to show my friend from Texas that I did not want him to get unduly excited.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee on Appropriations has done what it had in mind to do all the time, namely, provide sufficient appropriations to pay the salaries of all the school-teachers. It has not been the intention of the committee to reduce the salary of a single teacher. I know that such was not the intention of a single member of the subcommittee, and am equally assured that this was the attitude of every member of the full committee. We did not have in mind that as a result of the legislation that we recommended the salaries of these teachers would be reduced, and, as I have stated, it was not our intention to reduce them. The excitement that has been created in that regard has been purely unnecessary. If the parties who thought that they would be affected had come to us with the information that they have presented to other Members outside of the committee, we would have allayed their apprehensions at once. The committee did not set out to reduce these salaries, and are not now receding from a position which, as a matter of fact, we never held. Now what was the situation?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand the gentleman to state that the subcommittee, or the Committee on Appropriations itself, when this bill was reported to the House intended at that time to offer this amendment?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No; I did not say that.

Mr. MANN. I think that is what the gentleman stated.

Mr. SAUNDERS. No. I said the committee never had in mind a reduction of the salaries of these teachers.

Mr. MANN. But, as I understood him, the gentleman stated that the committee intended to pursue the course that they have pursued

Mr. SAUNDERS. In respect to caring for the teachers, yes, Our original attitude was not to reduce these salaries. Hence the moment we have ascertained that our appropriation may be possibly insufficient to care for these salaries in full, we are proceeding to make it sufficient. But I may say in this connection that the teachers would have received their salaries in any event, and if a deficiency arose, that deficiency would be provided for. What I was going to say was that the information that was before us in the way of figures from the auditor's office justified our action.

All the information that was before us supported the conclusion reached that the appropriation which we reported was sufficient to pay in full the salary of every teacher on the rolls of the District. The facts that have been developed since our action was taken show that possibly the information secured and on which we acted was misleading. But the very moment that the necessary additional information was brought to our attention, showing that our action on the information before might cause a result not intended at any time, the committee and every member of it was ready to make whatever additional appropriation was needed. Hence the committee is doing what it always intended to do—namely, take care of the teachers to the extent of the salaries they are entitled to and are receiving under existing law. In the past, as the result of excessive estimates, we have appropriated more than was necessary for longevity pay. We are now proposing to utilize these unexpended balances to the extent that they may be needed for the payment of teachers' salaries. These balances in the aggregate are considerable. There should be no unexpended balance; certainly no large balances of this character. If the estimates in this connection heretofore given to Committee on Appropriations had been measurably correct, the committee would have been under no misapprehension with respect to the present item.

But since ascertaining that our action on the information before us, which I may say was ometar, may be we have taken the steps necessary to meet the situation. No we have taken the steps necessary to meet the situation. The before us, which I may say was official, may have misled us, mischief has been done, and none was ever intended. The situation has at all times been within our control, and the teachers' salaries have never been for a moment in danger.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question, for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to his colleague?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. CARLIN. I do not like to see the school authorities resting under the strictures that the gentleman has placed upon them. If my information is correct, then-

Mr. SAUNDERS. I was speaking of the information, the official information that was before the committee, relating to estimates for preceding years and the expenditures under the appropriations made on those estimates.

Mr. CARLIN. I am informed that the school authorities, when before the Committee on Appropriations, were not asked any questions about this longevity pay, and that for that reason only they did not give the committee any information on that Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that we had that information at the time.

Mr. CARLIN. What information?

Mr. BURLESON. The information with respect to the excess appropriations of 1909, 1910, and 1911.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, to use the shoe-maker's aphorism, let us stick to our last. So many things So many things have been stated outside of the House that we are likely to get away from the discussion of the precise matter in hand. This matter is whether the committee was justified in considering that the amount asked for longevity pay was not necessary, when we found large unexpended balances under the appropriations of preceding years for this item. In one year the unexpended balance was about $75,000.

If the present estimates were affected with errors of this character and extent, it was manifest that it was not necessary to appropriate the full amount asked. I ask this Committee of the Whole if the Committee on Appropriations were not justified in making the appropriation that they did make, and in holding that appropriation to be ample to cover the salaries of all the teachers affected?

If they were justified in that conclusion on the information before them, what proper criticism can be now directed toward the committee for the action actually taken?

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly,

Does the gentleman think it was quite fair Mr. GILLETT. to claim to the House that you were making a reduction in expenses in this bill when here was the sum of $76,000 which you knew was not a real reduction, but simply an apparent reduction, because you had the money, as you thought, in

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is a reduction, because that money now utilized would have gone to some other purpose than the payment of these teachers. But that is a purely collateral matter to the proposition I am discussing. As I have said, the trouble is that when one proposition is up for discussion, outside and irrelevant matters are injected into it to such an extent as to lead the debate away from the main proposition. As to whether we have succeeded in making an actual reduction, that is a question which may be debated at the appropriate time.

At present I am discussing the proposition whether the committee was justified in making this appropriation, on the facts before them. In that connection I am ready to answer any question that may be asked. Of its own motion the committee has taken the steps necessary to meet the situation, and to correct any possible mischief that might ensue from an inadequate appropriation. I will conclude as I begun with the assertion that the committee is now doing what it has always had in mind to do, to report a sum sufficient to pay the teachers the salaries to which they are entitled under the law.

The Committee on Appropriations is always ready to correct a possible injustice growing out of its action, even when that action was taken on apparently satisfactory and sufficient in-formation. The amendment offered by the committee meets the situation. Mr. CARLIN. When did the committee arrive at that conclusion?

Mr. SAUNDERS. The very first moment we secured the necessary information.

Mr. CARLIN. Was that after yesterday's debate?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not know. Possibly the final information may have been received since then.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, some Members of the House seem to labor under the delusion that this additional money is put in the form of a reappropriation for the purpose of misleading either the House or the country as to the aggregate of this bill. As I recall, this is the only instance in this bill where the committee recommend a reappropriation of an unexpended balance. It is the first time in my service in the House that there has been such an unusually small number of reappropriations in a bill. In the estimates for fortifications for the next year the War Department itself requests the reappropriation of unexpended balances aggregating $164,000. the sundry civil appropriation act for the current year, in the very first two items in it, one for the support of the so-called Tariff Board and the other for the so-called Economy Commission, there are not only appropriations for the services, but reappropriations of the then unexpended balances. For the Tariff Board the sum of $225,000 is appropriated, "together with the balance unexpended July 1 next of the appropriation made for this purpose for the fiscal year 1911." For the socalled Economy Commission there is an appropriation of $75,000, "together with any unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1911." For the fiscal year 1911 the appropriation for the so-called Economy Commission was $100,000. In the message transmitted by the President to the Congress on Wednesday of this week he called attention to the fact that before March 3, 1911, when he asked the continuation of the Economy Commission, only $12,000 of the original $100,000 has been expended.

Mr. GILLETT. I want to ask the gentleman if he would claim that he was achieving an economy, compared with another bill, when he reappropriated the noney instead of appropriating it outright? Does he think that is a fair comparison?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not said that.

Mr. GILLETT. That was what was done in this case Mr. FITZGERALD. No one has ever questioned or criticized the action of a committee in making these reappropriations, or charged that it was for the purpose of reducing the apparent amount of the appropriations.

The original appropriation for the enforcement of the antitrust act of $500,000 was hardly touched the first year it was made available, and a Republican Congress kept reappropriating the unexpended balances year after year. It was never charged in the total of appropriations, and this side of the House never criticized the policy. It is too picayune a matter to assume that there was any desire to reappropriate this unexpended balance simply for the purpose of making a good showing in appro-

There was a very good and substantial reason for the action. I shall state it so that the Members of the House will understand the committee's action. There has been pending before Congress for several years a bill to provide a retirement sys-There has been pending before for the teachers of the District of Columbia. One little provision in the bill is that as a nucleus, as a basis for the fund from which these pensions shall be paid, the unexpended balances in the appropriations for longevity pay and the ordinary pay of the teachers shall be placed.

consent it was extended five minutes.]

Nobody in the House would be informed as to the amount of such unexpended balances. Few Members would think of seeking out information to ascertain to how much they would amount; and yet, in that ingenious way, upon the theory that it would not cost the Government anything, or very little, there would be placed as a basis of the pension fund a very substantial amount of money without attention being called to it.

The committee believed, in view of the fact that the legislation was still being pressed, that if it is to be enacted it should be enacted in a manner that would make clear the part of the burden to be borne by the Government; and to remove the temptation, it was believed desirable to use up all of these unexpended balances.

I undertake to say that in my experience in this House, if there were added to the aggregate of the appropriations the reappropriated balances in the annual statements, they would have increased the aggregates very substantially. I have always been opposed to that method of appropriating money. The sub-committee eliminated every recommendation from this bill for reappropriations of unexpended balances. There are some reappropriations of unexpended balances. There are some classes of service in which it is proper—temporary service lasting a very short time—where it is desirable to know exactly how much is to be used to continue the reappropriation of the After an investigation of the appropriation for the enforcement of the antitrust law, which disclosed that it was impossible to keep track of the expenditures, Congress ceased that method of appropriation and made a specific appropriation.

So far as the criticism of the committee is concerned, it is an empty one and does not affect the substantial fact that the manner in which it is proposed to provide the means to pay schoolteachers of the District the sum to which they are entitled by law is the best that could be devised.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

It has been developed in the discus-Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. sion of this matter that this year the longevity amount to be paid will be $100,000 more than that of last year. chairman of the committee tell us why that is?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is due to the fact that the longevity pay increases with the length of service of the teachers. My recollection is that it depends upon the basic pay which the teachers receive. As a teacher advances in service the amount appropriated becomes greater.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Has it been increasing to the amount of $100,000 from year to year during the last few years?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; it has not. Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that we are still making a mistake. I do not know whether we are right or not.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I was in conference this morning with the auditor for the District of Columbia, and he stated that he had checked up from a card system that he had and that this sum would be sufficient. The appropriation for the current year is $355,000.

Mr. BURLESON. That is correct.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And based upon the expenditures made thus far, it will be $30,000 in excess of what is required, so that $325,000 will be sufficient to meet the requirements of service under this item, and for next year the increase will be $50,000, not $100,000.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. I have no objection to the reappropriation of this $76,000, but I would like to know why there is his large increase in a single year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law fixes the compensation. The longer teachers serve the greater is their compensation.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Then, if there is any fault anywhere it is in the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a system that I think is universal in the school systems of all large cities. The compensation of school-teachers is based, to some extent, upon the length of their service, and experience has demonstrated the wisdom of the system.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I first want to congratulate the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin] on having succeeded in extracting this additional $76,000 from the Treasury—possibly. My attention was called to this longevity appropriation a year or two ago in discussing the teachers' pension bill. All of the teachers' pension bills which have been proposed in Congress I think, have contained a provision that a certain for years. amount shall be deducted from the salaries of the teachers an amount wholly inadequate to pay pensions—then an additional provision in reference to certain funds which probably will never materialize, and then a provision that all excess or surplus of appropriations for teachers' pay shall be turned over to the fund for the pensions to become a part of the pension fund. A year or two ago I charged on the floor of this House, in the consideration of a teachers' pension bill, which I believe never came to a final vote, that owing to the fact that no one could tell what longevity pay would amount to, because of resignations and new appointments which would affect the total, and no one could tell what resignations might happen during a current year, it offered opportunities to pad the appropriation, and that that opportunity had been deliberately availed of, in the expectation that they were thereby able to get a large surplus under the longevity pay appropriation, which, if the pension bill passed, would be utilized for the purpose of paying pensions. The bill on its face purported to provide that the pension fund should come out of the teachers' and a very limited amount out of the Treasury, but in fact it intended to take it out of the Treasury. I have never been opposed to a reasonable and proper teachers' pension bill, but have always been opposed to any crooked methods of deceiving Congress in legislation, and, in my judgment, the provision in the teachers' pension bills which were then pending, and some of which have been pending since, covering this very point, was deliberately intended to deceive Congress into the belief that the pension fund was being contributed one-half by the teachers, but with the expectation of continuously padding a longevity-pay provision and thereby getting a sufficient fund to pay pensions.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Allowance to principals: Allowance to principals of grade school buildings for services rendered as such, in addition to their grade salary, to be paid in strict conformity with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, $33,000.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that for the fiscal year 1910 there was appropriated under this item $35,890; that there was an expenditure of $32,224, leaving an excess of $3,675.50 unexpended. Also, that for the fiscal year 1911 there was appropriated $38,500, and there remained unexpended at the end of that fiscal year $5,906. The school board this time estimated for this particular item $36,120, and your committee allowed $33,000, having the assurance that there would not be the slightest danger of diminishing any teacher's compensation. I bring this to the diminishing any teacher's compensation. I bring this to the attention of the committee in order that the board of education may know that the Committee on Appropriations is advised that excess of estimates for teachers have been repeatedly brought before the Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Western High School, janitor, $900; laborer, $420; three laborers, at $360 each; in all, $2,400.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Do not you increase the salary there of one laborer?
Mr. BURLESON. What line?

Mr. MANN. Line 11, page 48. I am not complaining of it.

Have not you increased-

Mr. BURLESON. No. I will state to the gentleman there is no increase of compensation, but an additional laborer was allowed, for the reason that there have been recent additions to the Western High School, and it was necessary that additional services should be rendered and that the high school be provided with an additional employee.

Mr. MANN. I am afraid the gentleman will have to revise his explanation. You have no more laborers there in this bill than in the current law. The only difference is, you have taken one out of the $360 class and put him in the $420 class. Now, I congratulate the committee that in addition to the wages of two washerwomen it has increased the salary of one laborer in connection with the high schools.

Mr. BURLESON. I want to assure the gentleman-Mr. MANN. Was this an accident; does the gentleman intend to bring in an amendment to cut this salary down?

Mr. BURLESON. No. The committee is not entitled to the credit which the gentleman desires to give the committee. will state to the gentleman it was the purpose of the committee to allow an additional laborer there, for the reason that there was a recent extension of the Western High School, and representations were made that an additional laborer was needed in order to properly care for the building.

Mr. MANN. Is it the intention to add an additional laborer?

Mr. BURLESON. He was added.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman must be mistaken about that. The existing law, as I understand it—and if I am not correct I will be glad to be informed-carries three laborers for the Western High School, at a salary of $360 each.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that I have the law before me of last year, and for the Western High School it provides one laborer at $420 and two laborers at $360, and we now provide for three laborers at $360.

Mr. MANN. Well, I have the last year's bill, and it is the same number of laborers that are in this.

Mr. BURLESON. Permit me to read to the gentleman and see if we can not understand each other. I have before me the law. For the Western High School we provided one janitor at $900, one laborer at $420, and two laborers at $360 each. Now we provide three laborers at $360 each.

Mr. MANN. I know, and that is precisely what is in this bill. You provide in this bill a janitor at $900, laborer at $420, but you have added three laborers

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; instead of having two laborers, as was carried in last year's bill, we add an additional laborer, because they assured us that it was necessary, and we accepted their statement.

Mr. MANN. I was mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

Bunker Hill, Deanwood, Hamilton, McCormick, Orr, Reno, Reservoir, Smothers, Stanton, Threlkeld, Military Road, and Burrville Schools; in all, 12 janitors, at $300 each.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am very anxious, if possible, to relieve Congress or the House of attempting to only increase the salaries of two washerwomen. I want to ask the gentleman whether there have been any increases of salary to these janitors, to whom it is proposed to pay the enormous sum of $300, to two men who receive that great advance from $150 a year to the plutocratic sum of $300 a year.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman I can explain that to his complete satisfaction, I think.

Mr. MANN. All I want to know is the fact. It meets my complete satisfaction to know that the committee has finally decided to give a man $300 a year to live on instead of requiring him to live superbly on $150 a year.

Mr. BURLESON. There are additions to two new schools provided in last year's appropriation bill, and by reason of those additions the two janitors have moved into a higher class, which entitles them by reason of the increased labor imposed upon them to an additional compensation, and no additional compensation is allowed here

Mr. MANN. Is not additional compensation? The gentleman just stated they were entitled to receive additional compensation. That I agree to, but will not they receive an additional

Mr. BURLESON. The pay is based upon the amount of work they do, the number of rooms placed under their charge, and inasmuch as these additions will entail additional work upon them they become entitled to this increased compensation, and they justly deserve it, and I hope the gentleman will not make any point against it.

Mr. MANN. I did not make a point of order against it. I was afraid some member of the Appropriations Committee would make a point of order, and therefore I rose and moved to strike out the last word, so that a point of order could not be made. I was quite certain that if some gentleman on that side of the House discovered that the Committee on Appropriations had deliberately proposed to increase the salary of two men now receiving $150 each to $300 each some one might object to it and make a point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. I assure the committee there was an additional burden placed upon these laborers, and by reason of this additional burden in the way of care of these additional rooms their compensation was increased.

Mr. MANN. I think the increase was proper. I only wish the committee had followed that course in some other cases where additional burdens are placed and additional efficiency is demanded, and had recognized that fact in those cases as well as in this case.

The Clerk read as follows:

For amount required to equip temporary rooms for classes above the second grade, now on half time, and to provide for the estimated increased enrollment that may be caused by the operation of the compulsory-education law, and for the purchase of all necessary articles and supplies to be used in the course of instruction which may be provided for atypical and ungraded classes, $5,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice this amount is reduced from $13,000 to $5,000. May I ask the gentleman why?

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that we transferred from this item to another part of the bill item calling for an appropriation of $6,000.

Mr. MANN. Which item is that?

Mr. SAUNDERS. It was an item under "miscellaneous," for the repair shop, storage, and stock rooms, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. You increase that item for rent?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Last year we provided for the rent in this, but do not now.

Mr. MANN. I see.

The Clerk read as follows:

For text-books and school supplies for use of pupils of the first eight grades, who at the time are not supplied with the same, to be distributed by the superintendent of public schools under regulations to be made by the board of education of the District of Columbia, and for the necessary expenses of the purchase, distribution, and preservation of said text-books and supplies, including one bookkeeper and custodian of text-books and supplies, including one bookkeeper and custodian of text-books and supplies, at $1,200, and one assistant, at $600, $65.000: Provided, That the board of education, in its discretion, is authorized to make exchanges of such books and other educational publications now on hand as may not be desirable for use.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson]. I note in the appropriation for 1912, $68,500 is appropriated for the purchase of textbooks and supplies for the use of those who are not at the time supplied with the same. The estimate here is $69,000, while this item is cut down to $65,000. It seems to me that it is a very important item—the furnishing of textbooks and other school supplies for pupils who are not at the time supplied and who may be too poor to supply themselves. Why is that reduction made?

Mr. BURLESON. As the result of investigation made by the Committee on Appropriations, we reached the conclusion that there had been an unnecessary and unwarranted destruction of the books used as textbooks. In fact, the former superintend-ent of schools, during the progress of the hearings, has made the statement that they had disposed of the rejected school-books they had used and concluded to abandon, and it had been their practice to offer them for sale, and that they had discovered when these schoolbooks had been sold they were being used in other schools as textbooks; and in order to prevent that practice and to prevent the use in other schools of the books that had been abandoned here in the District of Columbia they now were destroying the schoolbooks without offering them for sale. And your committee, considering that matter, reached the conclusion that this item could be properly reduced by the amount that we have reduced it.

Mr. WILLIS. Then the gentleman gives it as his opinion that the $65,000 will be perfectly ample to provide textbooks for these pupils during the year?

Mr. BURLESON. It is the deliberate judgment of the committee that prepared this bill, and I have not the slightest doubt

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, that being the case, I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For equipment, grading, and improving six additional school play-grounds, $900.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that simply for the purpose of getting information. It seems to me that the provision for playgrounds is one of the most important things in appropriations for public schools. Last year there was appropriated $1,000, and $1,000 is asked for this year; but that is cut down here to $900. Why is this? Is it the judgment of the committee that the children do not need to play as much as they did?

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, no. I do not remember the number of playgrounds we provided for last year, but we reached the conclusion that $900 was ample for the equipment of school playgrounds, and I think there is not a Member on this floor who will reach any other conclusion if he will consider what is to be purchased for the complete equipment of the school grounds, but that $150 is ample for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. While the gentleman is on his feet, will he yield for a question in reference to the item ahead of this, that has just been passed over, for the purchase of flags?
Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Did the committee in recommending the amount that might be needed for the purchase of flags take into consideration the fact that the flags are all going to be changed, owing to the admission of two new States?

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that no particular inquiry was made with respect to this item. We allowed the estimate that was submitted.

Mr. MANN. That matter was not taken into consideration? Mr. BURLESON. It was not; no.

Mr. MANN. Probably an additional amount will be required if they carry out the desire to have the flags brought up to date. Mr. BURLESON. I think they will use the old flags until they are worn out.

Mr. MANN. I suppose they are waiting until Arizona comes. I notice the flag that hangs over the Speaker's desk is out of date now

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that this appropriation will not be available until the end of the fiscal year 1912, which is June 30, 1912. This appropriation is for the fiscal year 1913, which commences on July 1, 1912, and by that time we shall doubtless know exactly how many stars ought to be on the flag, and then the school authorities can buy the flags bearing the requisite number of stars.

Mr. MANN. We know already how many stars there will be in the flag for many years to come. There is now one new State, and shortly there will be another. That is settled. will have to change the flag accordingly.

Mr. BURLESON. I have no doubt that they will purchase flags with the proper number of stars upon them.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I will state for the information of the gentleman from Illinois that the board estimated $800, and we did not cut it at all. That estimate did not contemplate a change of the flag, but there are a number of old flags now in use, and I presume this $800 will be applied to the purchase of flags with the proper number of stars. At the end of that time the present flags will be replaced by correctly starred flags

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance and repairing 36 playgrounds now established, $1,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, as to the item for grading, equipping, and improving six additional school playgrounds, $900, I reserved a point of order long enough to ask the Chair

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Kentucky that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Willis] moved to strike out the last word, and that was adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, how could be get the floor to move that amendment when somebody else had the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will always recognize anybody who desires to reserve a point of order and will give preference

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think I would have a right at least to make that motion and withhold it if I could get the floor. But somebody else, whom the Chair had previously recognized, had moved to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, it is a familiar rule of the House that a point of order must be either reserved or made.

The Chair was not aware of the fact that the gentleman from Kentucky sought to make a point of order. The Chair will ask the gentleman did he seek recognition of the Chair?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I did not, because the Chair recognized somebody else, and I thought while the Chair recognized somebody else I was not entitled to recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires information. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to move to strike out the last word?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No. I desire to know if the Clerk has finished reading lines 20 and 21, on page 54?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the Clerk has completed the reading of those lines. Does the gentleman desire to make any motion relative to those lines?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For utensils, material, and labor, for establishment and maintenance of school gardens, $1,000.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, did I not just ask the Chair if the Clerk had finished reading lines 20 and 21? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did ask that question, and the Chair stated that he was informed that the Clerk had completed the reading of those lines; and then the Chair desired to know if the gentleman wished to make any motion or point of order in regard thereto.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; I asked if the gentleman made any point of order as to the line covering the equipment, grading, and improving six additional school playgrounds.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desired recognition to make a point of order as to lines 20 and 21, or to elicit information in relation thereto, the Chair will recognize the gentleman. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 23, page 54, strike out the words "one thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twelve hundred."

Mr. BURLESON. I reserve a point of order on that, Mr. Chairman

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the point of order disposed of

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman may dispose of it. It is not subject to a point of order, but I want to discuss the

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I must ask for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can discuss the Why is that reduction made? matter.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman-

Mr. CARLIN. I demand the regular order on the point of

Mr. BURLESON. I will withdraw the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws the point of order.

I will state to the gentleman from Ohio Mr. BURLESON. that for a number of years this item has been carried, appropriating $1,200. It attracted the attention of the subcommittee, and the matter was considered, and we reached the conclusion that for the service that was being rendered, for the persons being served by the conduct of these school gardens, $1,000 was ample for the fiscal year 1913. It has become recognized as a ample for the fiscal year 1913. It has become recognized as a part of the school system of the District of Columbia to conduct these school gardens, but the $1,000 is appropriated for the purchase of implements and seeds, and our understanding is that they have gone to the extent of employing certain labor that we thought ought to be performed by the pupils who are being taught; that for the pupils to get the full benefit of the appropriation it should be reduced, so that they should not employ the ordinary labor that they are now employing, and that the pupils themselves should be permitted to benefit by the performance of these light labors that are required in the management of these school gardens. That was the consideration which moved the Appropriations Committee to make the reduction. We really believed those who are to be benefited by them would receive a greater benefit if this reduction was

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt at all that the committee were moved by the loftiest considerations in making this reduction, but the explanation now offered by my friend from Texas is at any rate not satisfactory to me. At a time when this movement in favor of teaching agriculture in the schools is extending all over this country-

Mr. BURLESON. This has no relation to agricultural education at all.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman is mistaken about that, because I have taken the pains to inquire, and that is precisely what it does relate to. I talked this morning to the person who has charge of this work, and that is precisely what it does relate to. And at a time when every other city in this country, so far as I um informed, is taking an interest in this matter, is appropriating more money, is doing the best it can to get the boys and girls in the cities interested in country life, bringing them in touch with the soil and getting them to have their gardens and to raise vegetables and flowers, and get the advantages that come to the boy who lives in the country, I think it is a very poor time to practice economy in this particular to the extent of a couple of hundred dollars.

Mr. BURLESON. The very purpose of this reduction was to bring these children into more intimate contact with the soil. It is in order to give them the practical advantages that really ought to come to them. And if the gentleman's own children are interested in this item-

They are not. Mr. WILLIS.

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman would consult with his own children about it, I am quite sure they would approve of the reduction that is being made in this item.

Mr. WILLIS. Can the gentleman tell me how many school children there are in the city of Washington? I have not had time to look up the statistics.

Mr. BURLESON. There is an enrollment of about 55,000. Only about 53,500 come from within the confines of the District of Columbia. About 1,450 live beyond the limits of the District of Columbia, but are attending schools here.

Mr. WILLIS. Say there are 50,000 children. Mr. BURLESON. The appropriation heretofore carried for this item has been expended to supplement the salaries of certain teachers who interested themselves in this work, which is right and proper, and then a certain amount is used for the purchase of garden seed, and a certain amount is used for the purchase of the lighter garden utensils. Then, as I understand it, a small amount of it is used for labor. A part of it should properly be used for labor; but, as we understand it, an excessive amount has been used for labor, and we reduced it in order that the pupils themselves should not be deprived of the benefits of actually coming in contact with the soil, as the gentleman says is necessary in order that they may derive the full benefit from this appropriation.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's explanation is ingenious

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. It seems to me that when it is admitted that there are something like 50,000 pupils in this city that an appropriation of $1,000 can not be said to be a very good reason that further facilities and better advantages will be afforded by cutting down this meager appropriation. I have taken a little time to investigate this, and no doubt the committee has. There are conducted in this city, I think, five of these school gardens. There is one down on the Speedway, two in the northeast section, one in the southeast section, and another at Deanwood. I am not informed as to the exact number of pupils that participate in this work, but I do know that the pupils and teachers in this city have contributed out of their own funds in the past year more than $3,000 to carry on this work. I do know that teachers have worked when the law did not require them to work; that they have given their time, their substance, and their money to this work.

This appropriation is expended in the purchase of implements, soil, and fertilizers to be used in these gardens. I will say that the bulbs and shrubs that are necessary to be used in this work are purchased almost entirely by teachers out of the fund raised by their own efforts and by the pupils. This work has been going on within the past summer. In the hot season, when Members of Congress were running away to the seaside to keep cool, the boys made a percentage of attendance of 97 and 98 per cent working in the school gardens in the hot sun Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.
Mr. BURLESON. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that all of the 55,000 enrolled pupils do not interest themselves in the school gardens? They are conducted only through the summer months,

Mr. WILLIS. There the gentleman from Texas is mistaken; they are conducted the year round, except, of course, in the dead of winter, when it is not possible.

Mr. BURLESON. To what extent are they conducting them? Mr. WILLIS. Well, I know that you can not put onion sets in the ground in December, but so far as such work can be carried on they do it. They have boxes in the schoolhouse and in the laboratory in which the germination of seeds and the various phenomena of plant life are studied.

Mr. BURLESON. Of course they are conducting it during the period when it is necessary that vegetables and flowers should be planted, which is in the early spring, but the real service is had during the summer months.

Mr. WILLIS. The best service is had during the summer months, of course, but the work is carried on throughout the

Mr. BURLESON. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that we have appropriated year by year $1,200, and that for the last year we have appropriated over $5,800 for the purchase of utensils, and does not the gentleman think that is amply sufficient to supply all the garden utensils necessary?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I certainly have been unfortunate in the use of the English language if I have not made it clear that I do not think it is enough. I think the committee is very unwise if it cuts down this appropriation. Here in the Capital City, which should be a model for the whole Republic, when we are teaching agriculture in the schools, in the county institutes, when we are teaching it in agricultural colleges, and when everybody is interested in this except the Committee on Appropriations, it seems to me bad judgment to undertake to cut down this appropriation.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. YOUNG of Kansas.

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Has the gentleman in mind the number of pupils who avail themselves of the opportunity that is afforded in teaching agriculture in the city?

Mr. WILLIS: I will say that I have not any very definite information. I asked one of the teachers this morning, and he said that at least 300 were engaged in the work. They are not engaged occasionally, but they take the work and stay by it. They plant their vegetable and flower gardens; they raise the vegetables; they carry the vegetables and flowers home to their parents; and it is proposed that next year they may sell them and use the proceeds in further equipment for their school gardens.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. We might be able to determine whether this is a reasonable appropriation if we were informed as to the number of pupils who were availing themselves of the opportunity. If there are only 12, 15, or 20, the amount, of course, is ample. Mr. WILLIS.

Mr. W least 300. I can assure my friend that there are at

Mr. BURLESON. Well, at 300, that is $4 apiece. [The time of Mr. Willis having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. WILLIS. That is precisely the point I want to make—that if there are only 300 pupils out of 50,000 in this city who are engaged in this work the poorest way in the world to encourage more of them to engage in it is to cut off the appropriation and say to them that they can not have the tools or the soil or the fertilizer.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Would the gentleman be in favor of making an appropriation more than is necessary to supply those who avail themselves of the opportunity?

Mr. WILLIS. I am in favor of making the appropriation at least as much as it was last year; and, as I understand, every penny of that money has been expended, and the people in charge of this work tell me that the work is going to be tremendously hampered unless the funds can be provided.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Oh, they always tell you that. Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from Virginia says they always tell that. I have taken some pains to investigate this thing, and I investigated it before I ever saw the Halls of this Congress, and I say to you that you can not equip in any decent manner any considerable proportion of the pupils of a great city like this to do work of that kind with an appropriation of Mr. SAUNDERS. But the very figures that the gentleman adduces show that that has not been attempted, and the fact that he mentions that but 300 of these pupils are availing themselves of the opportunity shows the limit of the work. We found that within the limits of the work being actually conducted, in our judgment, so far as we could get information upon the subject, $1,000 was ample. If you are going into an extensive proposition, in an attempt to reach the 50,000 pupils of the city, then you must increase this appropriation many times.

Mr. WILLIS. I am not unreasonable about this. I do not suppose you are going to reach 50,000 pupils with an appropriation of $200 more, and it is not expected that will ever be done, but I do say it is the tendency in the educational work of this country that the teaching of agriculture in the schools shall be encouraged, and to cut off the appropriation is a mighty poor way to encourage it. These teachers have taken of their own substance, as I have said, to further this work. The teachers and the pupils have paid at least $3,000 out of their own money in the past year to carry on the work, to buy shrubbery to beautify the school grounds, to buy seeds and bulbs to help along the work, and the teachers have taken time out of their vacations when they did not need to work to carry on these school gardens.

Here is another thing. The biggest proposition in this whole thing is not the flowers that will grow about the school grounds, or the shrubbery, but the biggest proposition is the boy or the girl. If we can induce one boy or ten boys or a hundred boys, that otherwise would be idling away their time, to go into partnership with the soil, if we can take them away from evil habits and places and get them to admire the beauties of a single beautiful flower, to raise a single little garden of vegetables, we shall have accomplished very much and shall have started them on the road to good citizenship. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment which I have offered will prevail. It is not unreasonable. It simply puts the appropriation back where it was last year—simply adds $200 more than is recommended by the committee for the boys and girls and teachers of the schools of this great city.

It is announced that this District bill works a saving over the bill of last year of $1,642,378.50. I call attention to the fact that possible on this great city.

fact that nearly one-half of this amount, or $764,800, is taken from the appropriation for the schools of this city. It is a false and mistaken economy.

I desire to submit as a part of my remarks portions of the reports of the board of education to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and a statement on the value of school gardens as set forth in Farmers' Bulletin 218. The matter referred to is as follows:

REPORT ON SCHOOL GARDENS.

referred to is as follows:

REPORT ON SCHOOL GARDENS.

The appropriation by Congress of a definite sum for school gardens marks this year as distinctive in the history of the movement. It allowed the continuance of the work already established and the formation of seven new gardens in which children cultivate individual plots. These gardens are located at the Blow, Sayles J. Bowen, Cranch Annex, Birney, Jones, and Cardozo Schools, and one on a vacant lot at Seventeenth and Gale Streets NE., rented by the Noel House Committee. The gardens at all of these schools are continued by the children through the summer. A statement of the average amount of products raised in such gardens will be found in the last report.

It is to be regretted that by the terms of the appropriation no teachers can be employed to organize and systematically carry the work on during the summer. A summer garden school under the guidance of competent teachers familiar with grade work would give valuable opportunities to practically apply the regular grade work in number, literature, and geography.

There has been a marked advance in the use for educational purposes of the gardens around school buildings. The teachers are realizing their value in nature study and are letting the children bear more of the responsibility, the janitor less, except in summer. But few instances were noted last spring where the gardens were planted by the fanitors.

More intelligent work has also been done in the classroom preparatory to planting both home and school gardens. Teachers' meetings for all grades, both colored and white, were held in March, at which were presented simple experiments to teach principles of plant growth, soil culture, and plant chemistry. Very generally these experiments were repeated in the classrooms.

More and more each year the cultivation of individual plats is restricted to sixth-grade boys as a form of industrial work. During January and February all classes selected for the spring outdoor work were given half-hour lessons each we experiments. The lessons were carefully planned to be within the grasp of the children, and from the grade teacher's point of view were successful.

The first tree planting by the city schools was held on March 27. Mr. David B. Fairchild, agricultural explorer for the Department of Agriculture, presented a Japanese flowering cherry tree to every building in the city. Instructions were given a representative from each building on the correct method of tree planting.

The exhibit of flowers in the fall is still considered a necessary feature of the garden work. The home gardens are legitimate school work. Their success or failure should be known to the teachers. It is not possible to make personal examination of them, so their products are brought to school. There should be no plants exhibited not raised by children, and there should be no excessive effort at display. The element of competition does not enter, as in many places. These exhibits offer excellent opportunity for parents and teachers to become acquainted early in the year. Where principals and teachers have been so guided, the flower shows have been productive of much good.

The formation of a school-garden committee by the board of education, with Mrs. Justina R. Hill as chairman, gave official recognition the past year to the work. Largely due to Mrs. Hill's efforts, the first appropriation ($1,000) was secured from Congress.

In October the children were granted the privilege to purchase bulbs to plant in the school gardens. This strictly voluntary contribution was sufficiently generous to make creditable displays of tulips, hyacinths, and narcissus. Many teachers gave lessons in bulb' planting in window boxes and flowerpots for winter blooming in the schoolroom. The purchasing of the bulbs and seeds by the children affords the teachers the opportunity to give lessons in plant life, to encourage civie improvement and civic pride, and to teach most valuable ethical lessons.

By this means the rights of ownership are practically taught. The children are the owners and the planters of the gardens. They are taught to protect their own and to respect the property of their companions. Experience the last four years proves this to be the only way to successfully combat vandalism. There are numerous instances of school gardens having been ruthlessly destroyed the first year of their existence, but reports from the principals of buildings show that since the feeling of personal ownership has been developed such instances are rare. Reports are given of the influence of such teaching being felt in the neighborhoods adjacent to school buildings.

The school yards of the District have improved vastly since the garden movement was organized. The principals of buildings have worked faithfully to accomplish what has been done under many difficulties.

fienlties

worked faithfully to accomplish what has been done under many difficulties.

VALUE OF SCHOOL GARDEN WORK.

In any phase of educational work, the first question which presents itself is, What is the effect of the exercise or the study upon the pupil? Those who have had most experience in the school garden movement are emphatic in their statements regarding the educational value of this work. It is claimed that quick discrimination is one of the pronounced qualities resulting from it. Skill with the hands is necessarily an outcome. The handling of small seeds and of various tools naturally develops skill and agility. Systematic methods also follow from the natural order in which the operations conducted in the garden must be taken up. This not only develops a very important faculty, but at the same time teaches the young mind a logical sequence based upon the natural order of things. Industry is not an unimportant result which comes from school garden work. The idea of ownership and the rights of ownership, which come from the possession of a garden, induce the pupil to exercise his ability to make his possession as good or better than that of his neighbor. The natural result of this is industry. Business experience is an important result of harvesting and accounting for the products which are grown. The right of ownership and a respect for property rights are more largely developed from the possession of individual gardens than in community gardens. The idea that "what's mine is my own" becomes very strongly developed, with the natural sequence that such possessions must be properly protected and all rights concerned respected. On the other hand, a party interest in a community garden does not so emphatically develop the idea of individual responsibility, and each one has a tendency to care less for the plants which another has shared in producing, with the result that responsibility is shirked, and there is lack of interest, with a consequent lack of industry. For this reason, in our work from the very inceptio ments connected with the cultivation of crops are of no mean significance.

In connection with these operations, the teacher can illustrate the good and evil effects from certain methods of cultivation, of working soil when in good and bad condition, with the consequent effects upon growing crops; can demonstrate the value of deep and shallow tillage, together with the importance of maintaining a loose soil mulch for the conservation of moisture. In fact, the school garden should be looked upon as a laboratory in which the different steps in the life of the plant are to be illustrated and demonstrated. The nature of soil, the importance of fertilization, and the conditions essential to germination, as well as the conditions conductive to growth, can all be illustrated in a logical and impressive manner in the school garden.

Field excursions may be an ideal way for conducting nature study with reasoning minds that have been trained to a logical system and in a consecutive systematic fashion, but school gardens offer facilities not to be approached in field excursions. Field excursions give disconnected fragments of the history of natural objects, while the school garden furnishes opportunities for observing plants from seedtime to harvest. In addition to the actual operations in the school garden, a number of schoolroom studies and experiments may be conducted, which will be of decided interest and value.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Willis) there were—ayes 20, noes 31.

So the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

Buildings and grounds: For the purchase of land adjacent to the Brookland School, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order there to inquire of the chairman of the committee how much ground is now attached to that school for the purpose of recreation?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to state the number of square feet that they have available for a play-ground, but I will say to the gentleman that the subcommittee on appropriations passed by this school during their investigations of the street, and we made an examination of the situation, and were unanimous in agreeing that this purchase should be made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman thinks that the other is too small?

Mr. BURLESON. It is entirely too small.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. How much does this acquire? Mr. BURLESON. It acquires two lots of a certain dimension. I will state to the gentleman that the people who own these lots have no desire to sell them to the school for this purpose, and that the amount carried in the bill is the assessed value of the lots at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman and his committee visited the premises and examined them?

Mr. BURLESON. We did.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky withdraws the point of order and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completion of a normal-school building for colored pupils, $125,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 55, after line 18, by inserting as a new item the following:
"For the construction of a four-room addition to the existing Chevy Chase School building, $36,000."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing the gentleman shall make the point of order.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to ask for the regular order. I think we ought to know what the point is in order not to consume time.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for a rereading of the amendment

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BURLESON. If it is for an addition to a building already in existence, I do not think it is subject to a point of

Mr. Chairman, in the estimates which were made and in the hearings I understand the District Commissioners asked for $36,000 to construct an annex to this school building to be connected with the school building, stating that it is not practical to construct an addition, and that said annex was to be connected with the building. I consider that it could properly be called an addition, and thinking that possibly one item would certainly be subject to the point of order and the other might not be, I drew the item so that it will not be subject to the point order, and if the item goes into the bill an annex can be constructed as requested by the school board and connected with the building. Now, I have no complaint with the Committee on Appropriations in reporting this bill in the main. I have no doubt that, so far as the ordinary current work of the District is concerned, it will be performed under this appropriation bill as well as it is under the current law, but so long as we collect a certain amount of taxes from the people of the District which do not depend at all upon the amount we appropriate for governmental expenses in the District, the amount of the taxes being a fixed rate, it seems to me that we might every year do something in the way of public improvements and possibly expend the money which otherwise would simply pay off the floating indebtedness for this yearwhat it will be hereafter I do not know; I do not believe that the place to economize entirely is the school system. It was stated here the other day by the distinguished gentleman in charge of this bill that there were more accommodations for pupils in the schools of the District than were needed. Certainly that can not apply to Chevy Chase. What advantage is it to have an idle schoolroom in the center of Washington when you wish to educate children at Chevy Chase? Does anyone here pretend that the people who live at Chevy Chase have not the right to proper school facilities, or that they must send their children downtown to Washington that they may be edu-We have the money levied by taxation upon those peocated? ple, and it seems to me that we may well construct those buildings which are necessary for school purposes out of this money which we receive, and here we receive half of it by way of taxation.

I am willing to economize on a great many things. I recognize the fact that economies can be found and made in every department of the Government. I have no doubt that economies can be found and made in the school department in Washington and elsewhere, but we know what becomes of the money when it is put into a school building, where it can be used by school children, and it seems to me that is not the proper place to economize. I would not construct too many school buildings or spend too much money in any one year, but we can afford to spend money every year for school buildings when additional school buildings are needed. I hope that the committee will not resist the construction of this school building, which everyone who spends a summer in Washington ought to know is needed by reason of the development out in that part of the city. There has been a tremendous growth in population out there, and I believe we can well afford to authorize the appropriation of this money.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN Certainly.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Has the gentleman any means of knowing whether there are not many children attending the Chevy Chase School who reside in Maryland without paying any

Mr. MANN. I do not know. I know there are many children going to school in Washington belonging to Members of Congress, and I hope they will not be required to pay tuition.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The law gives them that right.

Mr. MANN. The fact that the law gives the right may give the right to anyone to attend this school, so far as I know; that is another proposition. I do not consider that it is an answer to the proposition to construct a school building for the benefit of school children in the locality to say that some other school children may use the building. I have observed from passing on the street cars a tremendous development of that portion of Washington, of actual population, and that population is entitled to school facilities. The last place at which we ought to stop those school facilities is here.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the committee that there is not the slightest desire upon the part of a single member of it to give one dollar less than is actually needed for the proper conduct of the schools in the District of Columbia; and especially were we anxious to provide ample seats for all the pupils attending schools within the confines of the District. This particular school to which the gentleman has alluded, and to which this amendment he has offered applies, is on the boundary line of the District, near the State of Maryland. At this time there is no excessive crowding in that school. On the contrary, the school has only about an average of 45 pupils to a room, and the proposed addition was to meet the future requirements of the school. But that was not the only consideration that moved your committee in denying an appropriation for this school. During the hearings the facts were disclosed showing that in the immediate neighborhood of this school there are residents of the State of Maryland who are contributing 1,450 pupils to the schools of the District of Columbia. These pupils avoid the payment of tuition which would aggregate, as stated by one of the school officials, a sum equaling between $50,000 and $60,000 by palpable evasion of the law

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. I want to ask the gentleman if any of these pupils of which he speaks come from Baltimore? That is the city he gave us the other day in comparison with the District as to the question of schools,

Mr. BURLESON. I am not sure whether any of them come from Baltimore or not, but I am quite sure, accepting the statement of the members of the school board, that there are 1,450 nonresident pupils attending the schools of the District of Columbia. I want to state in this connection that our attention was first called to the lack of economy in the use of publicschool buildings by a message from the President of the United States directing attention to the fact that we have an excessive number of schools in the District of Columbia, and directing attention to the fact that there was not proper economy used in the employment of the school buildings we now have in the District of Columbia. And I brought to the attention of the committee the other day, in the opening statement I made, the fact that we have a seating capacity at this time in public schools, owned, authorized, and in course of construction, to the number of 61,159, I believe, and that the average attendance, according to the school board and as stated in the commissioners' report, is only 45,000, or a small number in excess of 45,000. We made an actual test of the matter during the time that the committee was holding the hearings by calling upon the school board to furnish us data that would show the average attendance upon certain given days of last month.

The largest average attendance at that time was only about 49,000, or 12,000 less than the seating capacity of the schools now in existence. And we did not take into account portable schools or schools that are being rented by the school board in the District of Columbia.

We carry in this bill a provision that is going to relieve the stress upon the schools by providing that nouresidents shall pay tuition if they attend these schools. And when you consider the further fact that the power rests with the school board to rearrange the school districts in the city of Washington so as to relieve the pressure upon any particular school, so as to utilize the excess of seating capacity which now exists and is in excess of 12,000 seats, I can not understand the necessity, and I do not believe the committee will deem there is a necessity, at this time for constructing any additional schools.

Mr. CARLIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question, Mr.

Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.
Mr. CARLIN. I understood you to state that there were 1,450 nonresident pupils in the public schools of Washington. Of course, the gentleman knows the law permits nonresidents in case of officials and Government employees, and so forth, to send their children to the schools. Can you tell us how many of those are children of Representatives in Congress, Senators, and Government employees?

Mr. BURLESON. Under the law the children of Government employees are permitted now to attend the schools, and under the amendment we are proposing the children of Government employees will be permitted to attend the schools, and we have no desire to deprive them of that privilege.

Mr. CARLIN. But they are called "nonresident," and they are included in the 1,450, I assume, and I am asking if you know how many of the 1,450 are members of that class you have mentioned?

Mr. BURLESON. I will read to the gentleman the information we have upon that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. BURLESON. I will read to the gentleman exactly the information we have on the subject. Speaking of nonresident children, the question was asked, "How many there are in the And a member of the school board answered:

There are between 1,450 and 1,500 pupils who are not residents and get free tuition, and there are between 40 and 45 who are not exempted, and hence pay tuition.

Then the dialogue continues:

Then the dialogue continues:

Mr. Saunders. If the 1,400 were required to pay, what would be the amount they would have to pay per capita?

Mr. Hine. I think the average would be about $40 a pupil.

Mr. Saunders. That would be over $56,000?

Mr. Blair. I have the act of April 14, 1906, before me, which is the act that covers the matter we are discussing.

Mr. Burlesson. Was that act passed in 1907?

Mr. Blair. No; April 14, 1906. The language is as follows:

"That hereafter pupils shall not be admitted to or taught free of charge in the public schools of the District of Columbia who do not reside in said District or who during such tutelage do not own property in and pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia, or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in business or public duties therein, or during such tutelage pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia."

He sets forth the law which we propose to amend in this bill, which will relieve not the distress that exists at this time because I can assure the committee that there is no particular crowding of the schools at this time in that section of the city but the condition in anticipation of the future growth of the schools. As stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], there is indeed a rapid development taking place at this time, but it is largely beyond the confines of the District of Columbia, and is in the State of Maryland, whereas this growth is

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think the gentleman will find that the growth is in the District of Columbia. I frequently visit that part of the city. There is more growth here than there is on the other side. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] shakes his head at that, but I prefer to take my own opinion rather than accept his.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is largely a matter of opinion, of course. Mr. CARLIN. As I said before, Mr. Chairman, there are about 500 Members of Congress and Senators in Washington whose children are eligible to admission to the schools of the whose children are eligible to admission to the schools of the District of Columbia, and likewise the children of the large body of other Government officials, and I take it that those are included in this nonresident class. It seems to me that we may not be giving any relief at all to the congested condition that exists unless we have the exact facts in relation to the matter.

Mr. BURLESON. I think the impression of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] is erroneous. But even if it is not, even if these 1,450 nonresident students are permitted to attend the schools, I should say, in view of the fact that the disclosure is made before the committee that we have an excess of seating capacity of from 12,000 to 16,000, that there is no necessity for appropriating money for additional schools in the District of Columbia at the present time. It would be an easy matter to re-form the school districts, so that if there is a crowding of a particular school we could relieve the stress of that particular school by requiring the excess number of children who are now attending that school to attend another school, which may be located, in all probability, not more than a block or a block and a half away

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HAYES.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. BURLESON. I will yield in a minute. I brought out from the committee room a map which shows, as I am informed, the various districts of the schools now in existence, and a casual examination of that map will show that many of these schools are close to each other, and that it would be a very easy matter for the school board to re-form these districts so as to prevent the crowding of a particular school. During the recent investigation which the committee made in regard to the schools of the District of Columbia the attention of the assistant superintendent of schools was directed to the fact that we had an excess seating capacity at this time; and in answer he said, Oh, yes; if we could move the schools it would be many years before we would ask for additional buildings." You can not move the schools, but I submit to intelligent members of this committee this proposition, that it is a very easy matter to move the lines of the school districts so as to equalize the attendance of the enrolled pupils of the District of Columbia upon the various schools that are now in existence.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HAYES. Is it not true that the bulk of this excess seating capacity is in the older parts of the town, whereas the rapid growth is in the newer portion of the town?

Mr. BURLESON. That is true.

Mr. HAYES. That does not make any excuse, however, for not providing sufficient capacity in the newer sections of the

Mr. BURLESON. I would say to the gentleman that the rearrangement of the school districts that I speak of would permit the excess of pupils to be removed from the districts that are now crowded and allow them to be accommodated in districts where there is no congestion of pupils.

Mr. HAYES. But the gentleman would hardly advocate making it compulsory on students in Chevy Chase to come down to the center of Washington where this excess seating capacity is.

Mr. BURLESON. I invite the attention of the gentleman to the map, and he will see that between Chevy Chase and the section he refers to there are probably 40 schools. The Committee on Appropriations would not ask the children to go from Chevy Chase to the center of the city, but we would ask them to go to one of the schools nearer by, and we think that is reasonable. I confidently submit to this body, in view of the fact that the District Commissioners have brought information, right in the presence of the school board, that we have an excess of seating capacity now of from 12,000 to 16,000 seats, there is no necessity at this time for additional school buildings,

Mr. HAYES. One more question, if the gentleman please?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. HAYES. I gathered from the statement that of the 1,450 nonresidents only 50 are liable to pay tuition under the

Mr. BURLESON. Under the law as it exists now.
Mr. HAYES. And the gentleman can not advise us as to the other 1.400?

Mr. BURLESON. I think there is a palpable evasion of the law on the part of many of those who are benefiting by it. In fact, one of the school board stated that 5, 6, 8, 10, or 12 heads of families would chip in and buy a $50 lot in the District of Columbia, and then avail themselves of the letter of the law, and claim that their children should be permitted, under this law, to attend the schools of the city of Washington. I think, as a matter of fact, that is a violation of the law. say the least of it, it is a palpable evasion of the law. Now, I submit this map to the careful scrutiny of the members of this committee, and I confidently believe that we are not hampering the schools in the slightest, that it is only fair economy to refuse the appropriation for additional school buildings until they utilize the seating capacity that they have at this time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this amendment goes to the extension of the school at Chevy Chase. As I stated in discussing the general terms of the bill, the committee were by no means unanimous on the question of the schools. minority members thought that all but one of these projects for new school buildings should have been included in the bill. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the withholding of this appropriation is not economy. Some of these schools may not be as necessary as the others, but I have a distinct recollection of the information brought out before the committee, and my recollection is that the Chevy Chase school is not one of those where there are any empty seats. On the other hand, that school is full up, and complaint is being made that the children across the District line in Maryland who have access to the schools are crowding out the children living in the District who desire to go to the Chevy Chase school and other outlying schools and making it impossible for them to have comfortable school facilities.

To bear out that statement there is an amendment proposed in this bill which does away with this influx of 1,400 or 1,500 nonresident pupils, and that was put in by the committee after discussion of the advisability of giving to the children actually residing in the District the first chance to have comfortable school facilities, and not permit these outlying schools like Chevy Chase to be overcrowded by children from Maryland, who are allowed, by a very loose law, to come in and take the benefit of education in the District schools.

We are told that there is an excess of seats. excess of seating capacity. I have no doubt that that very condition applies in greater or less degree to every growing municipality where the center of population is shifting; but it is evident that the excess of seats largely applies to that portion of the city which at one time was residential, but which by the natural change of a growing city has become more or less a business community, and where the families which for-merly furnished the school children have moved away to outlying portions of the District, surrendering that more central portion to business purposes.

In other words, we have buildings here that should be sold, because they are not placed right for children; and in these buildings is where the empty seats and rooms exist. Again, in taking care of the rapid growth out in the suburbs we have built schools not just for the actual number of children living there when they were authorized to be built, but schools in anticipation of the normal growth of the immediate community in which the schools are placed, and in those outlying schools are vacant seats and rooms. There is one at Randle Highlands which has a number of vacant seats. It was built in a sparsely settled neighborhood, which is growing up to it.

Now, at Chevy Chase, if they are crowded out, where are they There is no school within several blocks-I do not know whether it is colored or white-but the great bulk of schools are in the heart of the city, and children should not be compelled to ride from what is really the country into the city and back again at night to get an elementary education.

Mr. CARLIN. And pay car fare. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Yes; and pay car fare or walk. When the committee was out investigating this matter, there had been a lot of mud and the roads were frozen up sufficiently for the committee to make the trip. I remember calling attention of those in the car in which we were making our inspection to a little girl walking along with a lunch basket way out near the District line somewhere, who was covered with mud up to her knees. That child had been to school, and it was in a portion of the District where there was no sidewalk and no pavement, and she was walking through the mud to and from school.

Now, the children ought not to be permitted to suffer that discomfort. I believe in bringing the schools to the children. I have objected, as I stated in my remarks the other day, to the vast number of schools of a small type. I believe we should reduce the buildings by building larger schools and taking care of more children under one roof. It costs more to build a large schoolhouse, but it costs less to run one with a number of large units than it does to run a multitude of small schools. This is for an extension of a school, and for one I voted against its exclusion, and I believe that it should be placed in the bill, as provided for in the amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to certain facts in this connection. The House can not act wisely, unless it is apprised of the facts. The members of the Appropriation Committee have as much interest in the schools, and in affording school facilities in the District of Columbia as any other Members on this floor, and when they took up this investigation they earnestly desired to arrive at the essential facts.

There is a tendency on the part of most school authorities to multiply schools. We had that trouble in my own State to such an extent that we had to set to work to remedy it. It has been admitted that this tendency has operated in the past in Washington—that an unnecessary multiplication of schools has taken This is admitted on all hands.

With respect to this particular proposition namely the Chevy Chase School I wish to bring to the attention of the House the fact that so far as any information has come to the committee, it is the least deserving of all the requests for additional buildings. Should we grant the request of this particular school, there are a number of other requests which rest upon a stronger foundation of merit, and which it would be impossible for this House to refuse to grant when they are reached. This I repeat is one of the least deserving propositions of a number of the same character.

With respect to the facilities for children at Chevy Chase, there is no desire on the part of the Appropriations Committee to limit these facilities, but it is easy enough by a rearrangement of tributary school territory to afford school facilities to every child in the city of Washington, and at the same time not require any one of these children to travel an unreasonable dis-

What the committee has in mind, having reference to another branch of the discussion this evening, is to reach by an amendment which is proposed in the bill, an abuse in this city. is no intention to interfere with the people entitled to the use of the schools, who have been referred to by my colleague from Virginia [Mr. Carlin]. We have no desire to take away from a single person now entitled to send his children to these schools, any right to which he is entitled under existing law. But there is an abuse in progress which was called to our attention in connection with this very Chevy Chase schools hearing, and that is the influx into the District schools of children from outside of the District who are not fairly entitled to the use of the schools. Under construction of the present law any parent paying taxes in the city however trifling or insignificant those taxes may be, has the right to send his children into the city, and load up these schools. This I say is an abuse, and that abuse accounts for the supposed overcrowding of some of the We propose to reach that situation. So far as the committee can do so, we do not propose to allow a man to buy $5 worth of property in the city of Washington, and then claim the right to send an unlimited number of children to the schools of the District of Columbia. Yet that is the situation which is possible to-day under existing law.

Mr. DYER, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he has the figures there as to the number of vacant seats and when this estimate was made?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Vacant seats where?

Mr. DYER. In the public schools.
Mr. SAUNDERS. They were furnished in the course of the hearings. So far as we could get them they are with reference to the existing year.

Mr. BURLESON. They are at page 283 of the hearings.

Mr. DYER. Does that include the portable schools and the schools held in the basements of buildings?

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman speaks of "basements of buildings." We examined some of the basements of these school buildings and found that they are really the first story of the building. The use of the word "basement" is calculated to leave a false impression.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is absolutely misleading, and that is all there is about it.

Mr. BURLESON. I will read to the gentleman exactly what was said upon this subject:

Mr. Thurston. I do not know exactly. We have the information in the office and can furnish it.

Maj. Judson. In Nowember, 1911, there were 58,963 desks in schools publicly owned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. I continue to read:

Mr. Burleson. In November, 1911? Maj. Judson. Yes, sir; 58,963; 1,824 desks to be provided in build-ings under construction and 396 in buildings appropriated for and about to be constructed.

That makes 61,183 in publicly owned buildings, exclusive of portable schools and rented schools.

Mr. DYER. And that was at what time?

Mr. DYER. And that was at what time?
Mr. BURLESON. In November, 1911.
Mr. DYER. And the total enrollment was what at that time?
Mr. BURLESON. The total enrollment at that time was something in excess of 50,000, according to the school-board report, which is mentioned in the report of the District Commissioners. The average attendance last year was something in excess of 45,000.

Mr. DYER. Has the gentleman there the report of the school board upon that question?

Mr. BURLESON. The report of the school board has never been lodged with us. I do not think it is ready.

Mr. DYER. I think the gentleman's estimate is wrong. I think the information is wrong.

Mr. SAUNDERS. We got it from the school people.
Mr. BURLESON. This statement was made in the presence of the school board, and there is absolutely no division of opinion about it.

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman that my information from some examination of this is that in October, 1911, the total number of seats in schoolhouses owned by the District was, outside of those in basements and portable houses, 54,039 and the total enrollment 52,771. That makes an excess of 1,268 seats over the total enrollment, excluding those in basements or in portable houses.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that I now hold in my hand the report of the commissioners, and on page 20 the statement is made, speaking for the fiscal year 1912, that at the beginning of that fiscal year the average daily attendance was 45,436, which was distributed as follows, etc., and that was taken from the school-board report.

Mr. MANN. For 1911.

Mr. BURLESON. For the beginning of the fiscal year 1912.

Mr. MANN. For a year ago—not for this winter. Mr. DYER. The gentleman does not mean for October, 1911? Mr. BURLESON. That was for the beginning of the fiscal year of 1912; and in November, 1911, they had a seating capacity of 61,183, or 16,000 in excess of this number.

Mr. CARLIN. But the gentleman does not seem to understand he is quoting the daily attendance and not the enroll-The total enrollment is in excess of the daily attendance.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is true but that does not mean any-That does not give you the attendance which is always less than the enrollment, and frequently much less. Now, Mr. Chairman, the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyer] illustrates what I said a moment ago as to how necessary it is to have the essential and real facts for an intelligent opinion. The suggestion that some children are being taught in the basements would carry to the minds of the average Member of this House the idea that there was something undesirable in that situation, and yet when we come to ascertain what is meant by basement we find that it is the first story of the building.

So far as my own judgment goes, it is often the most desirable portion of the building. When we went through the city looking over the public-school buildings we found out for the first time what a basement really was. I wish to say further, in connection with the Chevy Chase proposition, that the representatives of the schools merely said in that connection that they were getting ready for what they thought would necessarily come by reason of the growth circumjacent to Chevy Chase, and not that there was such a present pressure that this was necessary at this time to add to the Chevy Chase building. As a matter of precaution, they said they wished to get ready for the future. get ready for the future. I repeat, with respect to this proposition, that it is less meritorious than other propositions that were before us for extensions and additions to buildings. Should we give Chevy Chase what is asked, there are others that in reason we can not deny. I will read for the informa-tion of the House what Mr. Blair said in connection with Chevy Chase has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended. My five minutes has been taken up by other gentlemen.

Mr. BURLESON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Blair said:

The next is the Chevy Chase School, where conditions are such that we are simply preparing for what is certain to be inevitable. We started out there with a new four-room building, and then we added four more, and now we have an enrollment there that averages 45 to the room.

Without giving any idea what the actual attendance is.

That section is growing very rapidly. Under the law, as the committee knows, any resident of Maryland who obtains a livelihood in the District of Columbia has the right to send his children to the District schools, and Chevy Chase is growing very rapidly on both the Maryland and District sides.

This will answer the statement made on the floor that Chevy Chase was growing more rapidly on the District side than on the Maryland side. Mr. Blair did not seem to see any distinction in that respect. He further says:

That school out there is one of the rapidly growing schools. This will make a 12-room school. As you know, a large number of people have gone out there for their homes and live in that neighborhood almost exclusively. They are now property owners there and are permanently located at that point.

This presents the situation with respect to Chevy Chase. The same sort of situation only in stronger form exists with respect to a number of other schools. We denied these extensions, because the situation can be met in another way, and there is in contemplation the erection of buildings of such a character, and so located that they will meet the situation for years to come. In the meantime we should not multiply needless small buildings. Such a policy is most unwise, when by adjusting the territories tributary to the schools the whole situation may be adequately met without hardship. I submit therefore to this House that a case has not been made out for Chevy Chase, and the figures that have been given by others of the available school room in the District, very clearly indicate that at this time we do not need to erect more buildings. Mr. COX of Ohio rose.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit, the Chair assumes that the gentleman rises to oppose the amendment?

Amendment?

Mr. COX of Ohio. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps, under the custom, it would be proper for the Chair to recognize some one in favor of the amendment before the gentleman from Ohio speaks.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. If some gentleman desires to address the

The CHAIRMAN. It some gentleman desires to address the House in favor of the amendment—

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for me to make a motion? I want to move that all debate upon the paragraph and this pending amendment be closed in the next 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves that all debate on the paragraph-

Mr. MANN. I shall want some time.
Mr. CARLIN. Well, I will make it 15 minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves that all debate on the paragraph and pending amendment be closed in 15 minutes

Mr. CARLIN. I do this, Mr. Chairman, because there are four or five others, and we want to get through with this if

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I think this is an important matter, and I hope there will not be a limitation upon the debate. Two members of the Committee on Appropriations desire yet to be heard, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is entitled to conclude the discussion on that side.

Mr. CARLIN. I withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin] is withdrawn, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyer] is recognized.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the committee's attention for a minute to what I believe is the unjust and unfair policy of the Subcommittee on Appropriations of the District of Columbia with reference especially to the public schools.

I have examined the figures and facts set out in various reports of various cities, and I do not find the extravagance of which the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of that committee, endeavored to convince the House in his statement. I believe the city of Washington should have as good—if not better—public schools as any other place in this country, because of the fact that it will be a benefit to the whole country. The children who are educated here, a great many of them at least partially, live here for a year or more, because of their parents being in the public service, in Congress, or somewhere else, and if they get the benefit from the public schools here it will be a benefit to the whole country.

The Congress of the United States in 1906 appointed what was known as a schoolhouse commission for the purpose of studying the situation here as to the schools in the District of Columbia. That commission has its report in Senate Document No. 338, and they go into great details as to various cities that they visited, the schools that they examined, the buildings and everything in connection with the public-school system. That commission made its report to Congress, and I want to call the committee's attention for a minute to one portion of their recommendation, especially with reference to the question that is now before this House, namely, cutting down the estimates for the erection of school buildings and the importance of building additions to those that are now erected. This commission in its report in part says:

At this point it seems desirable to the commission to make some recommendations in regard to the size of the appropriations. It is recognized that the expenses of conducting the public-school system in Washington are probably higher than in any other community, whether measured either by amount expended per child enrolled or amount expended per 1,000 residents of the District.

The commission sets out what it believes should be done and why it costs more here. Then it goes on and makes a recommendation to Congress in regard to appropriations which vitally affect this question at issue. The commission says further, in part:

The commission believes that an authorization for new school buildings and grounds for the fiscal year of 1909 should be made of about $1,000,000, and that about the same sum should be appropriated for each of the three or four succeeding years, after which time a normal basis will be reached of about $600,000 a year for new buildings, and from $100,000 to $150,000 for repairs to buildings—

And so forth.

These are the recommendations of the committee that examined the public schools of practically every city in this country, and which submitted their report in a number of volumes upon these questions, with illustrations of the various schoolhouses that they visited and examined in the various cities of

I feel, Mr. Chairman, that Congress, if it passes this bill, will not have done as much as it ought to do in this respect for the District of Columbia public schools. I do not believe that money is wasted in the public schools of the Nation by pro-viding superior buildings and equipments, and by providing good, living wages for the teachers. I come from a city [St. Louis] that is recognized by educators, public-school teachers, and those engaged in public-school work, as having the best public-school system as well as the best buildings in the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. DYER. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. This commission, Mr. Chairman, that made the examination under the authorization of Congress and at its direction, reported that it had examined all these schools and found the school buildings and the architecture, and so forth, in the city of St. Louis better than in any other place they had visited.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the committee to some figures as to cost, and so forth, of the St. Louis and Washington schools, taken from a report of the United States Commissioner of Education for 1910, which, from comparison, will show that the Washington schools are not overly expensive, when we understand the general scheme for education in Washington, with its requirement for two entirely separate systems of school buildings, and so forth, to wit:

Mr. Chairman, when the chairman of this subcommittee compared the public-school system of Washington with those of other cities, with regard to cost of maintenance, and so forth, he selected cities either much smaller than Washington or with inferior public schools, as well as some cities that have about 50 per cent of their children of school age not attending school. occurs to me that the gentleman should have taken the schools of such cities as St. Louis, Boston, and New York. No one wants the public schools of Washington, the Capital of the Nation, to be inferior to those of the best.

The board of education is charged with asking for too much money for the education of the children in the public schools of the District of Columbia. I do not think so.

The estimates for the year ending June 30, 1911, were $4,677,721. Almost one-half of this amount, $2,263,130, was for school buildings and grounds made necessary by the neglect of the past and the natural increase in enrollment. The board has never claimed that all this money is called for on account of the increase in school attendance.

THE NEGLECT OF THE PAST.

On the contrary, it is chiefly for betterments demanded on account of past neglect and to carry out the recommendations of the schoolhouse commission appointed by Congress in 1906, to get rid of 124 half-day schools above the first grade, to replace 18 portable schoolhouses with modern structures, and to make it possible to give up 96 rooms in rented properties which are insanitary and unfit for school purposes that money is

To show how the public schools of Washington have suffered from neglect it is only necessary to recall the fact that from 1805 to 1878—73 years—the schools did not receive a dollar of money or a single acre of public land, whereas up to 1906 the Government had given to the States and Territories 150,000,000 acres of public land for educational purposes. It is easy to see how far behind the Washington schools must have fallen in these 73 years, supported only by the taxes of its citizens and without any Government aid whatever.

The schoolhouse commission was appointed by Congress in 1906 and reported in 1908. It was made up of the then superintendent of schools, the Architect of the Treasury, and the engineer commissioner. The report of this commission sheds some light on the large estimates for buildings made by the board of education for the past three years and for which it is now censured. The money asked for by this governmental commission for school buildings was far in excess of that asked in any one year by the board of education.

A fair index of the condition and needs of the Washington schoolhouses is found in these facts:

The commission promptly condemned and recommended the abandonment of 24 buildings.

2. It also recommended the erection of new and modern high schools in place of the Eastern and Central.

3. It specifically recommended the appropriation of $3,655,000 for buildings, fully one-half of which was to replace the dilapidated structures which were condemned as unfit for use.

4. On page 22 of its report the commission says:

It is, however, certain that Washington has not been spending as much money in the construction of new buildings as have most other progressive cities of the country. It is believed by the commission that in 10 years the District has fallen behind in the construction of new buildings to the extent of at least $2,000,000.

On page 30:

In Washington, notably in the older schools, playground space is notably delicient. Instead of an eight-room building having 12,000 square feet of play space, not a few have scarcely 1,000 square feet. About half of the buildings should have additional playgrounds. The commission recommends an appropriation of $200,000, in order to acquire for certain selected schools additional playgrounds, and that in future appropriation bills provision be made for the playground extensions to other schools until every elementary school shall have a proper playground. playground.

HALF-DAY SCHOOLS.

It will take $500,000 to erect buildings enough to accommodate 126 half-day schools which should be whole-day schools.

RENTED BUILDINGS.

It will take $600,000 for buildings to take the place of 96 rented rooms, none of which are suitable for school purposes

I feel great interest in the schools of Washington, Mr. Chairman, because of my membership upon the Committee on the District of Columbia. During the discussion here it has been hinted that the committee of which I am a member has failed in discharging its important functions. I have noticed two or three important items stricken out of this bill on points of order, and I have no criticism to make of those who made the points of order, because they were perfectly within their rights. But upon the question of doing their full duty the members of the District Committee have received some criticism.

I want to say to those upon the other side of the aisle that the members of the minority in that committee, of which I am a part, have been at all times ready and willing to do their full The committee consists of 21 members. The Democratic majority has taken 14 of those and given the Republicans 6 and the Socialist 1, so that the responsibility for anything that is accomplished on behalf of that committee, or not accomplished, goes to those who have it in charge.

I have devoted some time to visiting the public schools, examining the buildings, the equipment, and so forth, and seeing the children at work in the normal schools, the high schools, and all, and I am satisfied that the Government is not to-day doing as much as it ought to do for the public schools. The public schools of the United States are the great bulwarks of intelligence, liberty, and free speech, and do more to preserve peace and prevent war, sickness, and distress than all other agencies combined. Hygiene, cleanliness, preventions of disease, as well as knowledge of reading, arithmetic, and sciences of all kinds, are taught in the schools. The children are taught to honor and love their coutnry, and, in my judgment, Congress should be liberal in appropriating money for the public schools and for We should have the best buildings obtainable, the best equipments, and the best teachers. There is no other force in the world that does as much good for our country and its institutions as does that of the public-school teachers.

I ask permission, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks by inserting an editorial from the St. Louis Times of the 13th instant, upon the subject of the teachers of the public schools, as being fully in line with my remarks upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyer] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

THE TEACHERS OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Civilized as we are in many ways, we have never gotten away from that barbaric instinct which exalts war as the greatest and most admirable expression of patriotism. Prompted by this instinct, we spend over 70 per cent of Federal revenues upon war, its preparations, and its results.

This is done under the specious name of patriotism, that the country may be saved and preserved.

Meanwhile the real potent forces that are actually saving and making possible our advance in civilization are working in quiet and with but scant recognition of their service. Not only are the public schools of the country the most important factors in making American citizens of our own children, but they are doing likewise for the children of that vast number of foreigners that annually flood our shores.

Without this transforming we should have vast spots in our country of congested foreign-born population where American ideas and ideals were unknown. Under such conditions it is easy to see how difficult it would become to obtain an impartial and intelligent verdict at the polls on those numerous and serious problems which the voters of this country must finally solve, and how every effort of reform and progress would be continually thwarted and obstructed by ignorance and prejudice.

of this country must finally solve, and how every effort of reform and progress would be continually thwarted and obstructed by ignorance and prejudice.

Lest this picture be thought a mere figment of the imagination, we have only to examine the situation in the Province of Quebec, Canada, where the schools are in the hands of the reactionary elements and where the French-Canadian patois is the only language taught. As a natural result, the masses of the population are very much in the same state as when Wolfe and Montcalm battled on the Plains of Abraham, a century and a half ago.

Owing to the influence of the public schools in America, we find that the children of foreign-born parents usually refuse to learn the language of their parents, much less imbibe their ideas, and this because of their association with English-speaking children at the public schools.

There is a deep and fundamental connection between language and racial persistence and integrity, for in no way can inherited ideas be so transmitted as by language. All conquered races have realized this fact, and cling obstinately to their mother tongue as the last remnant of their nationality, because of the consciousness that the disuse of their language is but the prelude to amalgamation with their conquerors.

The church does not help us very much in the matter of assimilation of that crude material that is constantly thrust upon us in the shape of emigration, since the church is naturally a conservative rather than a constructive force, and segregates the different elements into bodies speaking their own language and officiating in their own tongue.

National solidarity can only be had with an universal and common language, and this is the spirit of advanced thought, of scientific education, of progressive methods, and, best of all, of democratic ideas which the public-school teachers so thoroughly inculcate. When we talk of those who are "saving the country," let us not forget that the public-school teachers lead all the rest.

Mr. COX of Ohio.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] shows clearly that he purposes making an issue of the economies worked out by the subcommittee in dealing with the public-school system here. The friends of this bill will meet that, and I make the prediction now, that with the developments of the next 12 months, revealing as they will the extravagances in the public schools in the city of Washington, the position of this committee will be eminently and well justified.

The subcommittee gave to no other part of this bill as much attention as it gave to the part relating to the public schools. It was the belief of the committee that extravagance has run wild in the conduct of the public schools of the District of Columbia. The committee, I should say at this juncture, was greatly pleased with and impressed by the strong executive force of the new superintendent of schools, Dr. Davidson; and we believe that as the result of his administration here our opinion in this matter will be shown to have been well based

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. COX of Ohio. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. WILLIS. It is stated in the report of the committee that the sum saved by this bill is $2,200,000 or more. By subtraction I find that the amount cut off on the item of public schools alone is $764,000. In other words, one-third of the total amount claimed to be saved in this bill comes from the public schools. Does my colleague think that that is about the appropriate proportion for the schools?

Mr. COX of Ohio. I think my amiable colleague from Ohio will agree perfectly with the committee when he knows the facts. The apparently large decline in the amount of the appropriation for the public schools is brought about almost entirely by lopping off two high-school buildings, because there was not any necessity for them, as was demonstrated by the evidence submitted to the committee.

We are perfectly willing to meet that issue when we come to There were carried in the bill two very large items, one for a colored high school and one for a white high school, and I think this committee can fully justify its position in cutting them out of the bill for this year.

The subcommittee sought to bring to its deliberations on the schools nothing more nor less than common sense and common business prudence. It developed that between 1,400 and 1,500 pupils were attending the schools in this District without any right to do so, because they were not paying tuition charges. We found this most startling situation, and I will read from the hearing what Mr. Blair says:

I know of one instance where four gentlemen paid $50 for a lot in the District and had it put in their joint names, and then claimed the privilege of tutelage.

I ask my amiable friend from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] and my distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] whether the committee were not acting within their rights and clearly in behalf of their constituencies when they sought to wipe out this Under existing law, if a person pays a dollar in taxes he is privileged to send his children to school free. It became a practice for a number of persons to join together in some purchase, involving a ridiculously low investment on their part, and in this way they made a travesty of the law. These are features of the present situation which this bill corrects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I offer a simple amendment for an addition to a school building. Thereupon my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox], commences to talk about "issues." He says, "We accept the issue." Why, everybody in the country has always known that the Republicans were in favor of education and the construction of school buildings, and that a large portion of the Democracy were opposed to both. It is not a question of accepting an issue. It did not require the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] that the mere offering of an amendment to provide for an addition to a school building was to be considered a national issue by the Democracy. One would have supposed that they might permit the employment of an additional teacher or an addition to a school building without considering it a national issue; but as long as they say they accept the issue we are willing to accept the issue.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] says there are other places more in need of a school building than this. The gentleman from Virginia is one of the best-informed and ablest Members of the House. Will he not tell us what the other places are?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes; with pleasure. I say this is one of the least meritorious.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said a few moments ago there were others more meritorious. What are they?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I say this is one of the least meritorious, and I propose to put in the facts which justify that proposition.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman which ones are more meritorious. Mr. SAUNDERS. If you will let me put in my facts, I think you will find the others which are more meritorious. Mr. MANN. I will not yield unless the gentleman is willing to answer my question.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I would have given the gentleman the desired information by this time, if he had permitted me to go ahead.

Mr. MANN.

MANN. Very well. SAUNDERS. According to the evidence before the committee upon which was based the request for an addition to the Chevy Chase School, that school has an enrollment that averages 45 to the room. If you will look on page 311 of the hearings you will see that the Petworth School has an enrollment of 64 pupils to the room.

Mr. MANN. There was no building recommended for Petworth?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes; they wanted one near there. the Takoma School building, that has an enrollment of 50 plus I can give you several more cases. to the room.

Mr. MANN. Very well, let us have them, where buildings were recommended. Which ones are the most meritorious? Mr. MANN. The gentleman has named the Petworth School, which is not in issue at all, because no addition was recommended there.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is in issue, because the facts show that it is more desirable to have an addition there than at Chevy Chase.

Mr. MANN. I am discussing the estimates.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I am giving you the figures. Mr. MANN. Now, the gentleman spoke of the Takoma School. Mr. SAUNDERS. I gave you figures, and I can give you some more.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman gives figures, but he might as well give me an arithmetic. Giving me an arithmetic would not furnish any information on the subject of the schools of Washington.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The gentleman asked me a question, but he does not give me a chance to reply.

The gentleman does not answer my question. Mr. MANN. Mr. SAUNDERS. The gentleman from Illinois does not give me an opportunity.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Virginia has used most of my time so far.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will leave it to the House to say how much of the time given me has been consumed on your part. Now in reply let me call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the following item: The next item for new construction is the Birney School building. That school is across the Anacostia River. In the main building at the present time is Anacostia River. an enrollment of 309. In this school is an enrollment of almost 100 more than the seating capacity in the annex. The gentleman will bear in mind that additional buildings are asked for here. Now this is a much stronger case than that of Chevy

Mr. MANN. That is what I want; give me the rest.
Mr. SAUNDERS. Well, I have given you three, and that is nough. The figures as to others are not immediately available.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman declines to give the information when he has the license to do so, if he wishes. I have asked him courteously for the information. A gentleman sitting near him who does not take the floor suggests to him that he decline to give it. The gentleman who does not take the floor is opposed to the expenditure of any money for schools. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not care to consume the time of the House in such badinage as is now in progress. I am trying to give the House serious information, to which it is entitled.

Mr. MANN. And I am trying to get from the gentleman serious information.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have given the gentleman the facts in relation to the Birney School, the Petworth School, and the Takoma School.

Mr. MANN. Yes; now give us the others, if the gentleman has anv.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will rest my case on those three schools.

Mr. MANN. Are there any other schools?
Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes; but I will rest my case on those.
Mr. MANN. The gentleman says that he has information of other schools, but he declines to give it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have given you the facts as to these three schools. They are sufficient to support the statement I made in the first instance as to the relative merits of Chevy Chase and the other schools for which additions are asked.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I am sure that the gentleman does not want to confuse the situation by any misstatement. What I said about an issue was the issue as between the opponents and the friends of this amendment; and I want to make this statement for one simple reason: There was no politics in this bill, and if the remark made by the gentleman with respect to my statement went unanswered, it would be unfair to the Republican members of the subcommittee, who gave us the most splendid cooperation in the preparation of this bill. There was no politics in it.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, the only excuse that has been offered against this amendment is that there are too many school seats now vacant in the District of Columbia and by a rearrangement they could provide all the school facilities at rearrangement they could provide all the school facilities at Chevy Chase, which everybody knows are needed. Here is Chevy Chase away out here on this map. What good does it do to have school seats in the heart of the city of Washington? You might as well have them in Texas, although goodness knows that they might not be used there. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURLESON. They are not needed in Texas quite as badly as they are in some other States that I know of.

[Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. They are not appreciated as much. No one can look at the map which my friend from Texas brought on the floor and say that any rearrangement of the school districts of Washington would provide for the necessary school facilities at Chevy Chase. Now, here is a proposition which the school board recommended of six additional school buildings this yeartwo to commence and four to appropriate for. There is not a line with reference to any of these new buildings in this bill. That is easy economy. It is pure political economy, however. There are no politics in the bill, and there ought not to be any politics in the bill, but the gentleman brings politics into the bill.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

I will. Mr. MANN.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to ask my friend and colleague if the statistics do not show that in the city of Washington there is an average of less than 22 pupils to a teacher?

Mr. MANN. Well, I would not be surprised if that was the case. I would not be at all surprised if they had too many teachers in the city of Washington.

Mr. FOWLER. If that be true, I want to know if there could not be an arrangement whereby all the pupils in the city of Washington could be well accommodated by making changes in the boundaries of the different districts.

Mr. MANN. I will ask my colleague if he has ever had the pleasure of going out to Chevy Chase?

Mr. FOWLER. That does not answer my question.
Mr. MANN. I think it would. If the gentleman has never been there I would say to him that Chevy Chase is way out on Connecticut Avenue, at the District boundary line. It is not possible to rearrange any school districts in the District of Columbia so as to get additional facilities for the people who live at Chevy Chase.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to have the gentleman answer my question.

Mr. SAUNDERS. There is somebody else now who will not furnish information.

Mr. MANN. I thought I had answered the gentleman's

Mr. FOWLER. I understand that nobody lives at Chevy Chase except the aristocrats. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman had made that remark before I would not have asked him if he had ever been out there. [Laughter.] It is perfectly patent out there that the population is not composed of aristocrats. Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, if there are any people in the United States who need education it is the aristocrat.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mann) there were—ayes 12, noes 36.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. ALEXANDER having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Garrett, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17681, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. Brown to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of the heirs of Edmund H. Chambers, Sixtysecond Congress, an adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, January 20, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

SATURDAY, January 20, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, as the years come and go which bring us nearer to the close of our earthly existence, make us wise and strong and pure, that with increasing faith in Thee and unbounded hope in the immortality of the soul we may run the race set before us with patience, courage, fortitude, and in all the relationships of life quit ourselves like men, and be fully prepared to enter upon the work Thou hast prepared for us in the great beyond. And eons of praise we will ever give to Thee in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. STERLING for one week, on account of death in family.

SHERWOOD PENSION BILL.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record a resolution adopted by the Illinois Division Officers and Camp 100, Sons of Veterans, United States of America, approving the Sherwood pension bill and thanking the membership of the House for passing it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if we adopt the policy of printing in the Record resolutions adopted by every association in the country, expressing its opinion of the Sherwood pension bill, the Record will be of such size that it will be impossible to handle it. I object.

The SPEAKER. Debate is out of order. The Chair asked if there was any objection, and heard none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. But it is too late.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I did not have an opportunity. The Chair did not give me time to object. I was on my feet to object.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman was on his feet to object, he is within his rights. The gentleman from New York objects.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by inserting an address delivered by Hon. SAMUEL W. McCALL, a Member of this House from the State of Massachusetts, before the Alexander Hamilton Memorial Association, in Washington, on January 11, 1912, upon the subject of erecting in Washington a monument to Alexander Hamilton.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech delivered by Hon. SAMUEL W. McCall upon the subject of erecting in this city a monument to Alexander Hamilton. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS ON ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

"It is proof that Alexander Hamilton has taken his place among what we call the immortals when more than a century and a half after he came into the world and more than a century after he left it his birthday is celebrated in so many places throughout the Nation he did so much to establish. In a strict sense, it is the beginning and not the ending of a career which we commemorate to-night. The beginning is enveloped in hope and fear; it has all the chance of failure or success, while the end has the certainty of achievement; the dangers have been passed, and the completed record is spread in the Lord Rosebery said upon the hundredth anniversary of the death of Burns that it was perhaps more fitting to celebrate the end and not the beginning, for 'the coming of these figures is silent. It is their passing that we note.' And yet we find ourselves to-night as if we stood on the day of the birth at Nevis filled with the spirit of prophecy and looking forward, tracing the full flight of the spirit until it came to its rest. We feel the fresh hopes of the coming and the gathering shades of the going, the dawn and the sunset and all the glory that lies between them, and we see, too, the workings of the great test of time, the estimates of the later generations of men. So when we celebrate the beginning we celebrate it for what came after; we celebrate the life and the deeds of the statesman, not merely as they were unrolled but as they appear in the light of their results.

"When men deal greatly with the eternal human problems, so far as such problems may be eternal, they are apt to involve their fame in almost eternal controversy. They put it on the their fame in almost eternal controversy. They put it on the ebb and flow of the ever-shifting tides of opinion. Systems of government are fundamental in their importance. They involve questions upon which men always have differed and probably always will differ. Those differences are greater where a sys tem is not the slow growth of centuries and adapted by time to conditions, but is a creation contrived at one time and set in motion by a single group of men. It was Hamilton's fortune to be identified with basic theories and basic policies of government perhaps more closely than any other statesman in our history. At a time when we had no real Federal authority and the affections of a large majority of our people were centered upon the States, he was the very genius of nationality. He, more than any other man, was the aggressive champion of a central government strong enough to establish with certainty a real unity among the States and to put an end to the discordant policies, the weakness, and even anarchy which then existed. He breasted the pride of patriotism held toward 13 small nations. He shocked the prejudices of men and achieved a political hostility which has not even now wholly disappeared. And then in that most critical time when the Constitution was to be put in operation as a practical mechanism, when the invention, which was only upon paper, was to be converted into a living instrument and the new and untried system was called upon to meet the most delicate questions in foreign policy and almost insuperable difficulties in our domestic affairs, Hamilton was preeminent in the part he took in setting the wheels of the Government in motion and starting the new Nation in the right direction. It required two generations to win forgiveness for the commanding part he played to secure a nationality which should have no ambiguity about it. Until the Civil War had defined the Nation to be what Hamilton desired to make it in the first instance, and what he strove to make it in Washington's administration, the estimates of the character of his work were almost equally divided between violent abuse on the one side and as violent panegyric on the other. Thus more than that of any other of our statesmen his fame has been in danger of partisanship both from friend and foe.

"In what may we best see the characteristic quality of his statesmanship? To my mind it is in his swift and unerring comprehension of complex and difficult situations and the surprising rapidity of his genius in providing a fit remedy. was not what might be called a political philosopher; at least he wasted little time in evolving abstract theories of government. But he brought his mind to bear upon exact conditions, and in dealing with them he showed himself to be the greatest practical statesman America has ever produced. The barest outline of his work will show its remarkable character.

When called to the Cabinet of Washington, it was not to administer an existing institution but to create one. It was necessary that the Government should have income, that it should have fixed the ways of collecting and paying out money; myriads of details were to be provided and great fiscal policies to be adopted. In the five years when Hamilton was at the Treasury he established that institution for all time. The most convincing arguments used in the campaign of 1896 against the silver monometalism that was put forth under the name of bimetalism were drawn from Hamilton's report upon the mint, in which he established the double standard. His funding of the debt against a powerful opposition created that marvelous thing, the credit of the United States, and the assumption of the State debts gave a most needed strength to nationality by leading public creditors to look to the National Government instead of to the States. His report upon the bank remains today as a model for a sound banking system. In his report on manufactures he marked out such an industrial nation as his country finally came to be.

"Hamilton was, in fact, Washington's prime minister and took the leading part in the important work of the other departments. When the war came between Great Britain and France there was a popular clamor almost irresistible in favor of our taking part in the struggle. Under Mr. Jefferson's policy we should have been swept into the vortex as an ally of France. Hamilton was, under Washington, the aggressive force which brought about the resolution of neutrality and saved us from a war that would have threatened our independence. leveled at him the taunt-terrible in those times-that he was a friend of England. But when English ships began to harry our commerce he instantly made a report to Washington recommending the fortification of our harbors, the raising of troops, and preparation for war. No country ever had a truer or a more vigilant friend, and when her interests were threatened he was ready on the instant to champion them against France or England or the world.

"It was a fortunate thing that there were then two schools to combat each other—the school of Hamilton and the school of Jefferson-but it was even more fortunate that the school of Hamilton had absolute dominion during the first eight years. Nothing less aggressive and strong could have coped with the appalling difficulties of that time. It was necessary that a hard impact should be made upon the governmental chaos in order to set the new orb grandly moving. Had the opposite school dominated at the beginning, its motion must have been feeble and erratic, and it is doubtful whether the Government would have continued for a generation.

"I have spoken of the attitude of Mr. Jefferson toward neutrality. Mr. Jefferson was a great philosopher, an unrivaled politician, but he was dreamy and contemplative, where Hamilton was practical and direct; and it was not strange that he rarely agreed with the policies of the latter. The difference in the mental operations of the two men was constantly showing itself, and it is well illustrated by their divergent views upon France. Mr. Jefferson for the five years preceding 1790 was in France as our minister. Hamilton was never there in his life, nor, indeed, anywhere outside of America and the West Indies. Two years before the French Revolution Jefferson made a tour of France, carefully investigating social and political conditions, and he wrote very amiably and philosophically about them. But, as Mr. Oliver says, he passed over the crust of the lava without reporting any sign of danger, and even after the fall of the Bastille he did not appreciate the gravity of the crisis. Yet Hamilton, before the news of that event had reached America, wrote a letter to Lafayette forcibly pointing out the elements of danger in the French situation. As Talleyrand said. Hamilton 'divined Europe.' His sure penetration and his celerity of action reminds one of nothing so much as of Napoleon in his early campaigns, when he astorished men by the energy of his genius.

"Hamilton had in him very little of the mere political theorist, of the kind of man who will unravel theories of government while you wait, who will open up beautiful vistas, but when you ask for a remedy will be nebulous and vague. He had an instinct for the real difficulty; his eye would instantly penetrate to the vital point, and he would pounce down upon it as unerringly as an eagle upon its prey. For him to think was "Nearly all men were impressed by the grave perils that enveloped the country after the treaty of peace. Most statesmen were overwhelmed by them, but Hamilton made himself a mighty force in our deliverance by at once proceeding to work for a central government. He is criticized for having proposed a constitution with strong centralizing features; but was it not just such a government as a great practical statesman would have proposed to meet the evils of that time? By his vehement stand it is probable that the Constitution was given the strength that it finally had. One has only to glance superficially at the condition of anarchy that pervaded the country for a half dozen years before the Constitution was established to appreciate the course of Hamilton.

"There was nominally a central government, but it had no real power. It had made a treaty of peace recognizing our independence, and it was unable to carry out its obligations. In spite of its agreement, States were passing laws in the very teeth of the treaty, and Loyalists whom the confederation had agreed to protect were hanged and shot and beaten and robbed. Laws were passed by the different States making it difficult for British merchants to collect debts. The soldiers who had fought on the fields of the Revolution were unpaid and dissatisfied; States were levying tariffs against each other, were disputing with each other over claims, furbishing up flintlocks, and some of them were upon the brink of war. They were hopelessly in debt and had nothing resembling public credit. Poverty was general and trade and commerce were near the point of extinction.

"The one unfailing resource usually called into play when public credit is gone was still left; they could issue paper money, and the printing presses were set in motion. There was indeed an era of magnificent prices. The farmer received $4 a pound for his meat, but when he desired to buy a suit of clothes he was compelled to carry his money with him in bales. This state of things could not have continued much longer without civil war and the destruction of our independence either by force from the outside or as a result of our own appeal to some foreign nation to deliver us from anarchy. The one thing that could deal with this condition of chaos was a central government which should have certain jurisdiction over the common concerns and be strong enough to stand before the world as a nation. Hamilton, with his practical statesmanshig, dealt his blow at the vital point. He proposed to meet fully the conditions that then existed; he proposed to put it beyond question that the laws of the National Government should operate upon individuals and that States should not have the power to nullify national laws or national treaties. Under his plan neither Mr. Jefferson nor Mr. Madison could have drawn up Virginia or Kentucky resolutions in which the doctrine of nullification was scarcely veiled and which lent strength to the forces of disunion. If it had not been for his powerful appeals after the convention in his speeches and in the Federalist, it is probable that the Constitution would never have been ratified, just as it is probable that it would never have been adopted but for his efforts before the convention was held.

"We are told to-day that he proposed too strong a central government. In the light of the development which a century has given us, it is probable that he did, but he was very frankly for the Nation. He had seen enough of 13 independent sovereigns operating under a single confederacy. It can at least be said that no war would have been necessary in order to adjudicate his meaning.

"The Constitution has shown its sufficiency to maintain a nation, because it has been developing in the direction of Hamilton's idea. It is certain that, as construed by Madison and others of the great men of that time, it did not clearly fix the relations of the National Government to the States. The Virginia and the Kentucky resolutions and the Hartford convention reflect the opinion, very commonly held before 1831, that the States under certain conditions might assume to nullify national laws. It was left to the eloquence of Webster to make popular the idea of union and the complete supremacy of the National Government within its sphere to animate millions of men to rally behind Lincoln in support of that certain nationality for which Hamilton had contended.

"There has been an important extension of national powers by reason of enlarged construction, changed conditions, and the great increase in the importance of the subjects to which those powers were directed. Some of us think that development has gone too far. Through the power of taxation, the regulation of commerce, and the other expressed and implied grants, and through the final supremacy which war has decreed, the central authority has greatly reduced the practical importance of the States. Thus the genius of Hamilton astonishingly persists even in that portion of his plan which was most generally disapproved. There has been with the lapse of time some shifting of sides. The most extreme encroachments upon State powers are sometimes proposed or sanctioned by his theoretical enemies, who each year plously and with many prayers render homage to his great political foe. Jeffersonian in theory, they would carry the centralization of Hamilton to practical lengths of which he probably never dreamed.

"Hamilton was very little of a politician and certainly not a great party leader. He was too direct and earnest; he was no master of intrigue; and if he could not manage men by an appeal to reason he could not manage them at all. He could not cajole and flatter, nor pretend to listen and sympathize when he did not believe. He entirely lacked the pose. He could not fade into the dim distance when the time came for bearing an unpopular responsibility. He was ready bravely to avow what he did. After his party, under his leadership, had accomplished its great work it was scarcely able to maintain its organization, but the results of his ideas survived in the existence and growth of the Nation.

"He was a fervent believer in free government. He would have men breathe the mountain air of free institutions and develop by liberal laws a powerful and diversified state such as alone should occupy our superb domain. He would have all power proceed from the people, but so proceed that it should not reflect mere impulse and immature opinion, leading to bad government, and thus make necessary the reaction to a less liberal form. The checks and limitations upon such hasty action as he had so often seen the States adopt he believed were necessary to the stability and success of a free government.

"His policies led to an amazing and many-sided development. Instead of having a nation composed only of cultivators, he aimed to develop a nation of cultivators and artisans, of merchants and traders; he contemplated a borrowing and a lending, an agricultural, a manufacturing, and a commercial state, in which all classes should contribute to the good of the whole. He would not have a system under which the few could oppress the many nor the many oppress the few, and to that end he advocated representative government.

"'The ancient democracies,' he said, 'never possessed one feature of good government; their very character was tyranny.' Under their system of direct government 'it became a matter of contingency whether the people subjected themselves to be led blindly by one tyrant or by another.' In the interest of real freedom and of popular rights he believed profoundly in the representative system.

"He easily takes his place among the greatest statesmen of history, but I imagine he would have made an even more superb and classical figure if he could at the same time have been a Member of one or the other of our two Houses and of Washington's Cabinet and have identified with his policies his commanding talent for parliamentary leadership. Without this blending of speech and action there is something wanting fully to season the fame of a statesman to our inherited tastes tastes which I think still linger in us despite an artificial distribution of the functions of our Government. The Executive thunders a message at Congress from one end of the Avenue and Congress roars back its answer in speeches from the other, and probably each a little more loudly because neither participates in the entire transaction, and because the whole event is not centered in one place where the leaders on each side contend for the issue. Such a system would have increased the appeal which Hamilton makes to the imagination. He undoubtedly was a very great debater. His achievement in the New York convention would alone establish that. It is true that events outside powerfully aided him. State after State had ratified, and while the convention was still sitting New Hampshire furnished the decisive vote, and Virginia, for good measure, was added. It was hardly credible that New York, then only the fifth State in population, should remain out of the Union, with Rhode Island for her only company in the North. But even then the conversion of an assembly which began more than 2 to 1 against him was an extraordinary achievement. His whole career as a writer and speaker demonstrated that his powers of reasoning and expression were remarkable. He would have shown himself in Congress unsurpassed as a debater. I doubt that he would rank so high as an orator. did not have quite the requisite touch of imagination and the genius for coloring. I question if there can be found in his speeches and writings passages which schoolboys learn with pleasure and which haunt and sweeten our memories throughout our lives, passages such as are scattered through Burke and Webster, and that carry you upon an easy wing as does that one from the Bunker Hill speech: 'Let it rise! let it rise, till it meet the sun in his coming; let the earliest light of the morning gild it, and parting day linger and play on its summit.

"In one respect no statesman was ever more fortunate than Hamilton. Probably he would have produced his financial and economic policies without the aid of Washington, but he never would have been able to put them into effect. Washington was the greatest man of his time. He has been surpassed by many other men in some single element of greatness. But there was never in any other man such a blending of great qualities, each in its due and exact proportions, and he had a regular and balanced genius that makes him unique among all figures of In the most trying times of peace and war he had revealed himself to his countrymen and they knew him as he was. Thus he had a degree of authority among masses of the people which was probably never attained by any other statesman. The policies of Hamilton were carried by the magic of Washington's name, and those policies were so out of touch with the ideas and passions of the times that even the influence of Washington was none too great. Washington knew Hamilton as only he could know one who, during long years of war, had held the most confidential place upon his staff. He knew Hamilton's strength and weakness. He knew how to direct and His marvelous good sense could provide the restrain him. His marvelous good sense could provide the needed touch to make the difference between success and failure. There were no two great men of history whose careers were more intimately blended. What a fortunate thing their union was for America. When we regard the one we are sure to think of the other. We look upon the grandeur of Washington's fame with the awe and reverence which a near approach to perfection inspires. We do not find in Hamilton that balanced greatness. But he had creative qualities in which he very structure and fiber of the Nation and of its Government. And his countrymen even yet feel the light and heat of his splendid genius." stands peerless among our statesmen. He survives to-day in the INSTRUCTION AT UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY, WEST POINT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following Senate joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 68) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy, at West Point, Mr. José Pasos Diaz, of Nicaragua.

West Point, Mr. Jose Pasos Diaz, of Nicaragua.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit Mr. José Pasos Diaz, of Nicaragua, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy, at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that the said José Pasos Diaz shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the courses in the various departments of instruction: And provided further, That in the case of the said José Pasos Diaz the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take up for consideration the joint resolution just read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it necessary for the gentleman to move; can not he ask it be laid before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary for him to move it. The Chair will consider the gentleman's motion as a request to lay the joint resolution before the House.

Mr. HAY. And I will state, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Military Affairs has reported a similar resolution, which is now on the House Calendar, and if there is no discussion about it I will move that the bill be passed.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Hay, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection House joint resolution 212 of similar tenor will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 17681) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

ing June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The question was put.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-nine Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 220, nays 0, answered "present" 5, not voting 166, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The vote will be changed accordingly.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 17681, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. Garrett in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday the question was on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 55, after line 18, by inserting as a new item the following:

"For the construction of a four-room addition to the existing Chevy Chase School building, $36,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. Burleson and Mr. Mann were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 55, noes 99.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the further amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 55, after line 18, by inserting as a new item the following:
"For the construction of a four-room addition to the existing Birney Building, $35,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in making their recommendations for this year the District Commissioners and the school board recommended six new school buildings, as I understand. The committee has just voted down a proposed amendment for an addition at the Chevy Chase School.

In the consideration of that amendment yesterday the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, stated that there was a much stronger reason for constructing this addition to the Birney School as now proposed than there was for the construction of the addition to the Chevy Chase School. I have no doubt that the able and versatile gentleman from Virginia will be able this morning to give excellent reasons why this addition to the Birney School should not be constructed. It is always perfectly patent that any gentleman can give reasons when he is determined to find reasons.

The schools of the District of Columbia are entitled to proper consideration at the hands of Congress. With six new buildings or additions proposed, the Committee on Appropriations has recommended not one. While I have no desire to detain the committee, it seems to me that we may well afford, having raised the money, to provide some new school buildings. I do not believe that the school board or the District Commissioners have recommended six new buildings when not one was re-

I would be perfectly willing to take the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations as between these buildings. the committee had recommended the construction of a single new building, or a single addition to an existing building, I should have been content to suppose that the committee had exercised its judgment in determining what ought to be done. But this situation is clearly the result of a determined purpose on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, or the majority members of that committee, to make no expenditures for school buildings, under the false theory that the people of the country will sustain them in a plan of so-called economy. The purpose in striking out all proposed new school buildings was not to take care of the necessities of the schools of the District but to make campaign thunder in reference to the amount of the appropriation. So far as the cuts are made on that side of the House or by the committees in the interest of true economy, I stand ready to support them, as I always have. But when, for the purpose of a campaign issue in the country, these gentlemen endeavor to strike down proper school facilities for the children of the land, I can not follow them. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I will not fatigue the House this morning with any extensive discussion of a matter that has already been thoroughly thrashed over. I will say, however, in respect to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], that it is the fixed and determined purpose of the Committee on Appropriations not to appropriate one cent for the schools that we do not think is justified by the necessities of the case. Having fully investigated this situation, so far as we could, and being assured that there was no such existing urgency as to justify at this time the erection of the buildings that were asked for, we have denied these applications and refused to recommend them.

This is all that there is to the situation. The gentlemen who think that the Committee on Appropriations has failed to provide needed facilities will vote against our findings. On the other hand the gentlemen who are satisfied that we have supported our recommendations by sufficient facts and argument, and that we are not treating the schools unjustly, will support the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations.

The committee, at least a majority of it, is entirely satisfied that by a slight rearrangement of the districts tributary to the schools, every child in this District can be provided with adequate school accommodations. No school child as the result of that rearrangement will be required to go an unreasonable dis-tance to attend an appropriate school. For the above reasons we have denied the request of the school authorities for additional buildings, and justify our action on the grounds which have already been presented to the House. There is no necessity for these additions. We rest our case, and leave the dedision to the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just one word. The Committee on Appropriations are necessarily limited in the amount of time they can give to hearings. They have not given hearings to the people of the District of Columbia in reference to these school buildings, and I have no criticism of that. Ferhaps it was impossible to do it; but they have had some hearings on the subject. They have had the statement made before the committee by Mr. Blair, who represented the school board. I believe his statement was the principal one made before the committee, and I leave it to the Committee of the Whole now to judge of the necessity of the addition which the amendment proposes. Mr. Blair said:

The next item of new construction is the item for the Birney School. That school is a colored school, situated in the southeast section, just across the Anacostia River; there is in the main building at the present time an enrollment of 309 and seats for 170, and an enrollment of 258, almost 100 more than the seating capacity, in the annex, which is a 4-room building and in which six classes now have to be taught. So that we are asking you for a 4-room addition to the Birney School for the purpose of taking care of an enrollment of about 565 in buildings that have a capacity for about 500.

Do gentlemen wish to take the position that these school children ought not to have seats in the schoolroom provided by us? The fact that they are colored children ought to be an additional reason for providing them with schools and an edu-

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to assure the Committee of the Whole that your Committee on Appropriations, in adopting the policy we have with reference to the schools. were not controlled by any consideration of hostility to the public schools or the public-school system. Neither were we moved by a desire to hamper them in the slightest in a proper discharge of the important functions which they are discharging toward the people of the District of Columbia. And I want to doubly assure the gentleman from Illinois that political considerations did not enter and were not taken into consideration in the slightest degree in determining the action that we took with reference to these school buildings.

The gentleman speaks about the hearings that we had. Your committee had certain data before them, which were controlling. We had the report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, showing that at this time we have 150 permanent schools and 18 portable schools owned by the District; that we also have 27 rented school buildings, or an aggregate of 195 school buildings in use in the District of Columbia at this time. Taking into consideration the fact that Baltimore, with nearly twice the population of the District of Columbia, has only 102 schools, with the same divisions there as to the races as in Washington, and taking into consideration the further fact that in Baltimore, after the children pass through the grades and reach the high school, there is, in addition to race division, a division as to the sexes, we were overwhelmed with the belief that it is unnecessary at this time to provide additional school buildings for the District of Columbia.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.
Mr. PAYNE. I understand the gentleman's apology to be that they have a greater number of school buildings here than I want to ask the gentleman what Baltimore in Baltimore. has to do with this question, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, from the evidence before the committee, that in this particular school building there are at least 100 more children than there are seats to accommodate them? What has Baltimore got to do with that?

Mr. BURLESON. I want to assure the gentleman from New York that we are not here in an apologetic attitude. On the contrary, we are here to justify the action that we have taken. I will say to him that Baltimore has this to do with it-we utilized Baltimore for the purposes of comparison, just as the President of the United States used Baltimore for the purpose of comparison, that there was not a proper economy in the use of school buildings. That is the position of your committeethat there is not a proper economy at this time in the use of the school buildings we now have, and we reach that conclusion by instituting a comparison between Baltimore and Washington and other cities, and the President of the United States reached the same conclusion.

Mr. PAYNE. The President of the United States has not used Baltimore as a comparison with Washington on this specific question raised by the gentleman from Illinois. In this instance the undisputed proof is that there are 100 more children than there are seats in this school building. The President has a logical mind, and he could not use Baltimore as a comparison on that question.

Mr. BURLESON. I am willing to concede that the President of the United States has a logical mind, and I am not only willing to accept that proposition but to go a step further and accept the conclusion of the President of the United States when he asserted positively that there was not a proper economy in the use of school buildings.

As was well said by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], this issue was thrashed out yesterday afternoon !

to a complete finish, and when the test was made before those who were present at that time the proposition offered by the gentleman from Illinois was defeated by a vote of three to one, and I hope that this proposition will be voted down by a substantial majority.

[The time of Mr. Burleson having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. I will.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Is it not true that in the hearings the subcommittee was likewise overwhelmed with information which led us seriously to question the correctness of the enrollment figures presented to us?

Mr. BURLESON. Undoubtedly there were certain statements made there that led us to believe that the statistics gathered by the school board could not be implicitly relied upon. But, accepting the data furnished by the board, just as the President of the United States accepted the data furnished by the board, we reached the conclusion that there was no necessity for additional schools at this time, and no necessity for more school buildings until there was a proper economy in the use of the school buildings now in existence.

Mr. NYE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.
Mr. NYE. I was unable to hear the discussion yesterday, being detained on my committee, but I understood the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Saunders] to say this morning that there could be a readjustment of the districts in such a way as to accommodate all of the pupils of the city. What I want to ask for information is as to this particular school. Here seems to be inadequate facilities for nearly half of the school population in that particular locality. How would you dispose of those children; where could they go?

Mr. BURLESON. By contracting the school district tributary to this school and enlarging the districts tributary to some other school, thereby filling the vacant seats in other schools and relieving the excess attendance on this particular school.

Mr. NYE. What other school is there that you could send these pupils to? I am not familiar with the geography of the

Mr. BURLESON. We had a map in here yesterday afternoon, showing the schools of the District of Columbia and their proximity to each other, and no man who made a casual examination of that map could escape the conclusion that we had too many schools now in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Many of us did examine it, not casually but thoroughly, and did not reach that conclusion.

Mr. BURLESON. There were less than a baker's dozen that did not reach that conclusion, and an overwhelming majority the other way.

Mr. MANN. Called in from the cloakroom.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have recently brought to the District of Columbia a new school superintendent, and it is the purpose of this committee to give this new man an opportunity to seriously acquaint himself with the situation and work out the problems which he thinks ought to solved in connection with the schools of the District of Columbia, and that was another reason that influenced the committee at this time to take no action in the construction of additional schools. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Texas if in arriving at his conclusion he has taken into consideration the number of schools or taken into consideration the seating capacity?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, we took into consideration both factors. They have only 102 schools in the city of Baltimore with an enrollment of 80,363 pupils, while here, with an enrollment—not taking into consideration the actual attendance—of only 55,000, we have 195 schools.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mann) there were-ayes 32, noes 57.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 55, after line 18, by inserting as a new item the Takoma School building, $36,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this was another one of the schools cited yesterday by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] as being so much more worthy of additional facilities than the Chevy Chase School. It is a remarkable occurrence to me that on these amendments for the construction of new school buildings the Republican side of the House votes unanimously for the schools and the Democratic side of the House, with the exception of one Member, votes unanimously against the schools.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, that settles the propriety of the vote, does it not?

Mr. MANN. I think so. That settles it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because the Republican side is usually in the wrong.

Mr. MANN. In the opinion of the gentleman the Republican side is often in the wrong, but in this particular case even the gentleman himself, while he is compelled to vote with his committee, believes in my judgment; and I give him a chance to reply that we ought to have the school buildings, and he knows, and every Member of the House knows, that it is mighty poor consolation to people in a particular locality of the District of Columbia who have children who want to go to school to be told that there are vacant rooms and vacant seats in some other part of the District. I have lived in a city long enough to see great school buildings entirely vacated for lack of children to fill them—abandoned because in the growth of the city the population had moved farther out and the down-town districts no longer required school facilities which they had

In the Takoma School, in one of the outlying parts of the District, in a growing community, there are now more than 50 pupils to every room, with insufficient capacity in those rooms to accommodate 50 pupils. It is a great consolation to the parents and children there to tell them that there are vacant schools down here in the heart of the city of Washington! That is the only consolation they receive. I can not but believe that the difference between the two sides of the House on this school proposition is a fundamental difference. We believe in educating the people, in furnishing facilities to the youth of the land. You prefer to keep them in ignorance, because on ignorance Democracy thrives best. [Applause on the Republican

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is more successful when he undertakes to express his own opinion than when he undertakes to express the views of anyone else in this House. If I were of the opinion that these additional schools were needed, I should advocate them; it would not be necessary for the gentleman from Illinois or anyone else on that side of the House to propose amendments to furnish school facilities. The policy of the Committee on Appropriations is to recommend in these appropriation bills every dollar that is honestly required properly to conduct the Government; and that committee will do that regardless of the effect upon the aggregate of appropriations in this Congress. If, after thorough investigation, it is found that it is proper to appropriate an additional sum to that appropriated in the extravagant Congresses in the past, the committee will not hesitate to perform its full duty and shoulder the responsibility for it.

There is no justification whatever for the building of the school now proposed. The Takoma School is crowded because 1,450 nonresident pupils, who should be educated at the expense of neighboring States, are being educated at the expense of the Federal and District Governments. The Citizens' Association of Takoma Park within a few days, according to information furnished to me, adopted resolutions protesting against the condition under which these nonresident pupils, the children of nontaxpayers in the District, having no connection with the District or Federal Governments whatever, have been permitted to be placed in these schools to the exclusion of the children entitled to be educated in them. The Committee on Appropriations has recommended a provision that will eliminate There is in this bill a provision which will prevent the education in the District schools of these nonresident children, who have no right in the schools unless they pay the tuition fee that they should to obtain their education. need be alarmed that any child in the District of Columbia is suffering from opportunity to get proper education because of lack of proper facility. It is pure buncombe, for the purpose of cheap political effect, to talk about this committee denying ade-quate school facilities in the District of Columbia. That has not been the policy on this side of the House in the past, and it will not be in the future; and whether gentlemen criticize the committee for its recommendations or its lack of recommendations, the committee will assume the responsibility for what it does, and when it is convinced that what it is doing is in the interest of proper administration, carrying out a proper system of education, it will not fear criticism of its action.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. As I understood the gentleman, he stated there were 1,450 now receiving instruction at the Takoma Park School who had no right there. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not intend to say 1,450 were in the Takoma School, but there are 1,450 nonresident children being educated in these outlying schools, part of whom are in the Takoma School, crowding out the other children.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman furnish us an estimate as the number in this particular school receiving instruction at the Takoma Park School? That is, how many of these nonresidents affect the situation in the Takoma Park School?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not the figures at hand, but my recollection is there is a sufficient number to affect the school which otherwise would furnish ample accommodation to those entitled to be educated in the school.

Mr. MILLER. Is it not rather remarkable that the Takoma Park School would receive such a large number who had no right there, so as to seriously impair the efficiency of the school and the lives and health of the District children there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a remarkable condition, and there is a provision in this bill which, if adopted, will eliminate that condition and will enable those entitled to school facilities in this district to have them.

Mr. MILLER. One other question. Has there been provided in the Takoma Park district any additional school facilities in the last two or three years for regular District pupils?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not recall when the last addition

Mr. MILLER. Does not the gentleman know that the Ta-koma Park suburb has increased in population perhaps 100 per cent, and that in the natural course of things there must be added school facilities for children who have a right to go

Mr. FITZGERALD. That, perhaps, is true; but when facilities were provided they were for an excess of the number then needed. Allowances were made for some normal growth.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this statement about 1,450 pupils in the District, children of nonresidents, is a mere bogie. I used to have one of those myself in the public schools of Washington, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] used to have several entitled to admission here, and no one has yet discovered on the Committee on Appropriations how many these 1,450 are children of Members of Congress or children of other officials. The Committee on Appropriations and no member of it knows.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not the class that is aimed at.

Mr. MANN. That is included in the 1,450. Mr. FITZGERALD. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it is not. Mr. MANN. It is a matter of opinion. The gentleman can not cite any authority for the statement that he makes, and he knows that no member of the Committee on Appropriations knows how many of these are at the Takoma School. The only information the committee has on the subject is the statement furnished that 1,450 nonresident pupils go to District of Columbia schools who pay no tuition and 40 or 50 who do pay tuition. The gentleman from New York and the committee have no information further on the subject. They can not say and they did not dare say to the gentleman from Minnesota how many nonresident pupils were at the Takoma School.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman is mistaken about that; the gentleman from New York just stated the resolution adopted the Takoma Park Citizens' Association protesting against children living within the District from being crowded out of the school by nonresidents, as was done at the Takoma Park

Mr. MANN. How many are there, does the gentleman know?

Mr. BURLESON. I think-

Mr. MANN. How many?

Mr. BURLESON. A sufficient number to crowd out a lot of those living in the District.

Mr. MANN. The facilities there are so scant they are crowded out, and no wonder the people want a new one constructed. Neither the gentleman nor the gentleman from New York can give it. No one knows how many there are. know that the people of Takoma Park have set up a complaint because the school facilities there in the way of buildings were insufficient, and in the face of that complaint the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from New York decline to give them proper school facilities, decline to give them school buildings enough.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. They object to an addition to the school build-gs, which would provide ample school facilities for these children. Certainly, I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COX of Ohio. If the gentleman will refer to the hearings, it will be perfectly clear to him.

Mr. MANN. Refer to them where?

Mr. COX of Ohio. Page 313. Mr. MANN I have read that.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Then do you deny that this is the situation to this committee? The law was definitely stated there by Mr. Blair, and he said that the 1,500 pupils attending school here illegally were beyond the pale of the law. That ought to be sufficient.

Mr. MANN. This is the statement that he has made. I will leave it to the committee to judge:

There are between 1,450 and 1,500 pupils who are not residents and get free tuition and there are between 40 and 45 who are not exempted and hence pay tuition.

That is the information upon which this committee acted in order to decline to put a school building where the needs of the pupils demand it. No one knows how many of those nonresident pupils are children of officials here, which, under the committee's own proposal, would still be entitled to school facilities. Mr. CANNON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] yield to his colleague?

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly.
Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman turn to page 56 of the bill. He will find the law is to some extent amended, but very slightly.

Mr. MANN. Yes: I am familiar with the provision.

Mr. CANNON. It says:

Pupils shall not be admitted to or taught free of charge in the public schools of the District of Columbia who do not reside in said District.

And later on they can be admitted if they pay tuition, with the consent of the commissioners:

Or, who during such tutelage do not own property and pay taxes in excess of the amount of the tuition.

That would let them in. Here is another provision:

Or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in public duties

I apprehend that most of the children outside of the District are children of clerks and employees of the departments, living adjacent, and although they do not own a foot of property or pay a cent of taxes, the children are admitted without charge. How many of them there are I will say frankly I do not know.

So it seems the slight change in this clause, which is exceedingly slight, will not shut out a great many children. It was stated, as I recollect, in the hearings before the committee that occasionally three or four people would buy a cheap piece of property and thereby have their children attend the schools, who live in Maryland or in Virginia.

Now, that will be prohibited unless the taxes amount in excess of the tuition. It seems to me that this will not shut out 5 per cent of the children that have been heretofore attending the schools.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for just two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. My colleague means it would not shut them out if the law was enacted.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. MANN. Of course, everyone in the House knows that that item will go out on a point of order. But even if it were the law, it would not make the difference which my colleague says of 5 per cent; certainly not 25 per cent. Nearly all of the 1,450 are entitled to the school facilities under the provision which the committee itself reports, but if that were not the case, it is no answer to the proposition to provide school facilities for the children who are entitled to it, because you gave the school facilities somewhere else to children who are not entitled to it.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "thirty-six thousand" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "twenty thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the last two lines of the amendment by striking out the ords "thirty-six thousand" and inserting in lieu thereof the words twenty thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, there is certainly no question connected with the administration of affairs in the District of Columbia of greater importance than that of education. We can get along, of course; and by "we" I mean the people who are to live here long after I have ceased to have the honor of living in this particular part of the world. People can live here if the amount of police protection is reduced; they can live here if the streets are not as clean as they are in other places; they can live here if the artistic features are not what some of us may desire them to be; but the people can not live under a free Government and under a free flag unless they are educated.

I am surprised that the gentlemen who have the burden of preparing and advocating this bill have found it impossible, in harmony with their judgment, to make any provision for the expanding need of educational facilities in this District.

Now, I know that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitz-gerald], in harmony with the reputation he has for sobriety and seriousness of statement in this House, does not want any misinformation to get abroad, and does not want anything stated as a fact which is not a fact; and for that reason in particular I desire to direct his attention to one statement that he made. namely, that in the Takoma Park suburb the citizens there the other day had a meeting and protested because a large number of pupils were now receiving instruction there, within the District lines, who had no right to be there. I am reliably and fully informed that the statement is a mistake-made, of course, unwittingly. All that was considered at that meeting was information?

Mr. MILLER. I will give it, if desired, in a moment. that was considered at that meeting was an arrangement of rooms wherein could best be given instruction to the children in the lower grades. Not one word was said about any nonresident children being there. Not a single resolution was passed with respect thereto. On the highest authority, I beg to state that the conditions in the Takoma Park district today are not such as Members had been led to believe by some recent discussions on this floor. There are practically no children there who have not the right to be there, and of the fifty and odd who are in each schoolroom, practically every one is there by right. To be sure, there may be a few whose parents live just outside the District. In Maryland, but every one of them is the son or daughter of a department clerk in the city of Washington and in the employ of the Federal Government, Surely gentlemen would not prohibit such children from attending school in the District.

As everyone knows, that little suburb has shown great growth in the last two or three years. The schools have become crowded, no increased facilities have been provided, till a condition has been reached that cries out for relief. There is no farming community in that region. There are no farmers' children in that immediate vicinity to go to school anywhere; and where else nonresident children could from, Mr. Chairman, I know not, unless it should be from the city of Baltimore, where apparently they lack school facilities, and may have come down here in the hope of getting some instruction at a place where it is to be had. It seems to me, when the committee in charge of the appropriations for the District of Columbia comes in and says that that growing suburb, already suffering for several years, shall not receive any additional facilities for instruction, they are saying, in effect, "We stand here to block the growth of Takoma Park and prevent the youth of that part of the District from securing such fundamental education as every boy and girl in America has the right to receive." And I say it is cheeseparing carried down to a mighty thin wafer. It is laying down a proposition that will certainly rise to bump good and hard at some future day.

For one, Mr. Chairman, if there is to be an amendment of this bill anywhere between the first line and the last, I am in favor of that amendment being one to give to the children of this District who now lack educational facilities those reasonable and proper for them to have.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question being taken, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were-ayes 25, noes 40.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 55, after line 18, by inserting as a new item the following:

"For the construction of an eight-room extensible school building on the site purchased west of the Soldiers' Home grounds south of Rock Creek Road, $66,000."

Mr. BURLESON. I make a point of order on the amendment. Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman reserve it for a minute? Mr. BURLESON. I will reserve it. Mr. MANN. This is for the relief of the Petworth School, which was referred to yesterday by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Saunders].

Mr. BURLESON. My recollection is that this school was asked for last year and was refused by those in control of the bill at that time. I make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. We provided a number of other new buildings last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes a point of order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

I think it is subject to a point of order. Mr. MANN.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 55, after line 18, by inserting as a new item the follow-

"Toward the construction of a new M Street High School building for colored pupils on the site heretofore acquired, $150,000; toward the construction of a new Central High School building on the site heretofore acquired, $250,000."

Mr. BURLESON. On the amendment I reserve a point of

Mr. MANN. I desire to be heard either on the point of order or on the amendment, I do not care which.

Heretofore Congress provided for the purchase of two new high-school sites, one for a new colored high school on M Street and one for the Central High School. I am not sure whether I am discussing the point of order or the amendment. In the opinion of Congress at that time—and the matter, I remember, was very carefully considered both by the Appropriations Committee and the House itself—it was then necessary to provide for new high-school facilities. Congress made the appropriation for those sites. The sites have been purchased. Naturally, in the orderly conduct of business the next thing to do is to make an appropriation to commence the construction of these buildings. That is the amendment which I have offered.

Every one who is familiar with the situation knows that the high-school facilities for the colored pupils are entirely inade quate in the District to-day. Everyone who is familiar with the M Street High School knows that the present school building is entirely inadequate. I remember last year—I wish I might hear them now—gentlemen on that side of the aisle told how much needed was the new high-school building for the M Street High School. Where are those gentlemen now? I shall not call their names, because I will not be that mean. I remember the discussion, how some gentlemen on that side the aisle told of the dire necessity of a new high-school building on M Street; and yet, when the proposition is made to put one there, those gentlemen are silent in the effort to make a record of false economy. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] a while ago, falling away from his usual manner, referred to propositions as buncombe. The usual manner, referred to propositions as buncombe. cheapest thing I know of in debate anywhere is to call somebody's else proposition buncombe.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURLESON. If there was such a pressing necessity for these two schools at that time, why was not adequate provision made in that bill for the erection of the school buildings?

Mr. MANN. It was thought sufficient to make an appropriation that could be expended in one year, and it was assumed—I admit that we were grossly in error—that you could expect some decency to come out of the Democratic side on school questions. We provided last year for the purchase of sites. There is on the calendar a bill containing a provision to use the surplus fund appropriated for sites in the preparation of school plans. It is on the calendar, and the Committee on Appropriations might have proposed to use that money, utilize it in the preparation of plans for the school buildings.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman will admit that if we embodied in the bill an item of that character, it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. I will admit that the gentleman has embodied a whole lot of other items in the bill subject to a point of order; and if I had been in his place, I should be the last one to make a point of order on school buildings and fool away the time on water pipes. The gentleman brings in a proposition about the water pipes, subject to a point of order, but trembles with fear that some one will make a point of order on a school proposi-If the gentleman had come in here with clean hands, with no point of order in his bill, there would be no criticism; but the bill is filled with propositions subject to a point of order, and one more would not have hurt the gentleman and would have helped the bill.

Mr. BURLESON. I will ask the gentleman, who has had long experience here, if he has ever seen an appropriation bill brought before the House that did not have a number of items embodied in it subject to a point of order?

Mr. MANN. No; and I am only complaining because this did not have one more. I never saw an appropriation bill come before the House that was not subject to a point of order in some of its provisions. I do not object to that at all. I believe it is the duty of the committee-I believe it was the duty of this committee-to have provided for the preparation of plans, at least, for the construction of these two new high-school buildings upon ground which we have already bought and paid

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman from Illinois has had a long experience in Congress, and I would like to have him state if he has ever known a District appropriation bill brought before the House that had as little legislation in it as this bill has?

Mr. MANN. I can not remember about that. This has plenty of legislation in it. Appropriation bills usually have, and I think this is very much similar to the others.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Is the gentleman prepared to admit the proposition that an area of 10 acres is necessary upon which to construct a school building with a capacity of 2,000 scholars?

Mr. MANN. We have already purchased the school sites, and the gentleman from Ohio was here when we did it. He had notice of what was being done, and he did not raise his voice in opposition to it. Now the gentleman wants me to go over that last year's question, when the question is whether we will construct a building upon that site. We need not use the whole site, and the gentleman can propose to sell the balance of it.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Oh, the gentleman is unfair in his statement. The site was bought last year, but nothing was said ment. about the size of the school.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Let me conclude.

Mr. MANN. I am willing to let the gentleman conclude, but the gentleman has not the floor.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I think the time of the gentleman from Illinois had expired and he was proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. When the Chair informs me that my time has expired I will take my seat; but I am not proceeding by unani-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Chair is hearing the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order and his time is not limited.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think my time ought to have expired, and I will yield the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I spoke on this highschool question at some length a day or two ago. All of this argument about vacant seats, which has been the basic idea that has brought about the leaving out of the present bill provision for any school construction, is admitted by the gentlemen of the committee who are in charge of the bill not to apply to the high schools in any sense of the word. There never was any evidence before our subcommittee—and the hearings will disclose that fact-but that both the white high school, known as the Central High School, and the M Street High School, the colored high school, are terribly overcrowded, and have been not only this year but for several years past; that it is imperative that they should have new quarters and larger quarters at once. I tried to keep these two items in the bill-the one now offered as an amendment and the one which will be offered succeeding it, I think.

Mr. MANN. They are both included in this amendment. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The colored high school was originally the old Business High School here, and after having been used for many years for that purpose-an old building, to begin with—it was turned over to be used as the colored academic high school. It was built to accommodate 450 pupils. That is its entire capacity to-day; and yet it has an enrollment and attendance of 798-practically two pupils for every seat in the place. It is said that it is not necessary this year to do this, in spite of the fact that we have bought the site and it is standing there idle and our money is invested in it.

The white high school was built for about 600 or 700 pupils and has 1,200 pupils enrolled. Almost the same condition exists there as at the colored high school, and that is certainly not a proper condition for children who are taking a high-school We received $250,000 out of the appropriations last year with which to buy a plot, to purchase a site, for a white high school. We received $60,000 for the purchase of a site for a colored high school. In both cases after the purchase of the site there was a balance left of money unexpended, $15,000 out of the $250,000 appropriation and $24,000, in round numbers, out of the appropriation of $60,000. As was said in debate the other day, there is pending and on the calendar a bill from the Committee making available those balances for the preparation of plans and specifications for these two buildings. It is on the calendar, and I have not the faintest idea that it will ever come off the calendar. I think gentlemen understand what I mean. We have a 10-acre plot, probably the handsomest plot of land bought for school purposes that this city has ever purchased. It is a park, practically, and on that it is proposed to construct a white high school. It is quite true that the hearings before the committee developed the fact that the school board and the commissioners had about decided to erect a building, costly and monumental, almost, very beautiful, and one that was appropriate to the site, but which was going to accommodate only 1,600 pupils. It would take a couple of years to erect that building, at a cost of something like $690,000. I do not object to that. It should be a fine, modern, model high school, but it should not be built as a unit which can not be extended or enlarged or increased, because by the time it is finished there will have been an enrollment in the white high school which will entirely fill the building, and we would be on the market for more sites and buildings. For that reason in my remarks the other day I stated that we ought to go ahead with this work, leaving it to the good judgment of the board of education and District Commissioners, after an expression of our views on the subject, to erect a building there that will accommodate all of the pupils now enrolled and those that will be enrolled for the next few years. A building should be erected that can be extended as one building, or so that other additional buildings can be erected on this site, to take care of an enrollment of five or six thousand pupils, if necessary just as they do in other cities where real estate is valuable and the purchase of a multitude of sites and the erection of small buildings is not an economical thing to do. This simply says, here is $250,000 to start your work on.

No plans have been made, but the Commissioners of the District are not the kind of men who would turn their backs upon a sane suggestion. They would naturally make an effort to follow the idea of utilizing the 10 acres of ground and making it available for school purposes for many years to come.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Certainly.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Did not one of the commissioners who urged this most strongly state to the committee that he would oppose placing on that 10-acre plot a building that would accommodate more than 1,600 pupils?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. He did; and I have stated that; and I stood here for half an hour the other day and argued that I would oppose his views on that subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And is that not the attitude of the commissioners and the position that will be taken if this building be authorized without determining in advance just what should be done at that place?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. No; I do not know that it would be. That was the statement of the commissioner, but I do not believe, however, that he would fly in the face of Congress if he found that his ideas did not jibe with those of this House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The only way that any official would know what the idea of Congress would be would be to specify with such distinctness in the authorization that there would be

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I will say to the gentleman frankly that I entirely agree with him because the gentleman himself in our conferences in committee suggested that there should not be a waste of this site, that a building should be constructed either as an extensible building or, by adding units, to take care of 5,000 or 6,000 pupils. The gentleman cited the case of a high school in the gentleman's city of Brooklyn which takes care of a great many pupils, and I agreed with him, and I followed the gentleman; in fact, I was converted by the gentle-man's argument to that sort of a building, but I desired to see a sufficient sum put into this bill to begin this work, and if whoever had charge of making the plans should make the plans other than we think they should be we can stop it by legislation if we have to do so, or by moral suasion if we can.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I want to state for the information of the committee that when we started on the subject of schools we had in hand the highest authority in the land with respect to two important elements-efficiency and economy in the conduct of the Washington schools. The highest authority, the President of the United States, stated that the conditions are indefensible, and I quote from his message now this literal language as disputing the very contention that has just been made by the gentleman from Illinois. The President says:

If I may say so, there seems to be a lack of definite plan in the expansion of the school system and the erection of new buildings and of proper economy in the use of those buildings that indicates the necessity for a concentration of control.

So that when we approached this subject we did so with a great deal of precaution. We soon ran into that part of the bill which related to the Cochran School. The request was made in the estimates for an additional sum of $11,000 to buy some land, the request coming from the school board and not the commissioners. We went back to last year's hearings and as-certained that the board of education had requested $9,000, with which it was to purchase, as it stated, 7,200 square feet. Now, the facts developed this year are that with the $9,000 appropriated, instead of purchasing 7,200 square feet, they purchased 2,200 square feet, and they requested this year an additional $11,000 to procure the remaining 5,000 feet. Then we found another situation, that of illegal school attendance. Mr. Blair stated to the committee what the present law was with respect to legal and illegal attendance in the public schools. It provides that the children of any person or persons who are engaged in public duties here are regarded as legal attendants of the schools. Following that, Mr. Blair makes the direct statement that between 1,400 and 1,500 illegal attendants are now in the public schools, showing clearly that in that 1,400 or 1,500 pupils they did not classify the children of Members of Congress. When we came to the high-school proposition, we were impressed with the gross extravagance in the plan begun last year in this one respect: A 10-acre tract was purchased in a beautiful part of the city, and the plan now is to erect on this 10-acre tract one building. I stated awhile ago that the capacity was to be 2,000 pupils. I was mistaken; it is to have a capacity of only 1,400 to 1,600 pupils. We suggested that plans and specifications should be so drawn as to provide for what is known as an extensible building, so that when the occasion demanded an additional building could be erected to accommodate 500 pupils or 1,000 pupils. That did not seem to appeal to the æsthetic tastes of the board of education in the city of Washington. The trouble is that the public purse is being Washington. drained for $600,000, with which there is to be constructed a monumental building in this beautiful part of the city. Then this further fact developed: When we were seeking to ascertain the necessity or the nonnecessity for an additional white highschool building, this thing crept out, and it is very important. There is being developed now a new hobby in the Washington schools; at least many people regard it as a hobby.

It contemplates the institution of an elaborated vocational school, the plan being that as soon as a little chap gets into the grades the teacher decides whether he is to be a plumber, a carpenter, a lawyer, or, perchance, a statesman, and then the purpose is to develop the child in accordance with his bent.

Dr. Davidson was asked-

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Will my colleague yield a moment?

Mr. COX of Ohio. With pleasure.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I notice in the various vocations mentioned by the gentleman in his remarks the vocation of statesmanship was mentioned. Does the gentleman think statesmanship is a vocation?

Mr. COX of Ohio. It has been a very useful profession in our State. It was developed, at least so far as the judgment of a good many members of the subcommittee is concerned, that this high school was a forerunner for the development of this hobby. The price had something to do likewise with the de-termination of the committee on this subject. It was insisted that the building would cost $690,000. We submitted the drawings of a model high-school building, erected in Springfield, Ohio, with a capacity of 1,400 pupils, that cost considerably less than $300,000.

Dr. Davidson has been here but a brief time. It is the belief of the committee that many practices and features of school life and operations in this District will be corrected as soon as he has been able to properly organize the schools. And in the face of all the conditions I have attempted to enumerate, we believe the time had come to stop buying grounds and stop appropriating money for additional buildings until we could get back to a sane base for economy in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, just a word. pending on the calendar at this time a Senate bill setting apart an unexpended balance of an appropriation made in the last appropriation bill for the purchase of these two high schools for the preparation of plans and specifications for the new school buildings. When that bill comes before the House for consideration the members of the Committee on Appropriations who deal with this particular subject matter have in mind to offer certain amendments seeking to throw around the preparation of these plans certain restrictions and conditions looking to the accommodation of a larger number of pupils in the high-school buildings to be erected than is now contemplated by the school board. For the reason that we want to give a greater care and greater consideration to the matter of the character of plans that are to be provided for these two school buildings, I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Pou). The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Pupils shall not be admitted to or taught free of charge in the public schools of the District of Columbia who do not reside in said District, or who during such tutelage do not own property in and pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the tuition charged hereunder to other nonresident pupils, or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in public duties therein, or during such tutelage pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the tuition charged hereunder to other nonresident pupils: Provided, That any other nonresident pupil may be admitted to and taught in said public schools on the payment of such amount, to be fixed by the board of education, with the approval of the Commissioners of said District, as will cover the expense of tuition and cost of textbooks and school supplies used by such pupil; and all payments hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against the paragraph. I think it is controlled by the ruling of the Chair which was made day before yesterday. It plainly is new legislation. It changes the existing statutes regulating this subject matter. I do not believe at this time I ought to discuss it at any length, because of the very plainness of the opinion that it is in violation of the rule, and will not discuss it further unless I am compelled to do so by discussion on the other side.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations contends that this paragraph is within the Holman rule. I wish to submit the following considerations to the Chair: Upon the face of this proposition it reduces the amount carried by the bill; it reduces the attendance in the schools. It reduces thereby the expense of operating the schools. It reduces the number of pupils to be cared for in the schools of the District of Columbia. As a matter of course, of logical necessity, it reduces the burden imposed upon the District of Columbia and the appropriations carried in this bill for the maintenance of the schools. A paragraph that effects such a reduction, as a matter of necessary sequence, is within the plain and manifest purpose of the Holman rule. This rule intended to afford the Committee on Appropriations the power to make concrete legislation, provided that the concrete legislation showed on its face, as this does, that a reduction is effected. It certainly requires a less appropriation to provide for a reduced number of pupils than for a larger attendance.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, that is the most remarkable statement I have ever heard my friend from Virginia make, namely, that this paragraph shows upon its face a reduction or accomplishes an economy. The fact remains that the paragraph does not make an appropriation of any sort or kind, and the only way a reduction can be at all considered in connection with this paragraph is by argument.

The present statute of the District of Columbia fixes the status of nonresident children, namely: If their parents are taxpayers in the District of Columbia, they are entitled to enter the District schools. This provision seeks to make other conditions, and provides that the board of education shall, with the approval of the Commissioners of the District, require nonresident pupils to pay such an amount as will cover the expense of tuition and the cost of textbooks and school supplies used by such pupils, and all payments under this provision shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia. It provides, in other words, that they shall fix a tuition fee. There is no statute now which permits that to be done, and therefore this is plainly a proposal to enact new legislation

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, just one word in response to the arguments of my colleague. The ground of the objection that these gentlemen are making to the provision recommended on our part, is that it will reduce the number of potential school children entitled to admission to these schools.

Mr. CARLIN. I never made such an objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS. We know very well the ground on which the objection is made. My friend will not deny that I have stated it correctly. If this provision did not affect somebody by reducing the number of school children, no point of order would be made. The very fact that it is a change of existing law is relied upon by the opposition to support their point of order, but the fact that it changes existing legislation by reducing the burden imposed by that legislation is relied upon by those who recommend the proposition, to bring it within the parliamentary rule.

Permit me to give an illustration in this connection. I understand there is no maximum age limit fixed in the District of I understand that a man 50 years old is eligible to admission to these schools. I even understand that men of greater age than 50 have actually attended the schools here. Would anyone contend that if we reduced the age limit, fixing the maximum say at 18 years, we would not thereby reduce

Mr. CARLIN. I want to interrupt the gentleman right there, while he is on his feet, to call his attention to the provision of the rule that the reduction must be in the amount of money covered by the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The amount of money covered by the bill is the amount that will be necessary to conduct certain pre-scribed operations of government under the law, provided no changes are made in the law by the bill. To give another illustration: Should we reduce the number of school-teachers in the District of Columbia we might, as the result of that action, seriously impair the effective operation of the schools of the District, but we would certainly reduce the amount of money covered by the bill, because to the extent of the reduction in the force, we would not be required to pay out any money on salary account.

Mr. CARLIN. You have not reduced it in the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. We have reduced the number of pupils by the bill, and that reduction in pupils effects a reduction in the amount necessary to carry on school operations in the District of Columbia.

One further illustration in this connection. Suppose we had made further reductions in the number of children eligible to attend the schools. Suppose we had gone so far as to cut out one-half of the school children of the District of Columbia. Would anyone undertake to say that as the result of action, we would not reduce the amount necessary to support the school system of the District of Columbia? That amount is a part of the amount covered by the bill? The committee submits to the Chair that the committee is empowered to report concrete legislation if the necessary legal effect of that legisla-tion will reduce the amount that would otherwise be carried in that is covered by the bill.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am sure no further argument is necessary, but it is perfectly apparent that the reductions which the gentleman seems to think are carried in the bill exist only in the gentleman's imagination and in his argu-The rule itself provides the character of reduction and specifies for what purposes those reductions must be made.

It says, first:

By the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

That is not in this paragraph.

Or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

There is no amount of money named in that paragraph. Money is not referred to, except to increase the tuition fees of children.

Now, how can it be argued that this bill, upon its face, carries any reduction? It may be that in years to come a reduction of teachers might be accomplished, but so far as this bill is concerned there is no reduction of a teacher or the salary of any teacher, so far, especially, as this paragraph is concerned. Indeed, when we come to read the section we find an increase of appropriation for the teachers of something like $50,000 more than was carried in the bill for the previous year. So the reduction of the amount of money, so far as the bill is concerned, is purely argumentative, speculative, and does not take this paragraph out of the Holman rule.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I want to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that the effect of this provision is to place an additional limitation upon the appropriation made for school purposes. The effect of it is to narrow the class of those who are now under the law permitted to attend the public schools in Washington free of charge. The effect of it is to narrow the class of those who are entitled to participate in the appropriation or to enjoy the benefits of the appropriation made for textbooks and for school supplies; and you can not escape the conclusion that the effect of this amendment is clearly a limitation upon the appropriations made. It is provided that those heretofore under the law permitted to participate in the benefits of the appropriations made for textbooks and school supplies shall be narrowed by changing the law and limiting those facts.

Mr. CARLIN. By increasing the cost of tuition. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while it seems to me clear that the paragraph is subject to the point of order, at least under the proviso in it, I wish to submit an observation following the statement of the gentleman from Virginia as to the effect of

That portion of the rule which would affect this proposi-

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

The gentleman from Virginia, Mr. Saunders, and the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. Carlin, both seem to assume that the provision-

Or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the billmay be a proposition in the original bill iteslf. I think that is not the case, and that all of the precedents under this rule are to the effect that in providing both for what may be in the bill and for an amendment to the bill, so far as this provision is concerned:

Or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill-

That that refers only to an amendment proposed to the bill

Mr. CARLIN. I think the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. MANN. And that there can be no reduction in the amount of money covered in the bill itself. The amendment must cover the provision. Otherwise it would be a mere matter of argument, which no one could decide, as to whether the bill itself carried more money or less money by reason of some legislative provision in the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not desire to weary the Chair, but it seems to me the gentleman is patently in error in part. agree with the gentleman that when the reduction claimed is purely a matter of argument, when it may be fairly denied that the operation of a particular concrete proposition reported in the bill will reduce expenditures, then such a proposition does not come within the Holman rule. I entirely agree with the gentleman from Illinois on that proposition. But I maintain that you can look to existing law, to make your compari-You can look to the appropriations that are made neces sary by existing law, and when a concrete proposition reported by the committee reduces the amount otherwise to be reported, or carried under existing law, then the bill does retrench expenditures by reducing the amount covered by the bill. We make this claim for the item under discussion, and insist that it is within the Holman rule.

The words "covered by the bill" may be given a very narrow interpretation on the part of the Chair, or it may be interpreted in a broader and larger way. On the one hand, if you interpret it narrowly, as the gentlemen opposing the pending proposition claim that you should do, then you destroy the obvious purpose of the enactment of this rule. On the other hand, If a little larger and more liberal interpretation be given to the words "covered by the bill," the effect of such an interpretation will enable the committee to present concrete propositions to this House which will not be supported by argument only, but with reference to existing conditions, and from existing law, will retrench expenditures. Take, for instance, a proposition to reduce the number of teachers in this city. Should that be done, is it not patent, that as a necessary result of that action, a reduction would be effected in the amount that would otherwise be covered by the bill? The pending proposition we submit, stands on as strong a foundation. We present a proposition which eliminates a certain proportion of children that clog the schools, that make it necessary for gentlemen, like my friend from Illinois, to ask for additions to the school buildings. These additions which in the result are inevitable, unless conditions are changed increase the public burden with reference to the schools. We reduce this burden, by reducing the number of children to be cared for under existing law. I maintain that according to the reasonable intent of the rule and the purpose we had in view in its adoption, the proposition submitted, even if legislation, and this is admitted, is in order.

I have an authority to which I wish to direct the attention of the Chair. Under the original Holman rule there was an amendment offered on the floor of the House with respect to the cost of carrying the mails. This was fixed by existing law. The proposition was that the mails should be carried for a less amount. It was held in order. Suppose the bill itself had provided that the mails should be carried for a prescribed amount, which on examination would be ascertained to be less than the amount required under existing law, would that provision of the bill have been subject to a point of order?

Mr. MANN. That was an amendment offered from the floor. Mr. SAUNDERS. I understand that perfectly well and I so stated. I am opposing the contention that an amendment from the floor will be more potent than a report of the committee

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.
Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman argue the question whether the Holman rule applies to a report of the committee as well as to an amendment from the floor?

Mr. SAUNDERS. The very purpose of this rule, as I argued yesterday, was that it should apply to a report of the committee. The opponents of the rule seek to destroy its plain intent by insisting that its provisions do not allow the Committee on Appropriations to report concrete propositions of law effecting reductions.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, the principal delight I take in making this point of order is to prevent the committee from doing the very thing which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] thinks would result in so much good.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That presents the issue.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman says that if the statements of the committee were accepted when propositions of this kind come before the House that great reforms would be accom-

Mr. SAUNDERS. I did not state that,
Mr. CARLIN. He used the words "concrete legislation."
My idea is that it is not the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to legislate for this House; it is for the House to do It is the duty of this committee to propose legislation within its rules, and not in violation of its rules. A great committee like the Committee on Appropriations has power enough without wanting to usurp more power. I am opposed to build-ing up in a Democratic House a committee such as existed in a former House, where they came in with concrete propositions, as they term it, all of them contended to be for the public good, and stated that they were to produce economies. My friend from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] is a most eloquent gentleman, of fine education, one of the best parliamentarians, having had many years' experience in the house of delegates of the great State of Virginia, but how on earth he can bring himself to the conclusion that this paragraph does not change existing law-

Mr. SAUNDERS. I admit that it does.

Mr. CARLIN. When every line of it changes existing law, and how he can conclude that it carries economy and reduction on its face, when the paragraph increases the cost of the conduct of the schools, I can not conceive.

Mr. SAUNDERS. How?

Mr. CARLIN. Because it imposes an additional sum of money for teachers, and it imposes new duties, namely, the fixing of different rates and regulations, which would require the employment of additional clerks. There is nothing here to justify a semblance of the statement that upon its face it carries a reduction of money in the bill. I know my friend has worked himself up to the belief that he is going to accomplish a reduction somewhere at some time. I have no objection to that being accomplished in a proper way, but so long as I am a Member of this body I shall, if a point of order will prevent it from being done, prevent this great committee, with all of its powers of unbuckling and opening the doors of the Treasury, from usurping the functions which properly belong to other committees of equal responsibility. Therefore, Mr. Chairman,

I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has had occasion to read with some care the decision of the permanent Chairman of the committee when this same question was up for consideration some days ago, and the Chair feels constrained to follow the ruling of the permanent Chairman. This paragraph follow the ruling of the permanent Chairman. This paragraph is clearly new legislation. That is conceded. The question to be determined by the Chair is whether or not this legislation retrenches expenditures.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the Chair permit an interruption there? Our contention is that it does retrench expenditures for the reason that it prevents a certain class of pupils coming into the schools who would use the schoolbooks appropriated for in this bill. Inasmuch as it lessens the number which may avail themselves of the privileges of the school, it will decrease the expense dependent upon the purchase of textbooks and school

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not hold, upon reading this paragraph, that it appears sufficiently clear upon its face that it is a retrenchment of expenditures. The Chair therefore feels constrained to sustain the point of order. The Clerk will read. constrained to sustain the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask to delay for a minute to see whether we can not rewrite this and put it in the form of a limitation. I ask unanimous consent to temporarily pass this item.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, where is the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin]? He seems to have left the Chamber.

Mr. SAUNDERS. We are only going to pass it temporarily. Mr. MANN. But in the absence of the gentleman from Virginia, I think it would be better to ask unanimous consent later to return to it, when he comes into the Chamber. I do not think we ought to take advantage of his absence.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the committee that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin] is now in the

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I object. This is a paragraph that relates to the point of order?
The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. CARLIN. The Chair has already ruled on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. CARLIN. I object to any unanimous consent being given.

Mr. BURLESON. Then I will ask that we may delay for a few minutes until we can prepare an additional amendment.

Mr. CARLIN. I object to any delay of a few minutes with reference to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the total cost of the sites and of the several and respective buildings herein provided for, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved, shall not exceed the several and respective sums of money herein respectively appropriated or authorized for such purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph to ask the gentleman whether this applies to anything that is now in the bill?

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that there is a building provided for a normal school.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is mistaken. There is no building provided for in the bill for a normal school.

Mr. BURLESON. And also for a girls' reform school.
Mr. MANN. There may be for a girls' reform school. Where

Mr. BURLESON. It is in the bill. The gentleman will

Mr. MANN. Is it a new building? If it has application, I do not object to it. I withdraw the point of order. It does not mean anything, anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

School buildings authorized and appropriated for herein shall be constructed with all doors intended to be used as exits or entrances opening outward, and each of said buildings having in excess of eight rooms shall have at least four exits. No part of any appropriation carried in this act shall be used for the maintenance of school in any building unless all outside doors thereto used as exits or entrances shall open outward and be kept unlocked every school day from one-half hour before until one-half hour after school hours.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last This item in the bill relating to the construction of school buildings and giving certain directions in reference to the construction of the doors-that they open outward-was embodied in the bill about three years ago as the result of a very serious conflagration which took place in a school in Cleveland, Ohio, and which resulted in the death of a number of pupils. Under the item the municipal architect has been extremely careful in the preparation of his plans to conform to this law. As a result of this accident, which occurred in a Cleveland school, we appropriated a very large amount of money for a number of years for the purpose of making the schools already erected fire-proof, by tearing out all of the wooden stairways and replacing them with iron or fireproof material. At the time this accident occurred it was a source of considerable alarm to the people of the District of Columbia whose children were attending the public schools, because of the lack of fireproof construction of the school buildings.

Since that time, as a result of the appropriations we have made, these buildings have been put in a fair state of repair, in so far as it affects their proof against fire, and I simply want to submit this observation in order to consume a little time and to allay any fears of the people of Washington in reference to the fireproof construction of school buildings

Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not offer an amendment; he has one amendment pending

Mr. BURLESON. I withdraw the amendment to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. That can only be done by unanimous consent, The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 57, line 16, by adding, at the close of line 16, the fol-

"Provided, That no part of any money appropriated by this act for public schools shall be expended for the tutelage or otherwise of any pupils who do not reside in said District, or who, during said tutelage, do not own property in and pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the tuition charged hereunder to other nonresident pupils, or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in public duties therein, or during such tutelage pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the tuition charged hereunder to other nonresident pupils: Provided, That any other nonresident pupil may be admitted to and taught in said public schools on the payment of such amount, to be fixed by the board of education with the approval of the Commissioners of said District, as will cover the expense of tuition and cost of textbooks and school supplies used by such pupils; and all payments hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment at the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin]. The amendment, I think, is plainly subject to the point of order, but I am perfectly willing, as far as I am concerned, that it may go over and be argued by him.

Mr. BURLESON. All right, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that it may be passed. I am willing the gentleman may be heard, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that it may be passed over until he returns.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman— Mr. MANN. The gentleman said he had to go to a committee meeting

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the amendment be passed over and be considered as pending.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. FOWLER. Does this bar any further amendment to this paragraph if this passes?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.
Mr. BURLESON. Has the Chair submitted the request?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated the request of the gentleman from Toyse. Is there chieffing?

gentleman from Texas. Is there objection?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Here is the gentleman from Virginia now.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has already been made. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the maintenance and tuition of colored deaf-mutes of teachable age belonging to the District of Columbia, in the Maryland School for Colored Deaf-Mutes, as authorized in an act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, and under a contract to be entered into by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $4,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to call this to the attention of the gentleman from Texas. I notice in this section it provides an appropriation for the maintenance and tuition of colored deaf-mutes of teachable age. The appropriation before was $6,000, and that is the amount asked for. I simply want to find out what is the reason for the reduction to $4,500.

Mr. BURLESON. That is a very proper inquiry, and I am very glad to give the gentleman the information. In 1909, $5,000 was appropriated and only $3,850 was expended. In 1910, $6,000 was appropriated and only $3,987.50 was expended. 1910, $6,000 was appropriated and only $3,987.50 was expended, In 1911, $6,000 was appropriated and only $3,987.50 was expended, leaving a surplus of $2,000 unexpended. We made inquiry in regard to it, and we reached the conclusion that $4,500 was the proper amount to be appropriated.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I may say, if the gentleman from Ohio will yield, that the commissioner who came before us asked that $4,500 be the amount put in the bill. Commissioner Rudels asked that the control of the first of the sill.

dolph asked that that amount be fixed in the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, the explanation is satisfactory, and I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

After June 30, 1912, there shall be no appointments, except by promotion, to fill vacancies occurring in classes 1, 2, and 3 of privates in the Metropolitan police until the whole number of privates in all of said classes shall have been reduced to 640.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order on this.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I intended to make a motion to strike this out. If I am correctly informed, this paragraph has been inserted to meet the following situation-

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARRETT). Does the gentleman from Missouri offer an amendment?

Mr. MANN. There is a point of order reserved.
Mr. BARTHOLDT. The discussion might just as well take place now. The paragraph purports to meet this situation. Twenty-one policemen were withdrawn from the White House Grounds and were detailed to police duty in such parts of the city as they may be assigned or detailed to. My first question is as to whether it is entirely safe to withdraw from the White House these 21 men. It has been reported in the newspapers and the gentleman who originated the idea is claiming credit for the economy involved in it-

Mr. BURLESON. I will ask the gentleman who is claiming the credit?

BARTHOLDT. I understand the gentleman from Texas is

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman from Texas has made no

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman from Texas has made no such claim whatever in reference to this item.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Then the newspapers were misinformed.

Mr. BURLESON. They frequently are.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will not go so far as to say that. I am a newspaper man myself. But these 21 men were withdrawn from the White House and were assigned to some other part of the city, and because of that temporary increase in the force of the city it is provided here that for a certain length of time no new appointments shall be made until the force shall be reduced to 640, or by, altogether, 21 men. Am I correct in that?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Perfectly.
Mr. BARTHOLDT. I wish to sumbit, Mr. Chairman, that this is a plan of economy in which I do not believe. The White House may approve of it, and I do not know what they are going to say. I have seen no one connected with the White House as to this matter, but quite naturally, if some one would suggest to the President that his 21 guards were unnecessary, that he could do without them, he would say, "Take them away." The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson], if he were President, would probably say the same thing.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How many are still there?

there?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not know. Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Do you know how many were there before the "strenuous" folks came along?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I only know this, that it is a matter of very doubtful economy and very doubtful safety to withdraw 21 men from the White House who have acted there as guards for the protection of the President of the United States. And I want to call attention to the fact in this connection that we are approaching a time when hundreds of thousands of people will come to the National Capital to witness the inauguration of a President, and that at such times certainly these additional men will be needed. And I now refer, not to the White House, but to the fact that the force is to be reduced by this paragraph. I do not think it is the proper time to reduce the police force in this city, and I especially believe it would be poor economy to take the protection away from the President of the United States. They may not be necessary for 10 years; they may not be necessary for 20 years; but there may be a moment when their presence in the White House grounds will be very essential for the protection of the Chief Executive of the Nation. And for that reason, Mr. Chairman, I intended to move to strike out this paragraph.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Can the gentleman inform us when this increase in the police force of the White House was made?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can not.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I was told there was some increase during the administration of Mr. Roosevelt. It has been a matter of slow growth.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Was that made by the request of the President?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I have no knowledge of that. I do ot know. I do not think so, because, knowing President Roosevelt and his character, I do not think he is the kind of a man that would have requested protection or help or that he be sur-rounded by a force of police. Neither would President Taft have done so, nor any other President. If anyone would go down to the White House and ask the President to relieve him of his guard it would be the natural thing for him to say, " away as many as you want."

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Did the President ask that these men be taken away

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I am informed that when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] made certain representations to the President as to the number of men he had there, the President very willingly called in his aids and told them to relieve as many men as possible

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio that I have made no representations about the necessity of those men on the street, but I do not think they are needed on the street.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I have no intention, of course, to misquote the gentleman. I said before that I was not present. Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. So far as I know, the danger to the present President has never occurred in the White House. The danger has usually occurred on the outside.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The President is always subject to contact with dangerous people.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I believe, Mr. Chairman, my time has not yet expired. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas how many men are left there now for the protection of Mr. BURLESON. Twenty-six, as I understand.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is including all the inside men?
Mr. BURLESON. Twenty-six of the police force are still at the White House, still remain at the White House after the order of the President was issued to reduce the force.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Can the gentleman from Texas tell us where those 21 men were stationed who were detailed for duty in the White House?

Mr. BURLESON. I understand they had very soft berths in the inside of the building, although I am not in a position to state exactly where these men were stationed whose services have been dispensed with.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does not the gentleman think that on a question of such importance as this he ought to have definite information?

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that we had definite information with reference to the number of police at the White House prior to the action taken by the Committee on Appropriations. I want to state to the gentleman also that whatever action was taken in regard to this matter, while I do not intend to quote the President of the United States as to what was said, no representations were made to the President about additional men being needed on the street, or about the services of those men being needed anywhere else. The attention of the President was directed simply to the fact of the number of men that were at the White House, and I will not attempt to describe the astonishment of the President, or what was said by him at that time, but whatever action was taken was taken by the President after a most careful investigation of the facts, and with the assurance from the members of the Committee on Appropriations that if his judgment was that these men were needed, or that if he had a desire that these men should be continued there, the matter need only be brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations and no allusion would be made to the matter on the floor of this House.

The truth is that the police force in the city of Washington has become somewhat of an industry. As a matter of fact, instead of having 640 patrolmen left the city of Washington ought not to have 500 patrolmen. The city of New Orleans, which is the only city which is fairly comparable with the city of Washington, but having a larger area, having a more diffipopulation to deal with, has less than one-third of the number of policemen which the city of Washington has at this time. I can give the gentleman the names of a number of cities, with larger populations, large industrial centers, large commercial cities, that have necessarily populations much more difficult to deal with than the population of the city of Washington, where they do not begin to have the number of policemen that we have here. We have taken no radical action in this matter.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor, and I merely want to say in reply to the gentleman from Texas that I do not regard the police force in Washington as in any way excessive in numbers. And even if it be large, the results show for it. I do believe that Washington is the most secure and the safest city on the American continent. When you compare the number of crimes committed in proportion to the population in this city and in other cities you will find that life and property are more secure in the city of Washington than anywhere else.

For that reason I think it is not right to cast any reflections upon the police force of this city. I think Washington has not only the best police force of any city in the country, but it has the best chief of police in the United States, in my judgment. As a demonstration of this fact I refer to the election and reelection of that gentleman as the president of the Association of Police Chiefs. Considering the growth of the city of Washington in the outlying sections, and considering the rapid increase of population, I do not believe that the police force of Washington is too large, especially in view of the fact that every month thousands and thousands of people come here from all sections of the country as visitors, which is not the case in the cities referred to by the gentleman from Texas. And in view of the fact that every four years Washington has a great inauguration, attended usually by 200,000 or 300,000 people, it seems to me that the police force as it exists is necessary and certainly should not be reduced.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that, anticipating that the argument would be made that we will soon have an inauguration, when a large number of people will visit Washington, we did not take the action that we really thought ought to be taken with reference to the police force; but I want to assure the gentleman that, so far as I am concerned, the reduction of the force will not stop with the item carried in this bill. I do not believe the police force of Washington ought to consist of over 500 patrolmen at the outside, and it is my belief that that number would be grossly excessive.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the distinguished gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. In the reduction of this police force, do you not endanger the guarding of the vacant mansions of the idle rich at various times during the year?

Mr. BURLESON. I hardly think there is any such danger. I do not anticipate that there will be any danger to those buildings occupied by the class referred to by the gentleman. In fact, after this reduction is made, we have a larger number of policemen continued in the service of the District of Columbia than any other city in the United States of like size. In fact, I do not hesitate to say that Washington has the largest police force in the world compared with the population that is being served, and I challenge contradiction of that proposition.

Mr. SAUNDERS. For some time to come there will be a larger force actually patrolling the city than heretofore, because these 20 men go into the force of patrolmen, and it will be years before the reduction the gentleman speaks of will be effected.

Mr. BURLESON. That is true.

Mr. FOWLER. Are there not a number of wealthy people who stay in Washington only about three months annually, during the fashionable season, and that during the other portion of the year these mansions are closed up and need patrolmen to guard them; and is it not necessary for the city to provide such patrolmen for them?

Mr. BURLESON. The protection will be ample. not want to commit myself on the proposition with reference to the wealth of the people who live in this city or any other city. As we all know, people are prone to exaggerate the amount of money that other people have. I do not know whether they are extremely wealthy or not, but I do know that there are a number of vacant houses in Washington during the summer months, and I know that the force we still provide for the District of Columbia will be more than adequate to protect those vacant residences. I assure the centlemen that there is those vacant residences. I assure the gentleman that there is not the slightest danger to those vacant houses.

Mr. FOWLER. With that assurance, Mr. Chairman, I feel perfectly content with the reduction that the distinguished committee and the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee are trying to make in this police force.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I will take only a minute. Like the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt], I am not convinced in any way that there should be a reduction of this police force; and, while not coming from Missouri, a gentleman at my right suggests that I, too, want to be shown. The fact of the matter is, I have been a member of the Appropriations Committee for several years. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson], chairman of the subcommittee, will bear me out in the statement that we have not increased the police force to any appreciable extent for the last eight or nine years. In fact, including the years 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, and 1912, in six years the total number of employees in the police department altogether has been increased just at the rate of one a year, or six more employees now than there were six years ago.

These are mostly patrolmen. Now, much has been said about the great size of this police force. It is a good-sized police force. The city has grown enormously in seven or eight years, and the police force has remained stationary. Now, it is sought by this proviso, to which I do not subscribe, to establish a total cessation of appointment on the police force until 20 men shall have been dropped by reason of death, retirement, or some other cause. In other words, by gradual processes, which the gentleman from Virginia says will take years to bring about, they propose to reduce this force by 20. I do not agree with they propose to reduce this force by 20. I do not agree with the gentleman. I think it will come within one year, because a prominent official of the government told me that there were or 10 men who would have to go out right away anyway, and think you will find the other 10 out before the year is out if this becomes a law. In other words, they expect to reduce this force from 660 to 640.

Commissioner Johnston, in discussing the needs of the police force in the hearings, which bears upon the argument made by the gentleman from Texas as to the area of New Orleans and the small police force that that city has, said:

Mr. Johnston. I think we make a very strong argument in this matter. It is true that New Orleans has a much larger police area, but it is equally true that the District area, including the water area policed, is much larger than many other cities of about the same population, as will be seen by inspection of the data herewith submitted, contained also in the commissioners' report last year and largely compiled from Census Bureau data. I very much doubt if the patrolling force of any other comparable city is depleted to the same extent by detailed and post duty as here, where of 660 privates, only 367 at this time are available for patrolling service.

That is true with reference to Washington. It can not be fairly compared with any other city. It is no argument to say that New Orleans and Milwaukee and other cities have a certain number of police and then compare those cities with the Capital City. Many of the reasons against this were set forth by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]. It is the Capital City, and we should have an up-to-date police force. Now, in spite of the fact that we have not increased the force in seven years, the committee proposes to reduce it by 20, and according to the statement of the gentleman from Texas, if they continue to have the power, they will eventually reduce it to 500. It is said that there is no city in the country where they have so many policemen falling over each other and getting in each other's way as in Washington. Let us see. Here are tables introduced in the hearings by Mr. Commissioner Johnston.

Average number of policemen per 10,000 of population of whole area patrolled, allowing 6½ per cent for absence on sick leave, and so forth, in 1907 and 1908—bear in mind that the police force was as big in 1907 as it is now—Washington had 12 patrolmen per 10,000 population, San Francisco had 14 for every 10,000 population, Baltimore had 10 for every 10,000 population, Boston had 14½ for every 10,000 population, St. Louis had 15½ for every 10,000 population, Philadelphia had 13 for every 10,000, and New York 12.

Is that a poor comparison? I think not. It merely shows that with other great municipalities Washington is fairly and properly policed.

I know nothing of the conditions in New Orleans, but if such an area of something like 122,000 acres is policed by 300 policemen, it is not any police force at all.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman

The gentleman inadvertently gives New Orleans 100 more police than she has.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Well, I had not the figures before me, If New Orleans has only 204 policemen, she has not any more than the city of Columbus, where we have 200,000 people and We do not consider there that we have a a compact area. large enough police force, and there is a constant demand on the part of the people who pay the taxes that there should be better policing and more men on the force. I can not understand the situation at New Orleans. They must be a mighty law-abiding people down there.

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. If they have so many more policemen in the District of Columbia than they have in corresponding cities, where do they manage to hide themselves?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I was about to ask that question.

I never see any. Mr. MANN.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I never see many. I see a few crossing policemen and occasionally a policeman patrolling his beat, and I have never been bothered or distressed by policemen or by not being able to find them when I wanted them.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois?
Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Certainly; if the gentleman can

Mr. BURLESON. A few years ago one of the most efficient men who ever served on the Committee on Appropriations, who comes from a large city, in answer to this same query, responded that as far as his information went, they were out in the suburbs, and as a general thing they hunted in pairs and trios; that he never saw one that he did not see two or

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not take the view of the police force that some people do. I know that there are certain classes of men, even Members of Congress, who do not like policemen [laughter], and I think those that I have met casually and socially here are a very superior set of men. I think Washington has the best-looking men, and the men I have met personally have been better equipped mentally than any police force I have ever come in contact with.

Mr. BURLESON. I understand the necessity of some people standing in with the police force [laughter], and I can readily understand that they will extol the virtues of a particular police force with which they are in immediate contact.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. That is quite true. I hope I may always stand in with the police force. While I do not need it to-day, there is no telling when I may. But I am going also to try and stand in with them in order to protect the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson], who, I have no doubt, is not on the best terms with some 600 policemen in this District.

There is another table here, giving the average number of actual patrolmen per 1,000 acres, allowing 6½ per cent for absence on sick leave, et cetera. Washington has 9½ policemen per 1,000 acres, Milwaukee has 18, Cincinnati 12, Detroit 15, San Francisco 19, Buffalo 16, Cleveland 15, Pittsburgh 29, Baltimore 36, Boston 28 plus, St. Louis 23, Philadelphia 15, and New York 26. Out of that whole list of cities Washington has by far the smallest number of policemen per 1,000 acres

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Certainly.
Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does not the gentleman think that in view of the change in the political complexion of this House an increased police force might be necessary?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I did not quite hear the whispered colloquy taking place between the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I am about to answer no. I do not think that. I would not want to say that about men for whom I have such high respect as I have for the Members of the majority side of the House. I do not think we need any more policemen by reason of the last Democratic victory than we needed prior to that time.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman need have no fear. He is not going to get them.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. That is the question that has not yet been fully decided. I am not asking for any additional I did not offer the amendment under discussion, policemen. but I do think that the force as it stands to-day should be let You have added 20 men to the active patrol force of the District by taking them away from the White House, and I have no criticism to make of that. They should be put on the streets in active patrolling duty if they are not needed at the White House. You have your 20 extra men. You do not need any new ones, but I do not believe it is right to cut the force You have your 20 extra men. You do not need a single man, considering that we have stood stiffly against this increase for seven years and the force is practically the same as it was in 1907.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have point of order reserved, and while the burden is upon the other side of this question to produce authority for this legis-lation, inasmuch as other people have addressed themselves to subjects other than the point of order, I hope I may be indulged for a few minutes to do the same thing. I, too, am one of those who believe that the District of Columbia already has a sufficient number of policemen, but I do not believe that those police are properly distributed, and because they are not properly distributed is, in my judgment, due to the acts of Congress and not to the chief of police. For instance, under an act of Congress one of these policemen is detailed to enforce the child-labor law; 44 have been detailed to the White House, but that has been reduced to about 20, I think. To court vans, as guards, there are 2, 1 to inspectors of licenses, with the assessor 1, police headquarters 6. There ought to be some men idle at police headquarters. For instance, if a hurry-up call is sounded anywhere in the city, if a policeman is wanted at some place in a hurry, there must be some men kept at the station house to answer that call and go with the patrol wagon. Then, under the law which is already written, some of these police are sent down as bailiffs to courts.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that he is mistaken about that; there is no law that requires that; that is in the discretion of the chief officer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think the gentleman is mistaken; and he will find at the Casualty Hospital, for instance, one is detailed there. Instead of taking a policeman and putting him there there ought to be a guard, if they need one, charged up to the expenses of that institution. go along through a long list. Let us see what we have after these special details have been made; how many we have left. We have 143 policemen on day duty. While the number, as I have just stated, of total policemen is perhaps large enough, perhaps too large, yet these other calls of duty reduce the number of day private policemen who are on public duty to 143. That I maintain is not enough. Then at night we have 204, and with the harbor master, on the water, we have 6. Now, something has been said about the policemen going in pairs. My information from police headquarters and also from their report is that they do not go in pairs except in the red-light district, where there is danger. But going away from that question, this item is, I think, subject to the point of order. We find in what is commonly denominated as the organic act, passed June 11, 1878, this language:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1878, the board of Metropolitan police and the board of school trustees shall be abolished and all the powers and duties now exercised by them shall be transferred to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall have authority to employ such officers and agents and to adopt such provisions as may be necessary to carry into execution the powers and duties devolved upon them by this act.

There it seems that the police commission was abolished and the duties and powers that they had were conferred upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the act says they shall have authority to employ such officers and agents and to adopt such provisions as may be necessary to carry into execution the powers and duties devolved upon them by this act." Now, I go further. By the act of Congress approved on December 23, 1878, which is some six months thereafter, we find this language:

And the said commissioners are hereby authorized to fix the salaries to be paid to the officers and privates of the Metropolitan police until otherwise provided by law.

The reorganization of the police force can be found in volume 34, part 1, Statutes at Large, on page 221, and it says this, repeating almost identically the language of the act of 1878:

peating aimost identically the language of the act of 1878:

Paragraph 1. The Metropolitan police district of the District of Columbia shall be coextensive with the District of Columbia, and shall be subdivided into such police districts and precincts as the Commissioners of said District may from time to time direct.

Paragraph 2. The Commissioners of said District shall appoint to office, assign to such duty or duties as they may prescribe, and promote all officers and members of said Metropolitan police force according to such rules and regulations as said commissioners, in their exclusive jurisdiction and judgment, may from time to time make, alter, or amend.

Now Mr. Chairman without this 1 contend that this rore.

Now, Mr. Chairman, without this I contend that this paragraph is legislation, and that it is not only new legislation, but it is legislation contrary to law, and can not be reached in the manner in which it is now attempted to reach it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas care to be heard?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is clear we have the right to reduce the number of police or offer an amendment to reduce their compensation, even if the Holman law did not exist. Clause 2 of Rule XXI undoubtedly does give that right, because upon its face this is a reduction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Kentucky-it seems to the Chair that from the law read by the gentleman from Kentucky that there is discretion given to the commissioners to appoint a certain number of policemen.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is no number fixed such as they think. Quoting from the act of June 11, 1878, I will again repeat the language which I just read:

Sec. 2. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1878, the board of Metropolitan police and the board of school trustees shall be abolished; and all the powers and duties now exercised by them shall be transferred to the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall have authority to employ such officers and agents and to adopt such provisions as may be necessary to carry into execution the powers and duties devolved upon them by this act.

That is, the powers conferred upon the commissioners who took the place of the old board which was abolished.

And the act of June 20, 1876, says:

And the commissioners are hereby authorized to fix the salaries to be paid to the officers and privates of the Metropolitan police until otherwise provided by law.

Then comes the act in regard to the Metropolitan police, which repeats almost that same language. It says:

which repeats almost that same language. It says:

Paragraph 1. The Metropolitan police district of the District of Columbia shall be coextensive with the District of Columbia, and shall be subdivided into such police districts and precincts as the Commissioners of said District may from time to time direct.

Par. 2. The Commissioners of said District shall appoint to office, assign to such duty or duties as they may prescribe, and promote all officers and members of said Metropolitan police force according to such rules and regulations as said commissioners in their exclusive jurisdiction and judgment may from time to time make, alter, or amend

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I ask the gentleman if, in his judgment, according to those acts, the commissioners have the right to appoint the number of police that in their judgment is necessary and that Congress has to appropriate for them?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If those acts embrace the law, then the only way that I see that this bill can curtail the number of policemen is to limit the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. And we have no right in any other way to do this?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is what these acts just quoted say

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That when they are appointed Congress has no power to reduce that force? That is a very strange law. Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it is strange, and I have been insisting here now for nearly two years that little by little-little by little-authority has been given to the commissioners, and that no man can now hardly tell where their authority ends. We all know where it began. It began in the act of 1874, which practically limited their jurisdiction to determine where hacks should stand, and that they should have no authority other than was given in that act. But from time to time, at every session of Congress, their powers have been increased, until now they are practically without limit. As I say, without this, Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, this is legislation. If it be not legislation contrary to law, it is new legislation. If it be not legislation contrary to law, it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

vision of the bill to which the point of order is made reads: After June 30, 1912, there shall be no appointments except by promotion to fill vacancies occurring in classes 1, 2, and 3 of privates in the Metropolitan police until the whole number of privates in all of said sections shall have been reduced to 640.

The provision shows clearly upon its face that it is a reduction of the number of employees. It also carries with it, by clear inference, an eventual reduction of the amount covered by the bill. In ruling upon a point of order a few days ago, and construing what is commonly called the Holman rule, the Chair held that it was not in order for the Committee on Appropriations to bring in as an integral part of an appropriation bill, nor would it be in order for any Member acting in his individual capacity to offer upon the floor, an amendment carry ing substantive legislation; that such proposed legislation must come as the report of the committee which under the rules of the House would have jurisdiction; and that the Committee on Appropriations and any individual Member is confined by the rule to the simple proposition of the reduction in the number and salary of the officers of the United States or to the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States or to the reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill.

It seems very clear to the Chair that this provision is simply a reduction of the number of employees, and as such is clearly in order under the first part of the so-called Holman rule; and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Chair said something in making his ruling, that I did not quite catch, about taking money out of the United States Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Chair rested his decision mainly upon the proposition that it reduces the number of employees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My question was as to whether the fact that it did take money out of the Federal Treasury would change the Chair's opinion about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that would be necessary. The Chair thinks it could rest wholly upon the single proposition that it reduces the number of employees. It is true that the rule says, "The reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States"; but the Chair thinks that expression, "officers of the United States," should be given a liberal construction, and that clearly the spirit of the rule is that the Metropolitan police here would come within The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk

The Clerk read as follows:

To aid in the support of the National Bureau of Criminal Identification, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, provided the several departments of the General Government may be entitled to like information from time to time as is accorded the police departments of various municipalities privileged to membership therein, $200.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I notice that last year $3,000 was appropriated for this fund and this year only $200 is provided. I would like to know why that great discrepancy in the

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that last year was the first time the item was carried in the bill. We secured a report from this organization, and ascertained that the maximum sum contributed by any officer of any police department of any city was $100, and that the aggregate sum of all the amounts contributed was $3,300. Inasmuch as we thought that that was out of proportion to what the District should contribute to this fund, we reduced the amount to just double the amount that any official of any police department or any municipality contributed to it.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Was this amount all used as it was used in the past?

Mr. BURLESON. It was carried in the last year's bill for the first time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I think it was carried in the bill twice, according to my recollection.

Mr. BURLESON. I would say to the gentleman from Illinois that we have not had any report from this organization for the fiscal year 1912, which will not expire until the 30th day of June, and consequently we can not secure a report covering of state, and consequency we can not seems a report covering the operations of the whole year.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. That is not material. I would say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] that I am largely responsible for the presence of the item in the bill. I am the father of that item. I myself brought forth the discussion as to whether we should reduce the amount, and I opposed the reduction at the time. It was shown by the report of the chief of the bureau or police association that the total amount of the subscriptions, I think, was about $4,400, and therefore the gentleman from Texas is in error in his figures.

Mr. BURLESON. I think it was $3,300. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. That is not material. The largest individual subscription was $100, and the amounts of the other subscriptions varied from that down as low as $15, contributed by the police departments of various cities and chiefs of police. The Government was paying under this item of $3,000 practically one-half of the total amount contributed. This organization, known as the National Bureau of Criminal Identification, is a sort of national clearing house for the identification of criminals.

Mr. MANN. Where is this located? Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Here in Washington. They pay rent, and they keep a man employed as an expert at a salary who collates all the Bertillon measurements, and so on, and that makes the information obtained in that line handily available to the police of the various cities of the United States for their information.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not every other city in the country maintain its own bureau?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Yes; other large cities do. merely a central clearing house. It is a National Bureau of Criminal Identification.

Mr. BURLESON. The cities of Chicago, New York, and Philadelphia do not participate in it at all?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. No; the cities of Chicago, New York, and Philadelphia do not participate in it, and do not contribute to it. I still insisted, however, that we should put up the usual amount of $3,000, when I was confronted with the fact, which I afterwards verified, that the associations embraced in the bureau had an unexpended surplus of $3,600 or $3,700. This is a lump sum of money which is turned over to them and is not drawn out except upon their own order. The consequence was that their argument that they needed $3,000 this year was not clearly brought out, and the committee took the ground that the District of Columbia, which gets only a limited benefit from the operations of this bureau, ought not to subscribe more than any other city subscribes. The War Department and the Navy Department use this bureau frequently in detecting deserters, as does the Post Office Department in detecting deserters, as does the Fost Onice Department in de-tecting criminals, and we thought the Federal Government should pay an adequate share. Possibly the appropriation should be larger, but personally I do not desire to see govern-mental money turned over to any organization of this kind, to be used at its own discretion as a special fund of its own, and for that reason I made no serious objection to the reduction.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including the purchase of new wagons, rewards for fugitives, modern revolvers, maintenance of card system, stationery, city directories, periodicals, telegraphing, telephoning, photographs, printing, binding, gas, ice, washing, meals for prisoners, furniture and repairs thereto, beds and bed clothing, insignia of office, purchase of horses, horse and vehicle for superintendent, bicycles, motor cycles, police equipments and repairs to the same, harness, forage, repairs to vehicles, van, and patrol wagons, motor patrol, and saddles, mounted equipments, and expenses incurred in the prevention and detection of crime, and other necessary expenses, $34,000; of which amount a sum not exceeding $500 may be expended by the major and superintendent of police for the prevention and detection of crime, under his certificate, approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and every such certificate shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the sum therein expressed to have been expended: Provided, That the War Department may, in its discretion, furnish the District Commissioners, for the use of the police, upon requisition, such worn mounted equipment as may be required.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, on page 60, in lines 22 and 23, I move to strike out the words "modern revolvers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 60, in lines 22 and 23, strike out the words "modern revolvers."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this item provides for the purchase of modern revolvers. I do not believe that a greater mistake could be made than to equip the police force, or, as far as that is concerned, to equip an individual, with a modern revolver. The modern revolver is an automatic pistol which fires a small steel-jacketed bullet.

Mr. SISSON. And fires 10 shots automatically.
Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They fire very rapidly, but that is not important. No man should fire a steel-bullet gun of any description for use in a crowded street, or anywhere else where there is a crowd. If one of these weapons, which will shoot a mile or more, is fired in a crowded street, the man who is fired at may be killed, but nobody can tell how many other people will be killed away up the street. In the next place, it is not a weapon that a policeman ought to have for his own defense. If I were engaged in a pistol duel with a man I would very much prefer that he should have one of these modern revolvers. In every instance that any of you can recall where a modern revolver, shooting one of these small steeljacketed bullets, has been used, the man who was hurt with it has been able to stand up long enough to have killed his adversary.

In my county but a little more than a year ago a city marshal killed three men with one of these modern revolvers. He shot one of them four times in the breast. Every bullet went clear through. That man walked blocks before he fell. Another was shot three times through. He walked a greater distance, was undressed and put to be a undressed and put to bed, sent for a doctor, and did not die until in the night. The other man was shot twice and lived a day or two. So if it is protection you want for the policemen, or if the intent is to disable a criminal, then you want the oldfashioned, big, soft bullet, and that will do the work. Every man struck by one of those soft bullets, although not in a vital place, is sure to be put out of the contest. But when, as I have just said, you shoot him with one of these little steel-jacketed bullets, if the man who is thus shot wants to fight, he can stand up long enough to kill the man who has shot him. know of one instance where a man was struck directly on the spinal column with a steel-jacketed bullet, and his neck was instantly broken, but in every other case I have read of and in all the cases you see recorded in the papers the man shot with a steel-jacketed bullet has stood up after receiving shot after shot. A short time ago a prominent man who lived in this city was killed in New York. He was shot, I think, seven times with one of these automatic pistols. Yet he did not fall. If he had been armed and had been game to the core, he could have stood there and killed the man who had shot him so often.

Therefore I think this provision to arm the police with "modern pistols" ought to be stricken out. They should not be permitted to have them; first, for their own safety, and, next, for the safety of the people on the crowded streets where these pistols may be fired. One of these steel bullets, although fired at a man who should be shot, would penetrate the ordinary brick wall of a residence or storehouse and might kill some one within. The bullets will kill, but they do not quickly disable. I once heard of a fellow who had a big Smith & Wesson .44 caliber, and somebody asked him why he carried that kind of a pistol. He said in answer, "That kind of a pistol excludes dying declarations." The burglar who has a pistol which dying declarations." The burglar who has a pistol which carries a big, soft bullet has the better of a policeman who has the "modern pistol." Besides, the innocent bystander has many more chances to "stop a stray bullet" fired from a pistol of great penetration than from one of lesser penetration. of the States forbid the use of a long-range rifle in the forests when deer are being hunted for fear of killing a man over in the next county.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The gentleman proposes to strike out the words "modern revolvers." Why strike out both words? Mr. SAUNDERS. Simply strike out the word "modern."

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. You want to leave the right to purchase revolvers

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. May we not assume that these men already have revolvers

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. There are new men coming in all the time, and old men dying.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think you have just provided that new men shall not come on.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I have not provided that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The bill does. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. But then there will be changes, in spite of that fact.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If revolvers are to be purchased, there ought to be a provision that these steel-jacketed bullet pistols shall not be purchased to be used by the policemen in crowded streets.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The gentleman does not contend that the words "modern revolver" necessarily mean weapons that fire steel bullets. There are plenty of revolvers of ordinary make that do not fire steel bullets.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Those are the ones I want used by the police; but from inquiry at the municipal building I understand that they desire the pistol which carries the steel bullet, and the policemen around the House Office Building are armed with that kind of weapon.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The language of the bill does not confine them to the purchase of automatic revolvers, it merely means an arm of modern make.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, just one word in this con-With no predilection for the steel bullet, or the pistol that fires the steel bullets, I think this may be taken to be true; that the police of this city, and of every city, ought to be equipped with that form of pistol which will most effectively enable them to cope with desperate criminals, using the most effective small arms of modern type. If the pistol described by the gentleman from Kentucky is the most effective, then that is the one with which they should be equipped with; if, on the other hand the modern pistol is the most effective, then that is the one with which they should be provided. Authority ought to be given to the officials in control to determine the type of pistol proper to be used in the District. This is a proper function of the police authorities, and one that this House should ot invade. We are not experts on small arms. Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield? not invade.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.
Mr. SIMS. Is it not a fact that the police, when they are compelled to use firearms, are most always in very close quarters?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I say that whenever a policeman has occasion to use an arm of this kind, when opposed to an armed criminal, he ought to have a weapon fully as good as that in the possession of the criminal.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I insist that he ought to have a better one.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes, if one can be secured. Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If he has one with a soft-nose bullet, and that bullet strikes the arm or the leg, the criminal is down and out, but if a steel bullet strikes him on the thigh it bores a hole through it, but he does not fall.

Mr. SIMS. And it does not stop at the criminal's thigh, but keeps on and goes through the thighs of the rest of them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If a soft-nosed bullet strikes the man it knocks him down.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be no dif-ference between us on the main proposition, that the police ought to have the most effective form of small arm. Without entering into a discussion of what that most effective form may be, I think the paragraph ought to so read that the authorities charged with the selection of these arms may be free to purchase those which in their judgment are the most effective.

Why not put in a proviso that they shall not use Mr. SIMS. the steel bullet?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Because I am not prepared to admit that the conclusion reached by the gentleman from Kentucky is correct. He may be right; I am not prepared however to admit that he is. But if the police authorities were heard from, they might be firmly of the opinion that the particular arm using this particular bullet, is the one best suited for the conditions of modern police service.

Mr. SIMS. There is no doubt that the steel bullet is efficient, but it may kill half a dozen men.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I am speaking of the effective capacity. If the police authorities believe, and are able to support their belief by sufficient facts that the pistol to which the gentleman from Kentucky refers, is the one of all others that they need, surely we ought not to provide that they will be excluded from its use. All that is required to give the authorities the necessary discretion in the purchase of small arms for the police, is to strike out the word "modern," and leave in the word This will allow the authorities charged with this "revolver." particular function, to purchase such revolvers as they may deem best suited to the exigencies of the service. It seems to me unwise to prescribe to the police authorities the particular kind of weapon they shall, or shall not use. They ought to be given a discretion, and permitted to select in conformity with their own judgment, the most effective firearm for the use of the patrolmen.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to enter into a discussion on the respective merits of different kinds of revolvers; but inasmuch as something has been said, I felt called upon to enter my protest against policemen carrying any kind of revolver, whether it be deadly or not. [Applause.] In England, which is noted for obedience to the law, I know of no police officer who is permitted to carry such a deadly small arm.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, that undoubtedly was the rule in England for a long time, but I understand that it had to be abandoned.

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not speak with authority, for it is some years since I was in England. I know then the police on the streets were not armed with revolvers, and I was surprised, almost shocked, when I heard the statement made that the police around the Office Building and in the Capitol are armed with revolvers. I appreciate that it is the duty of the police to maintain order and arrest criminals, but I do not think that it is necessary, in order to perform those duties, that they should be given charge of a weapon which is used on many occasions when it ought not to be used. Men who are guilty of misdemeanors, men who are guilty of what might be called minor felonies, are shot at and sometimes killed by these police officers; and I believe we would be going a long step toward better order, better law, more security of life, if we prohibited the use of pistols by police officers instead of undertaking to determine the most effective kind of weapon that they shall I simply wanted to say that, and inasmuch as the amendment offered by my colleague from Kentucky is to strike out the words "modern revolvers," and as it will, in some degree, result in the reform that I favor, though not in effecting what think he advocated-the use of a certain type of revolver-I shall be glad to see the amendment adopted.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, with respect to the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] that the policemen in Great Britain do not carry pistols, I wish to say that formerly this was true, just as at one time the English railroads did not allow the engine drivers to have any form of protection from the weather, upon the theory that service under such conditions made the men more vigilant, and efficient. But public opinion in both particulars has undergone The railroads no longer deem it necessary to expose their engineers to the fiercest vicissitudes of the weather without any form of cab protection, and in police circles a realizing sense of the fact that the patrolmen are often required under circumstances of the greatest danger to grapple with desperate criminals armed to the teeth with modern and rapid-firing small arms has caused a modification of the original attitude. Patrolmen are no longer inhibited, as I understand, from carrying pistols where occasion requires that it should be done. Surely Washington is not to be made the only city where policemen are forbidden firearms as a part of their usual equipment while

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to emphasize what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] has said. It is true that at times policemen undertaking to make arrests of dangerous criminals ought to be armed with a deadly weapon, but unless the policeman has a warrant to execute, or has knowledge that he is going to undertake such dangerous business, he should not be permitted to go through the streets a walking arsenal, drawing a pistol and firing it where the bullet may strike numerous people, simply in order to arrest a criminal who perhaps has committed only a misdemeanor.

Mr. SAUNDERS. He is not required to have a warrant in order to make an arrest.

Mr. SIMS. Not at all.

Mr. SAUNDERS. And he can never know in the discharge of his regular duties when one of these occasions of preency may arise, when the possession of a weapon is essential.

Mr. SIMS. He may sometimes meet an armed man and undertake to arrest him in the ordinary discharge of his duty.

But I want to speak of the other matter which has been referred to. What is the advantage of this steel bullet? It is in its penetration. You can take one of these modern rifles, loaded with a steel bullet, and penetrate a tree 3 feet thick.

That is the trouble with these bullets and with shooting in a crowded street. You may not only kill the man at whom you shoot, but you may kill or wound a dozen innocent people, and I have always entertained the idea that it is better to let a guilty man go free occasionally than to kill or wound several innocent people in order to arrest him. I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] is exactly right, and that we should not permit under any circumstances the use of such a weapon by a policeman or anyone else in the District. Its penetration is so great and terrible that this of itself should prohibit its use. We should adopt whatever amendment may be necessary to prohibit the policemen of the District from using such a weapon, and to do so would be humane. I think it would be in accordance with modern morality.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman were himself a policemanand God forbid that he ever shall be anything but a states-man—and should see a burglar at night in a dark alley, whom he knew to be armed with a modern gun, the gentleman as a policeman having nothing but a club, what would the gentleman do?

Mr. SIMS. I would be just as afraid of him if he had an old-fashioned pepper-box pistol and I had nothing but a club.

It would not take a modern one to alarm me.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not a coward at all, but the gentleman knows very well that a policeman would not undertake to arrest at night a burglar who was armed when the policeman was not.

Mr. SIMS. Then let us provide that they may carry deadly weapons at night or when they are going to make an arrest, but not in the ordinary duties of walking around this Capitol and up and down the streets, preventing people from being run over street cars, automobiles, and other deadly instrumentalities

Why, there is no need of going around with a modern pistol that can kill a man 5,000 yards away and shoot through, possibly, 50 people. That is uncivilized and ought not to be tolerated anywhere. No frontier town should tolerate such a thing as that, and I think it is better to let a few burglars escape than to kill a lot of innocent people, which might take place by the use of these so-called modern pistols or guns.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I would suggest to the gentleman that the innocent bystanders are generally hit by poor marksmanship rather than by spent bullets.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman must admit that a bullet that will penetrate 3 feet of wood will penetrate 15 feet of men.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. What rule would the gentleman prescribe by which policemen could be guided so that they may know when they are going to make an arrest?

Mr. SIMS. They could not always know, I will admit that, but I would rather have fewer arrests made than to kill or wound innocent people in making such arrests.

Mr. MANN. Require the burglar to publish his intentions in

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SIMS. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended to enable me to answer the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Of course the gentleman understands there is a law against the carrying of concealed weapons in this District?

Mr. SIMS. A very poor law. Mr. BARTHOLDT. And the gentleman is undoubtedly aware that that law is being violated constantly; that a large number of persons, in spite of that law, are carrying concealed weapons. Does not the gentleman think that if you deprive the police of the revolvers it will be necessary not only to en-force that law more strictly but also to repeal any permit or every permit that has ever been issued to allow a person to carry concealed weapons; and should we not, in case we find anyone unauthorized carrying such concealed weapons, punish him more severely and send him to the penitentiary instead of letting him off with a small fine?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I introduced a bill several years ago, and also one which is now pending in the District Committee, to make it a felony for persons to carry concealed weapons, other than officers of the law or the military or the Navy, in the District of Columbia. I make it a felony for them to be carried by any person not authorized to do so. The idea of allowing a permit to carry pistols in the District of Columbia is absurd. What do you want a permit to go armed for? If my life is in danger I have got the Army and the Navy and the police and my friend from Missouri to protect meMr. BARTHOLDT. Oh, yes.

Mr. SIMS. In addition to my own efforts in that direction. It ought to be made a felony in this District to carry concealed weapons, and no man, unless he is an officer of the law, should be permitted to carry them; and it ought to be made a felony to sell them to those not authorized to carry them, and that will remove a great deal of the danger to policemen and also any necessity for carrying pistols. If it is a felony to carry a pistol, the burglar will go up to the penitentiary for carrying it, and every man in the District who draws a pistol will go to the penitentiary, and therefore policemen will not be confronted with the danger of meeting an armed man if it is made a felony for anyone to carry a pistol unless he was authorized by law to do so. If it was a felony to carry or sell, or offer to sell, pistols, regardless of the use to be made of them, in this District and searches made by the police of all suspected persons, day or night, crimes of all character would be reduced to a minimum.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I do not wish to be understood as being in favor of the policemen not being armed. I think they should be. The modern weapon is, in my judgment, a very inferior weapon to the one of 10, 15, or 20 years ago. I am in favor of the modern battleship, the guns of which have penetration; but I am opposed to the modern pistol, because it has too much penetration. The less it has the more effective it is.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman if the contlemen will yield.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, if we can bring this discussion to an end, I will agree that the word "modern" be stricken out.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If this is to provide them with modern weapons, then the two words should be stricken out. Let them keep the weapons they have, not only for their own sake, but for the sake of the public. Do not provide them with these modern weapons of great penetration.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 60, line 23, after the word "revolvers," I move to strike out the comma, so there will be only one comma left after the words "modern revolvers" are stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the comma after the word "revolvers."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous: For repairs and improvements to engine houses and grounds, $12,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman in reference to the amount of this appropriation for repairs and improvements to engine houses and grounds.

Mr. BURLESON. We appropriated in this bill exactly the amount that was carried in last year's bill.

Mr. MANN. What was the estimate this year? Mr. BURLESON. Seventeen thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. I noticed in a discussion here the other day that some gentleman, I think, on that side of the House, statedand I have no doubt it was correct, because he is a colleague of mine-that some of the buildings here were very insanitary and ought to be put in proper condition; that it was a disgrace to any Government to maintain those buildings in the shape in which they are now. Can the gentleman give us any information of the subject?

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I think the language was a little strong, but some of the Mr. BURLESON. engine houses are not in the condition they should be—probably one or two of them. The gentleman will understand that just at this time we are in a process of evolution, as it were, in the use of motor-drawn fire apparatus and horse-drawn fire apparatus, and the insanitary features of these fire-engine rooms is occasioned by the proximity of the horses to the men who are engaged in the fire department service, and we thought at this time that we would not appropriate any further money for the purpose of correcting these conditions until we could determine what policy we would adopt with reference to the use of motor-drawn fire engines.

Mr. MANN. How many motor-drawn engines are to be paid for out of this appropriation?

Mr. BURLESON. None at all. I will say to the gentleman that we have one motor-drawn vehicle now in use, and at the end of the next fiscal year we will be able to tell not only its effectiveness, but what economy can be effected, or the comparative cost of the horse-drawn fire engine with the motordrawn vehicle.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember but a few years ago Congress had a spasm, and a very proper one, and provided for the inspection of all meats, and the further provision that there should be no lavatories or anything of the sort in the rooms where meats were being handled. Now, here is the situation, as I understand it: Horses and men practically sleep together, eat together, and live together, and the only claim that the gentleman makes now is that we may change our policy and do away with the horses and provide that all fire engines shall be drawn by motors.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman candidly that I do not think this condition jeopardizes the health of these men in the slightest.

I have a great deal of confidence on matters of Mr. MANN. this sort in the opinion of my colleague from Chicago, Mr. BUCHANAN, who may be very enthusiastic at times with reference to such matters, but still is quite capable of forming an accurate opinion, and I am sure, from what he stated here the other day, that he considered this a very great disgrace. Will not the gentleman be willing to amend the amount and make it $17,000, so that conditions can be corrected?

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that I do not deem it necessary at this time. We made a personal inspection of these fire-engine rooms or halls, and it is not true that the men and horses sleep together. The men have very comfortable quarters on the second floor of the buildings occupied by the fire engines, and we were of the opinion that it was unnecessary at this time to change them. And I can not consent, and I do not think that the committee ought to consent, to this expenditure at this time, in the interest of proper economy in the use of public money.

Mr. MANN. Well, I dislike very much to be run over when I know I am right, but I suppose I will have to take it. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment and offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

On page 64, line 4, strike out the word "twelve" and insert the word "seventeen."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and, on a division (demanded by Mr. Mann), there were-ayes 12, noes 28.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

Health officer, $4,000; assistant health officer, who shall be a physician, and during the absence or disability of the health officer shall act as health officer and discharge the duties incident to that position, $2,500; chief clerk and deputy health officer, $2,500; clerk, $1,400; 5 clerks, 2 of whom may act as sanitary and food inspectors, at $1,200 each; 3 clerks, at $1,000 each; clerk, $720; chief inspector and deputy health officer, $1,800; assistant chief inspector, $1,600; 14 sanitary and food inspectors, at $1,200 each; 2 inspectors, at $1,000 each; 2 inspectors, at $1,000 each; sanitary and food inspector, who shall be a veterinary surgeon and act as inspector of live stock and dairy farms, $1,200; 4 inspectors of dairies and dairy farms, at least 2 of whom shall be veterinary surgeons, at $1,000 each; 2 inspectors of dairies and dairy farms, at least 1 of whom shall be a veterinary surgeon, at $1,000 each; 5 sanitary and food inspectors, to assist in the enforcement of the milk and pure-food laws and the regulations relating thereto, $900; sanitary and food inspector, to assist in the enforcement of the milk and pure-food laws and the regulations relating thereto, $900; sanitary and food inspector, to assist in the enforcement of the milk and pure-food laws and the regulations relating thereto, $900; sanitary and food inspector, who shall also inspect dairy products and shall be a practical chemist. $1,800; messenger and janitor, $600; skilled laborer, $600; driver, $600; poundmaster, $1,200; laborers, at not exceeding $50 per month each, $2,000; in all, $62,620.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, there is a mistake on

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, there is a mistake on line 18, page 65, where the first word is misspelled. The word "thousand" is misspelled by the omission of the letter "t." I only ask that it be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOB].
The Clerk read as follows:

Insert a "t" in the word "thousand," at the beginning of line 18. page 65.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 65 strike out all after the word "each," in line 23, down to and including the word "dollars," on line 1 of page 66.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, it is simply to correct a mistake in the printing of the bill. They included an employee who was not authorized by law.

Mr. MANN. We can not tell from the reading of the amendment what is proposed to be done. What is it?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for the reporting of the amendment again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment

The amendment was again read.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. It strikes out but one employee?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What is the purpose?

Mr. BURLESON. It was a mistake in including the em-He was not authorized by the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Here is an employee who is to assist in the enforcement of the milk law and of the pure-food law. I do not know whether it was authorized by the committee or not, but I know very well they have not got enough inspectors in Washington now, either for the enforcement of the pure-food law or of the milk-inspection law.

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman from Illinois will desist for a moment, I have a letter here which will throw some light on the subject, and after having it read I propose to submit a few observations on the subject. I send the letter to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 17, 1912.

Washington, D. C., January 17, 1912.

My Dear Mr. Burleson: Splendid work has been done in the bacteriological laboratory of the health department since Congress authorized the examination of milk and water. More than 300 cows that were affected with tuberculosis have been detected by the limited investigations that have recently been instituted. In one herd of 135 cows 80 were found to be infected with tuberculosis. The milk from this herd was largely used in the raw state for infant feeding. These cows had to be killed at the expense of the owner. This entailed a severe loss. Inclosed please find a copy of my remarks at the Monday Evening Club. I sincerely trust that after reading them you will feel that you can restore the items for the health office.

Yours, truly,

G. Lloyd Magruder.

Mr. BURLESON. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that it is the purpose of the committee to allow every employee that is asked for the dairy and milk inspection service. As a matter of fact, this is a very confusing item, and we requested the chief of the health department for a redraft of this item, but he begged that we do not insist upon it at this time, but that we should give him another year in order that he might rearrange the items carried in this bill.

I recognize the urgency of the service mentioned in Dr. Magruder's letter. Undoubtedly the nonexamination of the butter and milk that has been disposed of in the District of Columbia has been a prolific source of disease, and on that account we have been affording the health department every facility, as far as we can, for the examination of milk and butter, with a view of protecting the people of the District of Columbia from the terrible disease which comes through the use of butter which is not inspected.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Are there a sufficient number of inspectors to enable the health department to send inspectors out to the various farms which furnish milk and butter to the District of Columbia, and to inspect the sanitary condition of the stables, and the kind of food that is given to the cows, and all that, before the milk is used?

Mr. BURLESON. It was our purpose to furnish an adequate number of inspectors. It was our desire to allow every in-spector of milk and dairy products asked for by the health department. The inspectors that are carried in this item are designated as food inspectors, sanitary inspectors, milk inspectors, and dairy inspectors. At nearly every session of Congress there is a request from the health department that a change of designation be made, or a shifting of the titles be made, of these various inspectors. We clearly indicated our desire and purpose to give every milk and dairy inspector that was asked for by the head of the health department, and I think we have done so. We feel quite sure that we have furnished at this time an adequate force for the purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Are milk inspections made at the sources of supply?

Mr. BURLESON. We have a number of inspectors who go to the sources of supply, who examine the dairies themselves, not only within the limits but beyond the limits of the District of Columbia. For that reason we carry quite a large appropriation for the transportation of these men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas

Mr. BOWMAN. I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended sufficiently to enable him to answer an inquiry that I wish to make

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bowman] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended as stated. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. BOWMAN. In connection with a case of typhoid fever which occurred recently in this city I visited the health department and asked them what arrangement they had to inspect dairies. I stated in my remarks yesterday that there were seven inspectors, but upon consulting the record I find that there are only six to inspect 1,100 dairies. In response to my inquiry as to what facilities they had for examining the dairies, they stated that they were not anything like sufficient. I see by referring to the hearing before the committee that a request is made for seven. If this is the additional inspector referred to,

I trust that the committee will permit him to remain.

Just one word in that connection. I am satisfied from the conversation I had with the health department that there are not anything like sufficient inspectors properly to protect the milk supply of this city. The product of every dairy sending milk to this city should be examined. The case of typhoid of which I have spoken was that of a young boy who had lived 14 years in a town of nothing like the size of Washington. He had reached the age of 14 years in perfect health, but on coming to Washington was exposed to the milk of one of these dairies which was supposed to be the very best. A special price was paid for the milk. Even in view of the fact that it came from a special dairy and was supposed to be subjected to special examination, it developed that the milk was of varying quality, showing that there was not sufficient examination made of the milk. Any gentleman here who is a parent can appreciate the expense and anxiety connected with a sickness of this kind. This one case cost upward of a thousand dollars, to say nothing about the anxiety. I ask the committee to permit this extra inspector to remain in the bill.

Mr. BURLESON. I am in full sympathy with the purpose the gentleman has in view. I recognize that there is no more prolific source of disease than milk and butter sold without being properly inspected. In fact, I have been for years an earnest advocate of putting upon the market at a cheap price a wholesome food product in competition with this unwholesome butter that is being offered for sale. I want to assure the gentleman that as far as the committee is concerned it has been our purpose at all times to give adequate inspection of milk and dairy products for this District. Instead of having 11, there are 13 milk and dairy inspectors provided for in this bill. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is now trying to make a calculation of the number, but it is a very difficult matter to find.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken.

culation before the bill came on the floor of the House.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman is always up to date. Mr. MANN. I thought the committee in their liberality had succeeded in concealing one extra new man, and they had in the bill, but now they propose to strike him out.

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; because that is not our purpose, in-asmuch as we have 13 inspectors at this time, and we think that is a sufficient number.

Mr. BOWMAN. There are not 13, according to the information given to me by the department. There are only 6.
Mr. BURLESON. You could not visit any department or bureau in Washington and make an inquiry about the labor being performed by that particular bureau, department, or division, where they would not tell you that they needed more men and more money, and that they ought to be given additional assistance.

I assure the gentleman that I am just as earnestly in favor of what he has in mind as he can possibly be, and it was the desire and purpose of the Committee on Appropriations to allow all of the milk and dairy inspectors that were asked for, and I think we did it.

Mr. BOWMAN. The fact still remains that the inspectors who go outside to examine dairies only number six.

informed upon special inquiry that there are only six to go outside and examine eleven hundred dairies.

Mr. BURLESON. They have 13, and why do they not send out 7?

Mr. BOWMAN. Because they are needed in the city, I suppose, for other inspections.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman said that we had 11 inspectors and he wanted 12, and now when I inform him that there are 13 he wants more.

Mr. BOWMAN. I think we should have 20 in order to properly protect the health of the city. It would all be saved in Would the gentleman think that $20,000 would compensate him for the loss of a son or a daughter?

Mr. MANN. Where are these eleven hundred dairies that the gentleman speaks of?

Mr. BOWMAN. They supply the city of Washington.

Mr. MANN. Where are they located?

Mr. BOWMAN. The department stated that they extended from Niagara Falls to North Carolina.

Mr. MANN. That is what I thought. Does anybody believe that we ought to send inspectors to Niagara Falls and North Carolina for the benefit of those localities?

Mr. BURLESON. The committee is satisfied that it has given adequate inspection for the service to be performed.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I find that there are 8 inspectors, with some other titles attached to them, on dairies and dairy farms, and 4 sanitary inspectors, who shall see to the enforcement of the milk and pure-food law, and that makes 12. Then there is a sanitary food inspector to assist in the milk and pure-food law, and that makes 13.

So there are 8 men that have to see directly to the dairies and dairy farms, and the others attend to their duties and at the same time attend to the enforcement of the milk and pure-

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was considered, and the amendment was agreed

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For the enforcement of the provisions of an act to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1897, and an act for the prevention of scarlet fever, diphtheria, measles, whooping cough, chicken pox, epidemic cerebrospinal meningitis, and typhoid fever in the District of columbia, approved February 9, 1907, and an act to provide for registration of all cases of tuberculosis in the District of Columbia, for free examination of sputum in suspected cases, and for preventing the spread of tuberculosis in said District, approved May 13, 1908, under the direction of the health officer of said District, and for the prevention of other communicable diseases, including salaries or compensation for personal services not exceeding $10,000 when ordered in writing by the commissioners and necessary for the enforcement and execution of said acts, purchase and maintenance of necessary horses, wagons, and harness, rent of stables, purchase of reference books and medical journals, and maintenance of quarantine station and smallpox hospital, $23,000: Provided, That any bacteriologist employed under this appropriation shall not be paid more than $8 per day and may be assigned by the health officer to the bacteriological examination of milk and of other dairy products and of the water supplies of dairy farms, whether such examinations be or be not directly related to contagious diseases.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I want a little information from the chairman of the The board of commissioners asks for an appropriation of $25,000 for this item, and I understand they had $24,500 last year. What is the reason for the decrease?

Mr. BURLESON. I will state that we cut the limit of cost for personal services from $15,000 to $10,000, and we thought that would afford an additional amount that could be expended for other purposes; and consequently we reduced it.

Mr. LOBECK. I might say, in addition, that there has always been a provision for a bacteriological man to examine into the milk and milk supply of the dairy farms and all other dairy

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I observe the appropriation for personal services for contagious and communicable diseases and examining the sputum of tuberculosis has been reduced from $15,000 to $10,000. It occurs to me, in view of the fact that extra precautious are being taken in reference to these diseases, that this appropriation ought not to be reduced. would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he can give us some reason why that should be cut down $5,000.

Mr. BURLESON. The reason is we did not think the fund should be absorbed by paying for personal services, and, furthermore, we have recently established a tuberculosis hospital, which obviated the necessity for inspection to be made under this particular item.

I will state, further, that three years ago the Committee on Appropriations limited this sum to $6,000, because we found that gradually the entire sum appropriated was being absorbed for personal services. It was not the intention of Congress that that should be done. We carried it at $6,000 in the bill for one year, and upon representations being made to the committee we increased the amount. We had information that led us to believe that we could safely make this reduction from $15,000 to $10,000 at this time; that there was no necessity for this being absorbed in the way of compensating physicians.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that in communicable diseases of the character mentioned here a large part of the money would naturally be expended for personal services and in looking after and investigating these diseases. I do not believe that the gentleman has fully answered the question, when we take into consideration the number of diseases that are enumerated. Then, further, the tuberculosis hospital being established may take in some cases, yet it does not relieve the natural inspection that would come of this disease throughout the city and in the District.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to go into the details of the extravagances that were brought to our attention, but I shall mention one.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That is what I would like to have. Mr. BURLESON. They had a Filipino, who was a leper, confined out here. They had three men at one time engaged in watching him continuously when there was no danger of anybody breaking in to get to the leper and the leper had absolutely no desire to leave.

Mr. MANN. And he could not have communicated the disease if he had gotten out.

Mr. BURLESON. And he could not have communicated the disease if he had left. It was the judgment of the committee that this sum would be sufficient. We did not strike in the dark at this proposition. We thought we knew what we were doing, and we did not propose that the money should be unnecessarily expended for personal services, and consequently we put this limitation upon it, because we thought it was a proper limitation to be placed upon the amount to be expended for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I would state that I fully agree with the statement of the gentleman with reference to the men set to watch the Filipino leper, when nobody could contract the disease, and that it was a useless expenditure of money; but this is cutting down the appropriation 331 per cent, and I wanted some information about it.

Mr. BURLESON. I have given it to the gentleman. Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. And I thank the gentleman for his kindness in answering my inquiry.

Mr. BURLESON. I have not given all of the information that I have, but I think enough to satisfy him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to resist the motion to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some additional information. I would ask the gentleman from Texas whether, in the consideration of this paragraph, they took into account the danger of bubonic plague in this country next summer or the year thereafter?

Mr. BURLESON. Within the District of Columbia?

Mr. MANN. In the country. The effect will be the same—also in the District. If we have bubonic plague, is it not likely that it would be cared for under an appropriation like this?

Mr. BURLESON. Undoubtedly; but the gentleman is also aware of the fact that quite a large appropriation is carried under a provision of the bill which provides for the maintenance of the Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but they do not contribute the money which the local communities are supposed to contribute out of that fund, I would say to the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I am not in the habit, I hope, of making sensational statements, and I hope this one will not be considered sensational; but my advices are that there is every reason to believe that bubonic plague will get into the country within the next year or so. If it should get in, undoubtedly there will be a great clamor, and properly so, for the expenditure of money for the protection of cities and the prevention of the spread of the disease. I do not think the plague will get beyond control, but I think there ought to be a fund in the hands of some one when Congress is not in session to help take care of a situation of that sort, and the appropriation for the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service will not cover it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why not?

Mr. MANN. It is not designed to take the place of the expenditure of local money at all.

Mr. BURLESON. They are using it in the State of Cali-

They are using it in part in California, but the Mr. MANN. great bulk of the expense out there is paid for by the State of California.

Mr. FITZGERALD. California is not paying any of the ex-

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that as to the bubonic plague. I have been over that subject carefully.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My information is that the last Legislature of California passed a bill to appropriate money for this purpose, and that bill was vetoed by the governor.

Mr. MANN. They have not any bubonic plague there.

Mr. BURLESON. And the Federal Government has appropriated a million dollars for the purpose.

Mr. MANN. When they had bubonic plague in San Francisco they contributed very largely to the expense.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, we are expending a very large sum of money now for the purpose of ridding several counties in the State of California of rats and squirrels.

Mr. MANN. That is very true.
Mr. FITZGERALD. It is costing, I think, a thousand dollars a rat, and the State of California has declined to contribute a

Mr. MANN. That is to prevent spread of the disease; that is not because anyone has the disease there.

Mr. BURLESON. Right in that connection I want to state to the gentleman that last year the bill carried an appropriation for the extermination of rats

Mr. MANN. And I think it ought to be in this bill, too. Mr. BURLESON. And I suppose it was effectively expended, because the authorities did not ask for its continuance this

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly; I yield. Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I happen to know something about the expenditures of money in the State of California for the purpose of stamping out the bubonic plague. The counties have all contributed their quota toward this work. When the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service first announced that they had found cases of the plague in San Francisco the leading citizens met the officers of that service and subscribed a large fund for the purpose of helping to exterminate the rats which carried the infected fleas that spread the disease. I am quite aware of the fact that some of the counties of the State have made application to the Government, or, rather, have appealed to the Congress to make appropriations for the purpose of exterminating squirrels. It has been found that ground squirrels, like rats, carry the fleas which spread the plague. do not know just how far the work has progressed, but I believe the entire country is vitally interested in that matter. It is not alone a local question. If ever the bubonic plague gets its hold upon the people of this country it will cost millions of dollars to exterminate it, and I think it hardly fair to say that it costs $100 to exterminate a rat or a squirrel, because the value of the elimination of the death-spreading rodents can not be calculated by dollars and cents. There have been a number of cases of death on account of the plague, and it is in the interest of the health of the citizens of the entire country that

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KAHN. Certainly.
Mr. COX of Ohio. I would like to make the suggestion to the gentleman that in the very wonderful exhibit which San Francisco proposes to make they are overlooking something—

Mr. KAHN. I did not hear the gentleman's statement. Mr. COX of Ohio. I would like to suggest that the State of California is overlooking doubtless its most wonderful exhibit. Of all the rats and squirrels which were destroyed not nearly 10,000 were found to be infected with the plague. Those 10,000 rats and squirrels cost $1,000,000. In other words, you have the distinction of having $100 rats, because the 10,000 rats cost the Government $1,000,000.

Mr. KAHN. Well, if it did cost that much to exterminate the rats it was worth it to the country at large. Of course, they exterminated a great many more than 10,000. They probably exterminated a half a million, but in that number they found only 10,000 infected rats. If these rats had been carried beyond the confines of the State of California, which could easily have been done in cases where the vermin had sought refuge in freight trains, and if the disease had been carried to any distant section of the Union, I dare say the Congress would have been called upon to expend many millions of dollars to stamp out the disease, and the country would have been very glad to have had the money expended to stamp it out. The counties and municipalities of California are all voting money for the purpose of helping the Federal officials, and in that respect I may say that California has invariably done her share toward any public work—

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Ohio has stated that the extermination of 10,000 rats cost $1,000,000. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from California how much the gentleman thinks it would cost the Government if they had one case of bubonic plague in Dayton, Ohio?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Ohio would be the first gentleman on this floor to arise and request an appropriation in order to stamp out the plague there and prevent its spread to the other States of the Union.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I think it should be stated for the information of the committee that neither the gentleman from California nor the gentleman from Chicago, living in those god-forsaken parts of the world, are the least mindful of the blessings of nature which we enjoy around about Dayton, Ohio, and we are absolutely impervious by reason of them to the plague. I think it would be impossible really in this country, except in Chicago and San Francisco.

Mr. MANN. I have sometimes wondered if people ever died in Dayton. I think most of them leave there before they come to the dieable age.

Mr. KAHN. That is very true. They do not live there any longer than they have to, and many of them have gone to California and have grown up with that State and are among our leading citizens. We are proud of them, and they are glad they left Dayton and came to California.

Mr. COX of Ohio. You mean her Chinese citizens have all gone to California, where rats are plentiful?

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman were familiar with the subject he would not say "Chinese citizens," because there are none. The native-born Chinese is an American citizen, and the Chinaman born in China can never become a citizen of this country.

[The time of the gentleman from California having expired, by unanimous consent he was granted five minutes additional.]
Mr. BURLESON. I wish to read the law showing that authority exists to take care of the bubonic-plague situation:

Prevention of epidemics: The President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, typhus fever, yellow fever, smallpox, bubonic plague, Chinese plague, or black death, to use the unexpended balance of the sums appropriated and reappropriated by the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 25. 1910, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in aid of State and local boards, or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same, including pay and allowances of all officers and employees of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service assigned to duty in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same, and in such emergency in the execution of any quarantine laws which may be then in force. and in such emergence may be then in force.

Mr. KAHN. How much money is left in the unexpended balance under that act?

Mr. BURLESON. I do not know to what extent California has ravaged the fund, but, as I understand it, it was considerably in excess of a million dollars at one time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not deem that has anything to do with the fiscal year of this appropriation act, does he?
Mr. BURLESON. Oh, no; but the law is still in force.

Mr. MANN. What is the use of quoting it now, then? Mr. BURLESON. The law is still in force.

For the fiscal year 1913 it is not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Appropriations have not been recommended yet. The expenditure would not be under the District Commissioners, as there is a law for the prevention of epidemics in any part of the United States, and the services are rendered by the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service. Since 1899 Congress has appropriated for that purpose $3,350,000. gentleman seems to be indignant that anybody should reflect on what the State of California is doing or how much it is costing per rat or squirrel to do this work. I would like, with his permission, to call attention to some information recently quired. The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury was before the Committee on Appropriations some time in December. He made the statement that infected squirrels were found in 12 counties in California. In 1907 a movement was started to eradicate the rats infected with the bubonic plague, and in the cities of San Francisco, Berkeley, and other places it was found the infection came from a peculiar flea that infected the rats that infected the food that would in turn infect the individual.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman does not mean to say that the flea infected the food? The flea bites the individual just as the yellow-fever mosquito does.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And lives on the rats and squirrels. And then they undertook to eliminate these rats from these cities. of 12. cities. They say they have cleaned them from 3 counties out of 12. The Federal Government has to-day in California an organization engaged in the work that is costing $23,000 a month. The statement by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury was to the effect that he had information that during the last session of the California Legislature a bill passed the lower house calling for $100,000, that the amount was afterwards reduced, and that the bill went to the governor and the governor vetoed it.

Mr. KAHN. The present governor?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. And the State of California declined to spend a dollar to eliminate this danger to its own citizens and is willing the Government should do it. United States Government has spent millions of dollars on this work, and there is a divided opinion as to its necessity. Marine Hospital officials believe it should be done; that it is very important it should be done or it will result in a very serious situation. A large number of the people of California, evidently some of them in the executive mansion there, do not think this matter serious at all, but think it a waste of money.

The assistant secretary stated to the committee that one of two things should be done. Either the appropriation should be doubled, or the work should stop. He added that it would require an appropriation of $500,000 a year to effectively clean up this situation.

It seems to me that the State of California is under some obligation, if it is going to invite people from all parts of the world to come there for the purpose of participating in a great exposition, to do its share toward eliminating danger from this disease, and it should not attempt to shoulder the entire burden upon the United States

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman concluded?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think I have said all I have to say, except this, that I believe there is an obligation upon the State, and unless the State shows some disposition to do its share of the work I shall not have much inclination to urge that the Federal Government shall do any more along the line indicated. Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I am not advised as to what action the present executive of the State of California has taken upon this matter; but the communities have all made their contributions, and it seems to me that so long as the citizens of California are doing their share it does not matter whether the work is done by the State or by the counties or by the cities. California is situated geographically in a position where she faces the Orient. These disease-bearing rats come in vessels that cross the Pacific. They get to the shore from the ropes that tie the vessels to the docks, and they carry the fleas which subsequently infect individuals. The whole country is interested in preventing the spread of a loathsome and terrible disease such as the bubonic plague—a disease that is fatal in so many instances. Surely the gentlemen of the committee do not expect the State of California, which, by reason of its geographical location, receives this oriental plague before any of the Eastern States could possibly be subjected to the danger, to bear the entire burden. We are willing to bear our share of it. The people of the State of California have demonstrated that. Not only have appropriations been made by the counties where the disease-infected rat or squirrel is found, but the citizens themselves as individuals have contributed from their private funds for the purpose of stamping out this evil.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not wish to ask an unfair question of the gentleman, but is the gentleman in a position to give any information as to what is being done along this line at this time in California?

Mr. KAHN. I know that in some of the counties, particularly in the southern and south-central part of the State, there is a campaign being waged against the ground squirrel. How far it is being carried on I am not advised.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am informed that if these counties would take this question up seriously and organize there would be very little difficulty; that with the cooperation of the people of the counties and the Federal Government, without a very great expenditure, all of these infected or suspected rats or squirrels could be eliminated. But the difficulty is the want of that cooperation which makes effective work possible.

Mr. KAHN. These counties that are infested by the squirrels and rats are some two or three hundred miles away from San Francisco, and the supervisors of those counties have officially passed resolutions petitioning Congress to make some appropriation to help them exterminate those pests. The work is not being done, I may say, by the physicians of California. It is being done by a Federal bureau—the United States Marine Hospital and Public-Health Service. I want to say here and now that, in my opinion, that service has conferred upon this country a great benefit by the splendid manner in which it has carried on its campaign for the extermination of these disease-carrying rodents. The health conditions of the city of San Francisco to-day, due largely, no doubt, to the active work of the Marine Hospital and Public-Health Service, are better probably than those of any other city in the Union. I think the death rate is about one in a thousand, and I think no other city has a less rate. I think the Marine Hospital and Public-Health Service has done much to bring about that very excellent condition.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from California has concluded his remarks, I will ask that the Clerk read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance of the disinfecting service, including salaries or compensation for personal services when ordered in writing by the commissioners and necessary for the maintenance of said service, and for purchase and maintenance of necessary horses, wagons, and harness, and rent of stable, $6,000.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

PROPOSED PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, during the course of my remarks I shall decline to yield. After I, shall have concluded, I shall be glad to answer any question which may be propounded to me that I can answer.

Mr. President, I find myself unable to support any of the pension bills now pending before the Committee on Pensions, of which I am a member.

House bill No. 1 proposes to grant to each of the survivors of the War with Mexico who served 60 days an annual service pension of $360, and to each of the survivors of the Civil War who served 90 days an annual service pension of $180; 6 months, but less than 9 months, $240; 9 months, but less than 1 year, $300; 1 year or more, $360.

A survivor of the Civil War, who was wounded and is unfit for manual labor, due to any cause other than his own vicious habits, or who is now unable to perform manual labor, due to any cause in line of duty, is to receive an annual pension of $360, although he may not have served as much as 90 days.

Members of State organizations that are now pensionable under existing law, as well as those in the military or naval service of the United States in the Civil War, are made eligible to participate in the benefits of this act. The Commissioner of Pensions estimates that the passage of this bill would cause an average annual increase in the pension roll of $58,700,000 for the next three years.

The rallying cry of proponents of increased pensions for the survivors of each of the wars in which this country has been engaged has ever been: "Let us prove to the world that republics are not ungrateful." Has this Republic indeed been ungrateful to the survivors of the Civil War in the matter of pension legislation? Let us lay aside for the moment the culogies that have been represented when the suldiers and consider in brief outline. been pronounced upon the soldiers and consider in brief outline the legislation that has been enacted. It would not be possible within the limits of reasonable discussion to recite the substance even of this legislation. Casual reference, in order to get a starting point, might be permitted to the wars in which this country was engaged prior to the Civil War. At the time of the Civil War we had apparently passed the stage where any new idea could be introduced into pension legislation. The Court of Claims has defined a pension to be a periodical allowance of money, partly in the nature of payment for services rendered, for which the compensation before made was inadequate to the benefits conferred by the soldier and received by the public, and partly in the nature of a gratuity, because not founded on a legal right of the soldier to demand it until the Govern-ment has acknowledged its moral obligation.

The various kinds of pensions granted by the Government from time to time have been disability pensions, on account of injuries received during war; invalid pensions, granted to those in need of assistance for support who are unable to trace injuries to the war, but who are unable because of sickness to earn a support; service pensions, both to those who may be dependent upon them for support and to those who are independent; age pensions; dependent pensions, paid for the benefit of relatives of those who lost their lives on account of the war, and also to those whose claim is based simply upon service or age or the fact that the soldier had been upon the pension roll.

In the War of the Revolution, pensions were early provided on account of known wounds received in battle. It was not until 1818 that Congress granted pensions to those in need of assistance for support. Immediately after the passage of the act of 1818 the pension roll was so greatly increased that popular indignation was aroused. In order to correct abuses, Congress in 1820 passed a bill requiring the pensioner to submit a sworn schedule of his income and to take oath that he had not disposed of any part of his property in order to bring himself within the provisions of the law. This act resulted in thousands of pensioners being stricken from the rolls. The Congress of that day was brave enough to meet fraud and imposition upon the generosity of the Republic, but only remained so until 1823, when it provided that those who had been stricken from the pension roll because of the act of 1820 should be restored thereto. Then began an agitation for service pensions, regardless of the condition in life of the survivors of the It was opposed with conspicuous ability for a time, but finally triumphed by the passage of the service-pension act of 1832. Official records immediately following will furnish to the inquiring mind conclusive evidence of further fraud and imposition. Congress was urged again, as it had been in 1820, to purge the pension roll of the unworthy, but bearing in mind possibly the short-lived act of 1820 and possibly preferring to be generous rather than overcritical, failed to meet the demand to make the pension roll, indeed, a roll of honor. It is not a pleasant task to point out that among the heroes of the Revolution were to be found those who would take advantage of the bounty of the Government, but when we overcome the glamour of reverence and appeal to the stubborn facts of history, we are bound to come to the conclusion that scandals did exist, which may be explained if for the moment we can bring ourselves to a calm consideration of the fact that after all human nature is pretty much the same. Instead of purging the pension rolls Congress, in 1836, developed the further principle in pension legislation of providing for the widows of Revolutionary soldiers who married prior to the treaty of peace; later, the time of marriage was extended to 1794; then to 1800; and, finally, in 1855, pensions were granted to all Revolutionary widows, regardless of date of marriage.

It was not until 1871 that service pensions were granted to the survivors of the War of 1812. At first, service of 60 days was required; widows who had been married before the treaty of peace were given pensionable status, but in 1878 the limit was removed as to date of marriage, and the length of service was shortened to 14 days. Widows not born until after the war were pensioned; record evidence was waived and claims were allowed to be established upon evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner of Pensions. In the War with Mexico a dis-ability pension was passed in 1887, and in 1893 the monthly allowance was increased. Provision had also been made, prior to the Civil War, for the survivors of the various Indian wars. In addition to pensions granted to survivors and their widows bounty-land laws were passed from time to time, and the Commissioner of Pensions, in his report for 1911, reports that 598,685 bounty-land warrants had been issued, covering 68,791,550 acres of public lands.

The legislation above referred to was applicable to the volun-er. By acts passed in 1802, 1816, and 1836, provision was made for the Regular Army and Navy, differing somewhat in principle and scope from the pension legislation applicable to the volunteer; in that, provision was made for half pay to the officers and men of the Regular Army.

This, in brief, was the pension system in force at the time the Civil War began. We now come to a consideration of the pension legislation incident thereto.

As early as 1861 the Volunteer Army was placed on the same basis of pay for disability as applied to the Regular Establishment. A year later $8 was fixed for noncommissioned officers and privates and $30 for officers of the rank of lieutenant colonel and above. To widows during widowhood, or, if none, to children under 16, then to mothers, then to dependent sisters under 16 pensions were granted. In 1864 an elaborate specific disability pension bill was passed, providing a table of rates for certain-named injuries ranging from incapacity to perform manual labor to the loss of hands, arms, feet, legs, hearing, and eyesight, the rates of which have been increased from year to year. General provision was made for those who had not suffered such serious loss but who for any reason were so disabled as to render them incapable of performing manual labor, and it was left to the Commissioner of Pensions to determine this general class. On page 122 of a compilation prepared by the Commissioner of Pensions in 1905 will be found the rates fixed by him for disabilities not specified by this act of 1864. The allowance fixed for inability to perform manual labor, due to the military or naval service, was $15 per month. This amount was increased in 1883 to $30 per month, and it has been the law since 1883 that anyone so disabled in the service as to be incapacitated to perform manual labor shall receive a pension of $30 per month. In 1866 brothers and fathers were added to the pensionable class. In 1868 arrears of pensions were allowed to pensioners on account of death, disease, or diswere anowed to pensioners on account of death, disease, or discharge, but in this act was included a provision that the application must have been filed within five years after the date of death or disability. It would seem that five years ought to be sufficient time within which any person might ascertain whether he had been wounded or disabled, and if within such time a person had not complained of wound or injury the presumption ought to be conclusive that he had not been wounded or disabled during the war.

From 1874 to 1878 the amounts paid out for pensions began to decrease year by year. In 1878 an effort was made to allow arrears in pensions, and claim agents and pension attorneys became active. The Commissioner of Pensions, in his report for 1878, called attention to this agitation and pointed out the great inducements to fraud and imposition. Notwithstanding this the arrears act of 1879 was passed by Congress. It provided that all pensions granted, or to be granted, in consequence of death, wounds, injury, or disease received or contracted during the Civil War, should commence from the date of the death or discharge from service of the person on whose account the or discharge from service of the person on whose account the ciaim had been or should be granted, or from the termination of the right of the party having prior title to such pension. The bill as it passed the House fixed no time limit for filing applications. The Senate proposed an amendment to the effect that the application must have been filed by July 1, 1880. This amendment was finally agreed to, although it was vigorously opposed in the House on the ground that it would be despicable on the part of the Government to limit the time of application for pension. The Government was sought to be plead in the The Government was sought to be placed in the for pension. unpopular attitude of a debtor in a lawsuit on the common counts, pleading the statute of limitations in order to avoid the payment of his just debts. In the circumstances usually attendant upon the enthusiasm aroused by pension oratory provisions of the act of 1868 were forgotten. The almost irresistible impulse to take inventory of all the ills and aches that flesh is heir to and attribute them to imaginary disabilities due . to a war that had passed into history 15 years before was ignored. At last war neurasthenia was recognized. The commissioner, in his report of 1879, pointed out the easy method of obtaining pensions and the temptation to commit fraud. An amendment was offered to have the United States represented and not allow the proceedings to continue ex parte. amendment was rejected. The Government was not to be represented; no reflection was to be cast upon the imagination of an applicant or the diagnosis of his friendly physician. It was considered undignified to question the right of any pensioner to receive in a lump sum compensation for disabilities which he might suppose originated 14 or 18 years before. It would have been remarkable if weak human nature had not yielded to this temptation. That it did yield is shown by the remarkable increase in the pension roll. I ask leave to insert table of first payments for the years 1878, 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, ши	1000.

Zagr	ending June 30:	First payments.
Lear	1878	$2, 992, 352, 17
	1879	5, 763, 758, 60
	1880	12, 468, 191, 20
	1881	23, 628, 176, 61
	1882	26, 421, 669, 19
	1009	29, 906, 753, 94

These first payments increased from less than $3,000,000 in $30,000,000 in 1883. Of course it requires time for the Pension Bureau to pass upon these claims. In 1879 the applications were more than double those of any previous year except 1866, when the Army was disbanded, and almost double the rate of that year. The Commissioner of Pensions complained that his office force was unable to keep up with the correspondence. Congress has been appealed to since the passage of this act to repeal the limitation with reference to the time of application, but it has so far resisted the appeal except as to widows. In 1888 the act, in so far as they were concerned, was repealed, and they have thus been enabled ever since that time, by complying with the terms of that act, to receive in a lump sum a pension for the full period of widowhood. Commissioner Evans, in his report of 1899, cites an instance of a widow who had remarried collecting in one sum the accrued pension which was allowed to her on account of the death of her soldier husband. By the beneficence of this provision in the act of 1888 she was enabled to collect nearly $4,000 for the use and benefit of her second husband.

In 1890 the so-called invalid-pension act was passed, granting to anyone who had served 90 days or more, and who then or may thereafter suffer from a mental or physical disability, not the result of his own vicious habits, which incapacitates him from the performance of manual labor in such a degree as to prevent him from earning a support, pensions ranging from $6 to $12 per month, according to the degree of disability. The disability need not be due to the service; it may have been caused by any act not due to the vicious habits of the applicant. This pension act constitutes both a health and accident policy, issued by the Government. Reference to the table of disbursements, which will be hereafter incorporated, shows an immense increase in the pension roll, on account of this act of 1890. Let it be borne in mind that provision had already been made for disabilities due to the service, and let it also be borne in mind that by act of 1883 the rate allowed for disability due to the service was $30 per month; in other words, the rates under the general law are higher than the rates under the act of 1890; and yet we are forced to meet, face to face, the fact that immediately 110,000 more persons were pensioned under this act than under all the others combined; and that, beginning with 1890, we were placing on the pension roll a class that could not show, even by ex parte proceedings, disability due to service. By this act widows were pensioned at the rate of $8 per month who were without other means of support than their daily labor. In 1900, however, they were given a pensionable status, if they were dependent upon their labor for support, and had only a net income of $250; and in 1908 they were pensioned irrespective of whether they were dependent upon their labor for support, and irrespective of whether they had an income. In 1892 the Army nurses were pensioned at $12 per month. In the pension appropriation bill of 1906 a provision was made that the age of 62 should be considered a permanent, specific disability within the meaning of the pension laws. By the act of 1907 pensions were granted to any person who served 90 days or more in the Civil War, or 60 days in the War with Mexico, upon the sole ground of age. Those who have reached the age of 62 are entitled to a pension of $12 per month; 70, $15 per month; 75 or over, $20 per month.

It has been a curious incident of our pension legislation that whenever the pension roll shows a decrease, legislation has been enacted the result of which has been to increase the annual amount; as the numbers have decreased, the allowances to those yet surviving have been so increased as constantly to require an increased expenditure.

If, temporarily, this matter has been overlooked for any reason, early opportunity has always been embraced to more than make up for the oversight. I ask leave to print, without reading, table of disbursements from 1866 to 1911.

Generally speaking, subject only to minor exceptions, no pension law repeals the provisions of any other pension law.

Actual hostilities in the Civil War began with the firing on Fort Sumter, April 12, 1861, and ceased by the surrender of the Confederate forces under Gen. Kirby Smith, May 26, 1865. Anyone who served 90 days prior to August 20, 1866, is eligible to receive a pension. It is estimated that the individuals engaged in the Civil War aggregated 2,213,363, of which 126,587 were Regulars. It is not necessary in order to receive a pension that the applicant should have taken part in the actual war. From time to time pensions have been granted to volunteers of State militia and members of home guards.

In war the penalty of desertion is death. In the Civil War there were 125,000 deserters from the Union Army. In time of peace we have by general legislation removed the charge of desertion in favor of those who served to May 1, 1865, and from the records of those who deserted earlier than that and within a reasonable time voluntarily returned to the service. Under this law a soldier could have deserted just before hostilities ceased, and then, after all danger was over, could have reenlisted, and unless such reenlistment was for the purpose of securing a bounty such deserter is placed upon the pension roll. This was generous enough to the deserter in all conscience. But Congress has not stopped there. In addition to these general laws, passed for the purpose of removing the charge of desertion, many special acts to "amend" and "correct" military records have been passed from time to time, granting the privilege of the pension roll to the deserter who could not comply with these liberal provisions of the general law. A more appropriate title for such a bill would be "A bill to straighten a crocked record."

And so it has come to pass that the record which the de-

And so it has come to pass that the record which the deserter in reality made crooked on his country's battle fields in time of war his country makes straight in theory in the halls of legislation in time of peace. He thereby become a legally constituted hero, and, incidentally, is enabled to read his title clear to the sacred roll of honor in the Pension Bureau.

Ever thereafter the great heart of a grateful republic will be permitted by legislation to swell with pardonable pride in hallowed memory of his unequaled imaginary record.

At almost any time he visits his country's capital, with entire legal modesty, he can appropriate to himself some such passing remark by his Senator or Congressman as this:

Permit not bim who, in the pride and vigor of youth wasted his health and shed his blood in freedom's cause, with desponding heart and palsied limbs to totter from door to door, bowing his yet untamed soul to meet the frozen bosom of reluctant charity.

Or he can stay at home and read it in the Congressional Record. Ten national homes, accommodating about 25,000 survivors, are now maintained at the expense of the Government, and in 30 State soldiers' homes there are about 20,000 survivors maintained at the expense of the Government. In the treatment of this question it should also be remembered that while there were no bounty land warrants issued by the United States, they were issued by several of the loyal States, and laws exempting their property from taxation are usually to be found in the statutes of these States. Also, I deem it worthy of mention that to many of those who enlisted in the Union Army of the Civil War cash bounties were paid by cities, States, and by the United States. As another evidence of consideration for the survivor of the Civil War it is not out of place to call attention to the act of August 15, 1876, which provides in substance that wherever, in the judgment of the head of any department, the duties assigned to a clerk of one class can be as well performed by a clerk of a lower class, the number of clerks of the higher class shall be diminished and the number of clerks of the lower class shall be increased. Then comes this provision, that in making any reduction of force in any of the executive departments the head of such department shall retain those persons who may be equally qualified who have been honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the United States and the widows and orphans of deceased soldiers and sailors. The following provision is found in the appropriation act of March 15, 1898:

Pension Office * * *. That in making a reduction of force from the number before provided for, the head of the bureau and department shall in preference retain those persons who have been honorably discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States and the widows and orphans of deceased soldiers and saliors, unless there be other just cause for not retaining the same than said reduction.

Those who were not disabled would not be benefited by a disability pension; those of independent means would not be benefited by a dependent or an invalid pension; but we do our duty by providing pensions for the disabled and the dependent, and then include the uninjured and the independent, and thus compromise by providing pensions for all.

It is the most liberal pension legislation ever enacted in the history of the world. It is as universal in its indiscriminate benefits as the sunshine upon the evil and the good, or as the rain which falls alike upon the just and the unjust. It has abolished all distinctions between the dependent poor and the independent rich; between invalidism and health; between the wounded and the uninjured; between the warworn Regular of 100 battles and the bought and paid for substitute who served in some State militia and never saw a battle field; between the disabled Volunteer, who quickly answered the President's proc-lamation and bore the heat and burden of the battle, and the mercenary bounty jumper, who was never in any battle if he could help it, and whose services were merely nominal; be-tween the "battle-scarred" veteran and the "battle-scared" deserter, his widow, child, brother, or father; between the de-pendent old widow, who lost her soldier husband in the clash of battle, and some holiday home guardsman's independent or battle, and some nonday nome guardsman's independent young widow, born after the war was over.

Some of this legislation is just, some of it is more generous than just, some of it is of doubtful propriety, and some of it is absolutely wrong and indefensible from any standpoint of justice, gratitude, or charity, either in law, equity, morals, or seed experience.

good conscience.

What has it all cost? I quote from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, June 30, 1911:

missioner of Pensions, June 30, 1911:

PENSIONS OF THE SEVERAL WARS AND OF THE PEACE ESTABLISHMENT.

The amounts that have been paid for pensions to soldiers, sailors, and marines, their widows, minor children, and dependent relatives on account of military and naval service in the several wars and in the regular service since the foundation of the Government to June 30, 1911, are as follows:

War of the Revolution (estimate) $70,000,000,000
War of 1812 (service pension) 45,853,024, 19
Indian wars (service pension) 11,192,205.52
War with Mexico (service pension) 45,279,686.83
Civil War 3,985,719,836.93
War with Spain and insurrection in Philippine Islands 34,142,976.37 War with Spain and insurrection in Philippine Islands Regular establishment Unclassified

_ 4, 230, 381, 730, 16 Total disbursements for pensions____.

During this year we paid out for pensions on account of the Civil War, exclusive of the expense of administration, $148,231,665.51. In other words, the total amount of pensions paid out on account of the Revolutionary War is less than one-half; the pension cost of the War of 1812 and the pension cost of the War with Mexico is each less than one-third; and the total cost, so far, of all the wars prior to the Civil War is only slightly greater than the pension roll on account of the Civil War for the single year of 1911; and if either of the bills now proposed shall be enacted, the cost of pensions in the next few succeeding years, on account of the Civil War, will be greater each year than the total amounts paid out for pensions greater each year than the total amounts paid out for pensions on account of all the old wars combined.

War with Spain commenced April 21, 1898; actual hostilities ceased August 13, 1898. While the total number of individuals enlisted was 312,000, yet the army which invaded Cuba under Gen. Shafter consisted of less than 30,000 officers and men. There were 23 officers and 257 men killed; 113 officers and 1,464 men wounded; deaths from all causes, from May 1 to September 30, were 107 officers and 2,803 men, making an aggregate of 2,910 out of the total number enlisted. In the Navy there were 2 men killed and 2 wounded. Yet on June 30, 1911, there were 28,490 on the pension roll and 8,386 applications pending on account of the War with Spain. We boast that we are not required to support a standing army, but depend upon the patriotism of the citizen soldier, and all the standing advantage over the nations of Europe; but with all the standing army maintained by Great Britain, the German Empire, France, Japan, Austria, and Hungary, the amount paid by the United States in 1910 exceeds the amount paid for army and navy pensions of all these countries combined. In a speech delivered in the House of Representatives, Mr. Fitzgerald shows that for periods of years extending from 14 to 30 years pension payments for the United States have exceeded that of any of the countries named, except Japan. He might also have included Japan and added that for the years named it exceeded pensions paid by all those countries combined. But, it is said, the United States do not fashion their policies after those of foreign countries, and should not be governed by practices prevailing there; it is said that we are a Republic and can afford to be generous.

May I be pardoned, Mr. President, if I call to the attention of the Senate the amount paid during the last fiscal year to the survivors of those who fought on the other side? The 11 Southern States which formed the Confederacy introduced into the Civil War their youth, manhood, and old age. After that war was over the survivors on the Confederate side began life over again under much less favorable circumstances than did the survivors of the Union Army.

After the war came reconstruction, as after death comes the judgment,

It would not be fair, of course, to compare the amounts paid by way of pensions to the survivors on the side of the Confedby way of pensions to the survivors of the side of the confederacy with the amounts paid for the same purpose to the survivors of the Union Army during the period up through which the South struggled with uncomplaining, splendid patience from poverty to wealth, but now that the Southern States are rich again and are amply able to provide liberally for the survivors of the war who need aid and for the widows of those who were killed, or died as a result of wounds, a comparison at this time, it seems to me, would not be out of place. It is true that in the South those who do not need help are not given it. With this difference, compare the pension roll of the Union Army with the pension roll of the Confederate Army for the year 1911, and you have the figures for the survivors of the war on the Union side, $148,231,665.51; for the survivors on the Confederate side, $5,780,833.58. If we might carry the comparison a step further, it would be interesting to contrast the amount of pensions paid to the survivors of the Confederate Army with the amount paid to the survivors of the Union Army now residing in these 11 States, and I submit a table for that purpose, which I ask leave to insert without reading:

	Confederate pensions.	Federal pensions.
Alabama	$875,000.00	$596,445.74
Arkansas	531,139.50	1,642,605,59
Florida	650,000,00	815,836.77
Georgia	944,694,08	543,352.41
Louisiana	175,000.00	1.024,613.60
Mississippi	400,000,00	724,961.82
North Carolina	450,000.00	654,072.49
South Carolina	264,000,00	302,562.44
Tennessee	520,000,00	3,190,810.87
Texas	521,000.00	1,504,851.68
Virginia	450,000.00	1,489,553.80
Total	5,780,833.58	12,489,667.21

In the above table are included pensions paid on account of the War with Mexico and the various Indian wars to residents of these States, under the heading Federal pensions. Of course, for the purposes of fair comparison, pensions other than Civil War pensions should not be included. I regret that I have been unable to ascertain from the Commissioner of Pensions in formation upon which a proper deduction could be based. If, however, all pensioners of these other wars were residents of these 11 States, which, of course, they are not, there would have to be deducted-

On account of War with Mexico $1, 322, 918. 11 On account of Indian wars 575, 086. 52 Making a total of 1, 898, 004. 63

If this overestimated amount be subtracted, we would have in these States the following result:

Federal pensions on account of the Civil War_____ $10,591,662.58 Confederate pensions on account of the Civil War____ 5,780,833.58

A difference in 1911 of_____ 4, 810, 829.00

So, therefore, it is safe to say that the amount paid out last year by the Federal Government, on account of Civil War pensions, to residents in the 11 States which constituted the Confederacy, is at least double the amount paid out by these States on account of State pensions to ex-Confederate soldiers.

Mr. President, there is the kindliest feeling in every community of each section for the survivors of this war, and they would not be permitted to suffer for the necessities of life if there were no pensions. It is idle to say that all the meri-torious survivors of either army need financial assistance for support. They were strong in war, and they have not been weaklings in peace. They have kept pace with the citizens of our country generally in the various business pursuits of life and have shared in the prosperity and development of the country.

That this is true in the South is shown by the pension roll based on need, small in comparison with the pension roll of the survivors of the Union Army.

That this is true among the survivors of the Union Army is shown by the report of the Pension Committee of the House on this particular bill. It is there estimated rather indefinitely that from 20 to 30 per cent of the pensioners enjoy an annual net income of more than $1,000.

This would mean an annual reduction of from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000. Is either of these sums such a bagatelle as not to be considered worth saving to the taxpayers of the country?

As compared with the pension rolls of other armies which this country has sent to war, as compared with the pension rolls of foreign countries, as compared with the pension rolls of those who opposed the Union Army, can any man, in fairness and in justice, make the charge that this Republic has, indeed, been ungrateful to the survivors of the Civil War?

Notwithstanding these indisputable facts, under any of the proposed bills, there is to be no single, solitary reduction, no repeal, no revision, no correction of any of the existing evils in this jumbled mass of legislation; this is cumulative, supplementary, additional legislation. The pensioner, as has ever been his privilege from the beginning, may select the particular act that will yield him the greatest amount of revenue out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. President, I do not indulge the hope that I can so state my position as that it will not be misrepresented, but I do entertain the belief that I can state it with such clearness as that it need not be misunderstood.

First, I am in thorough accord with the policy of granting pensions based upon meritorious service and need. I think it would be a Government hardly worth saving that would not provide, out of the abundance of its wealth, for the necessities of those who, in waging war in its behalf, have been injured in body or in health, and who are on that account dependent upon their labor for support. In every great war there are those who believe in the righteousness of their country's cause or who believe in their country, right or wrong; their patriotism needs not to be stimulated by hatred, fear, reward or the hope thereof; they enlist at the first opportunity and stay until the end; they fight while the war lasts, and when it is over they return to their homes to share in the yet greater victories of peace. For soldiers such as these and for the dependent families of such as lose their lives in or on account of war I would make the amplest provision. I would prefer to overestimate rather than underestimate the amount that would be sufficient.

Second. On principle, meritorious service and need should coexist as a prerequisite to a pension.

It follows, of course, that I am opposed to granting pensions for even meritorious service to those of independent means. know it is said that to strike this class of pensioners from the pension roll is to penalize thrift. I do not share that view.

I prefer to believe that the citizen owes a duty to the Government no less than the duty the Government owes to the citizen. Our Government, which, in time of peace, protects the citizen in his inalienable rights of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," "deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed," has the right when war comes to command the services of the citizen, who is bound by the very fact of citizen-ship to obey that command. Why, the very reasons for the founding of this Republic were-to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tran-quillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.

It seems to me to be true that the people of this country have always shown their appreciation for meritorious service in private and in public life, in peace and in war. The survivors of the Civil War on both sides have been the especial favorites of the people of both sections of our country. I am not complaining of it; I am proud that it is so. I refer to it because I think it indicates that there is a higher honor to be conferred than it would be if taxes were levied can be measured by money, and a better way to show appreciation than by taking from the Public Treasury the wealth that has been placed there. Everybody knows it to be true that in town, in county, and in State the meritorious survivors of the Civil War have been greatly honored in public life; they have been our legislators, our State cabinet officers, our Congressmen, our Senators, our governors, and in our national life you have but to call the roll of the Presidents.

The Revolutionary War furnished Washington and Monroe for two terms each; the War of 1812 gave us Andrew Jackson; the Indian war furnished Gen. Harrison, of "Tippecanoe" fame; Polk, Taylor, and Pierce came from the Mexican War to the head of the Parable of the to the head of the Republic; the Civil War gave us Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Harrison, and McKinley; and finally, out of the War with Spain Roosevelt emerged a veteran thereof to rule over us.

I realize that it would not be practicable to take away a gratuity of the Government from some of the classes now receiving it, and therefore I would be willing to continue on the pension roll all those dependent upon their pensions for a support who rendered service and those of extreme old age who are unable to support themselves.

But there is no justification on principle, in my judgment, for the policy of granting pensions to those who need them but who rendered no actual service, even though they enlisted and were willing to render such service, nor to those who became invalids after the war but who can not trace their loss of health to the service. Their intentions were good, but they suffered no injury because of their patriotism. I may be wrong about it, but I am unable to see in what respect their claims differ from those of other equally worthy but unfortunate citizens. What better right has a dependent daughter of such a soldier to be supported by taxation than the daughter of any other worthy destitute citizen of the Republic?

Mr. GALLINGER. I know the Senator asked not to be interrupted, but the Senator is making a mistake when he says that we vote pensions to daughters of soldiers. We do not do that.

Mr. BRYAN. According to law, is it not. Mr. GALLINGER. The children of soldiers are not pensionable by law unless they are under 16 years of age.

Mr. BRYAN. I understand that; but if the Senator from New Hampshire will visit any day the committee room of the Committee on Pensions he will see plenty of them 50 years old. Yet how often do we allow our feeling of sympathy for distress to becloud our sense of public duty. Cases just as meritorious of people equally worthy arise everywhere every day. Every city, every county, and every State has to make provision for the destitute.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very sure, Mr. President, that no such bill has passed the Senate for a great many years, except for a dependent child.

Mr. BRYAN. I reported such a bill out of the Committee on Pensions a week ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. For a daughter?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, sir; and she was 50 years old.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, that must have been a child that was incapacitated from birth-

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, certainly; they have to be dependent.

Mr. GALLINGER. An imbecile, or something of that kind. Mr. BRYAN. No.

These are some of the reasons, Mr. President, which make it impossible for me to support any bill of the character proposed increasing expenditures for pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President-

Does the Senator from Florida The VICE PRESIDENT.

yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield to me to ask a question for information—something about the southern pensions?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator. Mr. McCUMBER. I ask for information only. I understand that the State of Florida grants pensions to the ex-Confederate soldiers of that State. I have been informed that the amount paid is nearly $800,000 per annum.

Mr. BRYAN. Six hundred and fifty thousand dollars in 1910, while the payments to Federal soldiers in that State were $815,836.

Mr. McCUMBER. But the point I wanted to get at is this: Will not that amount paid by the State of Florida to the Confederate veterans make as high a percentage of the property of the State, against which it must be levied, as the amount that is paid to all Union soldiers of the Civil War bears to the upon all of the property in the United States to provide for the payment of pensions to Federal soldiers?

Mr. BRYAN. I am not sure.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask for information only.

Mr. BRYAN. I am not sure about that. I am not discussing this question solely from the standpoint of cost. I am trying to discuss it from principle. I believe that the expense to the people of my State for the support of Federal pensioners is greater than the amount they pay by direct taxes on account of the Confederate soldiers. However, as I have said, I am not sure about that.

There are many here who do not agree to the soundness of the position that pensions should be based upon meritorious service and need, but it seems to me that there ought not to be two opinions as to the necessity for revision upon some equitable basis. The policy of these laws will lead inevitably to civil pensions for Government employees. That may be right, but, without committing myself until I have had the opportunity to give further thought and study to the question, my present opinion is that those who do not make their living out of the Government have as much right to claim a pension as Government employees have, who in preference seek Government employment. If the present policy is allowed to continue and more liberal pensions are to be granted, no man can tell what additional burden will be placed upon the public revenues. We have but to glance at the $34,000,000 spent on account of the War with Spain in the 13 years that have elapsed to see the tendency of the present policy of pension legislation. We ought certainly to find some ground upon which we can all stand.

It ought not to be necessary to consider as best we can the flood of private pension bills. I ask leave to insert a table, taken from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions for 1911, showing the number of pensions granted from 1861 to 1911, so we may understand to what extent the practice of introducing private pension bills has grown.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is

Mr. BRYAN. During the extraordinary session of the Sixtysecond Congress out of the 3,296 bills introduced 2,494 were private pension bills.

Other private bills, calling for appropriations, constitute by far the greater part of the remaining 25 per cent.

It seems to me there ought to be a provision for the publication of the pension roll. If fraud exists, it is unfair to the tax-payer that it should not be exposed; if it does not exist, it is unfair to the pensioner that such a charge should be permitted to go unchallenged.

It is perhaps natural that those who reap benefits from this legislation should be active in its support. They are here in person or by their official representatives. The great body of the people, whom we also represent, are not active in opposi-They are not present. We have been chosen to be present in their stead.

Of course, "it is more blessed to give than to receive," provided the cheerful giver gives away his own property and with-out compulsion from the recipient. We have no right to be generous with other people's money. Yet, Mr. President, we have had it suggested to us in this debate that this enormous increase of millions of dollars to be collected out of the necessities of the people, should have been voted before the holidays by way of a Christmas gift to the pensioners.

The people of the country seem to be confused over the two methods of direct State taxation and indirect Federal taxation. And so it is that he is considered the best member of the State legislature who leaves the most money in the State treasury, while too often he is considered the most successful Congressman who takes the most money out of the Federal Treasury. The one is rewarded for his economy, the other for his extravagance.

One thing is certain, when we reach the limit of expenditure for pensions by just so much as we pay out to the undeserving and to those of independent means by just that much do we have to decrease the amounts that can be paid to the meritorious and the needy. Have we not about reached that limit? The pension roll is now nearly one-half the amount collected through the tariff. If the Sherwood bill passes, it will be nearly two-thirds that amount.

Both parties are pledged to a reduction of the tariff. Money has to be collected in so that it can be paid out.

We can not reduce the high cost of living and at the same time increase pension expenditures. Extravagant expenditure means extravagant taxation.

It seems to me, therefore, that this is a poor bill for the meritorious and the needy pensioner to advocate.

If I be wrong in the contention that the time has come when the pension legislation should be revised, at least, I am sure the time has not come when the pension roll should be further increased.

Mr. President, the Psalmist acknowledged a bit of haste in his attack upon the general reputation of men for even truth and veracity

Neither history nor tradition, nor both combined, have been able to drag from his hiding place the unknown cynic who first gave voice to the cruel charge that "every man has his price." Men everywhere, of governments good, bad, and indifferent, have lived firm in the hitherto unshaken faith of the centuries that patriotism, like virtue, is its own reward. Now, however, men are not ashamed to undertake to fix a price upon patriotism.

I do not believe this strange new doctrine that patriotism can only be calculated by the sordid commercialism of an overgrown pension roll.

This is no time to prefer personal or political advantage over a manifest public duty.

Let us meet appeal with appeal.

Let us meet the appeal for increased expenditure with the appeal for reduced taxation.

Let us meet the appeal for an increase of pensions with the appeal for a reduction in the high cost of living.

Let us meet the ungenerous appeal that the Republic should not be ungrateful to its pensioners with the generous appeal to the pensioners not to be ungrateful to the Republic.

GENERAL ARBITRATION TREATIES.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there has been very much argument of late as to whether or not repudiated or scaled State debts could be properly submitted to arbitration as growing up out of "claims of right" against the Federal Government.

In that connection I desire to ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record certain matters. On February 8, 1853, the United States Government entered into a convention with Great Britain whereby they submitted to a "mixed commission" Britain whereby they submitted to a "mixed commission" claims of British subjects against the United States Government and claims of American citizens against the British Gov-ernment. Before that commission appeared certain claimants who held certain State bonds of the States of Florida and Texas.

The matter which I desire to have printed in the Congres-SIONAL RECORD are the arguments pro and con by the attorneys for the claimants and for the Government; the statement or brief, if you may so call it, of the British commissioner; the statement of the American commissioner; and the decision of the "umpire" which constituted the decision of that mixed commission. The result was that it was held that in a convention submitting claims against the United States Government claims against State governments on account of outstanding unpaid bonds could not be considered, even though there were special reasons urged in these two particular cases to take them out of the general rule.

Even the British commissioner did not hold that a repudiated State debt, a debt made by a State, could in anywise become a claim against the Federal Government or be considered as arbitrable by a mixed commission for this purpose of considering claims of right

But it was contended by the British commissioner in the case of Texas that as Texas had made this debt as an independent Republic, and as the United States Government had entered into an agreement with Texas prior to her admission into the Union to the effect that she was to keep her State lands and was to pay all her own debts, and that as by a subsequent transaction the United States Government had agreed to pay the State of Texas some $10,000,000 for the surrender of the claim of Texas to some territory, and as $5,000,000 of that amount had been retained in the Federal Treasury, there was a connection closer than in the ordinary case between the Federal Government as a Government and the claims of these creditors than does or could exist in the case of a sovereign State contracting its own debt without any contractual or quasi contractual relation or ownership relation of the Federal Government toward the transaction.

In the Florida case it was contended by the British commissioner that it was taken out of the rule somewhat by the fact that Florida had made the debt as a Territory, and that as Territories were subject to the "disposition" and government of the Congress of the United States, the Federal Government had in that way become responsible for the acts of the Territory, and that as the Federal Government appointed the governor, who had a veto upon the act, and as he had signed the act creating the debt, the Federal Government was indirectly and by overlordship a party to the transaction; in that case it was a lot of bonds floated for the purpose of helping some banking institution.

Notwithstanding this rather strong presentation of the special circumstances characterizing these two cases, the umpire decided that the claims could not be submitted under that convention and that the United States Government could in no way be held liable, it not being a difference to which the United States Government was a party.

The question from the standpoint of international and constitutional law is fully argued pro and con in what I desire to print for general use in the RECORD.

With that explanation, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a part of Volume IV of "Moore's History and Digest of International Arbitrations," which has been published as a House miscellaneous document, but is rather rare now, beginning where I have put a capital A, on page 3591 of the fourth volume of that work, and going down to where I have placed a capital B, on page 3612, near the top of the page. This contains all of the case. I want all of it published, though some of it is irrelevant. I have thought that better than to have any question about what is and what is not irrelevant.

Mr. President-Mr. BACON.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BACON. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi to read enough of that agreement to show what were the matters submitted to arbitration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am going to submit it all.

Mr. BACON. I know, but I wish it now, in order that I may call attention to the difference between the two cases—that is, the difference between the terms of the agreement to arbitrate in 1853 and the terms of proposed arbitration treaties now pending before the Senate.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I can do that, too.

Mr. BACON. What were the matters bitration under the convention of 1853? What were the matters to be submitted to ar-

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I can do that. The first matter in the Texas case is the presentation by counsel for the claimants, then the contention of the British commissioner, then the contention of the American commissioner, then the decision of the umpire. Later on the Florida case is presented in precisely the same way. I read the beginning of the chapter:

"On the 24th of October, 1838, a contract was entered into between James Holford, of London, and Messrs. Williams and Burnley, commissioners of Texas, who were authorized to negotiate a loan under the provisions of an act of the Congress of Texas of May 16, 1838.'

That is the beginning of the Texas indebtedness and claim.

Now, in the Florida case-

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Mississippi misunderstands I am asking what was the matter specified in the agreement between the two Nations to be arbitrated. general?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was general.

Mr. BACON. I want to hear that language.
Mr. WILLIAMS. On the 8th of February, 1853, the United States and Great Britain entered into a "convention," whereby they agreed "to submit to a mixed commission" claims of British subjects against the United States Government and claims of American citizens against the British Government.

Mr. BACON. That is exactly what I want to know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am not going to argue the question now, because we will probably go into it a little more fully hereafter. But I simply wanted to call attention, in connection with the remarks of the learned Senator, to the fact that that was an arbitration limited specifically to questions of claims of British subjects against the United States Government and of claims of United States citizens against the British Government. But in the proposed treaties now pending before the Senate there is, or will be if they are agreed to, a very much wider submission. It is not limited to claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Great Britain, or to claims of citizens of Great Britain against the Government of the United States, but, under the proposed treaties now pending, it is a question of the submission of "all differences" of every kind arising between the high contracting parties. Under the convention of 1853 it was a sufficient answer to any demand that it was not a claim against the Government of the United States or against the Government of Great Britain, because the convention of 1853 did not authorize any other question to be arbitrated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, of course I, too, do not wish to enter into a general discussion, but the proposed treaties of arbitration with Great Britain and France submit, first, only "international" questions; second, only "justiciable" questions—that is, questions which are capable of being decided by principles of law or equity, or, to put it so that anybody can understand it, questions which, if they had arisen between individuals instead of between independent greatments. viduals instead of between independent governments, would have been decided in courts of justice. That is all.

They furthermore limit the scope of arbitration by saying that they shall be "claims of right." This particular question is whether or not a repudiated State bond or a scaled State bond or a not-paid-off State bond—in the Texas case the bonds were finally paid and, I think, in the Florida case, too, but however that may be—can in any sense be "a claim of right" against the Federal Government. The French and the British treaties both use that very phrase—"a claim of right," "accruing from a claim of right." But I do not want to discuss the general question now. I will take care of that later.

I merely want now to have inserted in the RECORD the documents I have referred to, so that everybody may read them, constituting what I regard as an international precedent very largely persuasive of conclusion in the consideration of the question which will soon confront the Senate.

Mr. President, I submit the request for unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD what I have indicated.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to add just a word. My only object in interrupting the Senator at this time was to call attention to the fact that in the treaty of 1853 the arbitration was limited exclusively to the question of a demand against the Government in either case—against the Federal Government of the United States or the Government of Great Britain—and that that necessarily turned upon the question that however just the claim might be against Texas or Florida, it was not within the scope of the arbitration provided for, whereas, in this instance, under the proposed arbitration treaties now pending, "all differences" which are deemed justicable are arbitrable, and, therefore, all questions of differences between the contract of the contract o ference between this Government and the other Government, whether relating to State matters or Federal matters, are within the control of the arbitration, and if we do not agree that any claim made by the other Government is arbitrable, that question is to be decided by the outside commission and not by the Senate.

But I think that will be discussed very fully hereafter; I have no disposition to go into it now, and simply wanted attention called to it in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, of course I think that neither one of these proposed treaties does include all questions. But the treaty speaks for itself. Moreover, the Federal Government can not submit a "State question" to arbitration, because the Federal Government can not amend the Constitution of the United States. They alone can do that, not it. But, going back to 1853, the language used was, "for the adjustment of claims." So that that question is answered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

The matter referred to is as follows: CHAPTER LXIV. BOND CASES.

On the 24th of October, 1838, a contract was entered into be-tween James Holford, of London, and Messrs. Texas bond cases. Williams and Burnley, commissioners of Texas, who were authorized to negotiate a loan under a provision of an act of the Congress of Texas, of May 16, 1838. By this contract Holford was to purchase for the Republic of Texas a steamer, then lying at Philadelphia, and provision and deliver her at Galveston, in Texas. This Holford did, and the contract was afterwards approved by an act of the Congress of Texas, of January 10, 1839, and bonds were issued to Holford, dated July 1, 1839, for the payment of which the faith and revenues of the Republic were solemnly pledged by acts of its Congress of November 18, 1836, and May 15, 1838. Provision was also made by an act of January 22, 1839, that a certain portion of the sales of the public lands should be annually reserved as a permanent and sinking fund for the payment of this debt until the whole should be paid.

It was alleged that payment had not been made of either principal or interest on these bonds.

In 1845 Texas was admitted into the Union as one of the United States.

By the Constitution of the United States the General Government has power "to regulate commerce," and "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises"; and the several States are forbidden to "enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation," or, "without the consent of the Congress," to "lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws.

According to the terms agreed upon between the United States and the Republic of Texas, whereby the latter became one of the United States of America, the vacant and unappropriated lands within its limits were to be retained by the State and "applied to the payment of the debts and liabilities of the Republic of Texas; and the residue of the lands, after discharging the debts and liabilities, were to be disposed of as the State might direct, but in no event were said debts and liabilities to become a charge upon the Government of the United

Subsequently, in modifying the boundary of Texas, the United States, in 1850, on condition of the cession by Texas of certain large tracts of land to the United States, agreed to pay Texas $10,000,000, but stipulated that "five millions of the same should remain unpaid until the creditors of the State holding bonds and other certificates of stock of Texas, for which duties on imports were specially pledged, should first file at the Treasury of the United States releases of all claims against the United States for or on account of such bonds or certificates, in the form prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the President of the United States."

Up to 1854, when a claim against the United States for the payment of Holford's bonds was presented to the mixed commission organized under the convention between the United States and Great Britain of February 8, 1853, difficulties between the United States and Texas as to the manner of appropriating the sum in question had prevented its payment to Texas, and new measures in regard to it were then pending before Congress, the British Government had never treated any of the claims of the holders of Texas bonds as a subject of interposition with the United States.

Thomas, the agent of the United States, protested against the commission's entertaining Holford's claim on the following grounds:

"Because it is no proper sense a claim on the Government of the United States, embraced or contemplated by the convention of February 8, 1853, for the settlement of outstanding

"Because the second of the resolutions for the admission of the Republic of Texas into the Union as a State, among other things, declares that 'in no event are the debts and liabilities of Texas to become a charge upon the Government of the United States.'

"Because the people of the said Republic of Texas, by deputies in convention assembled, with the consent of the existing government and by their authority, did ordain and declare that they assented to and accepted the proposals, conditions, and guaranties contained in the resolutions above referred to, and thereupon she was admitted into the Union as a State.

"Because it is not true, as is asserted in the statement of the claim presented to the commissioners, that Texas is incorporated into and subjected to the dominion of the United States Government so as to destroy her responsibility for debts con-tracted while an independent Republic or her ability to meet them; but, on the contrary, she is, for the purpose of fulfilling these obligations, as clearly responsible for their payment by the law of nations, by her separate and distinct organization, and by her solemn agreement with the United States as she ever was, and is fully able to discharge them; and this commission is not authorized to interfere to shift any such obligation from Texas upon the United States.

"Because this commission has nothing to do with any law or act of the United States addressed to the government or people of Texas, designed or tending to induce that State to perform her obligations entered into while an independent Republic; and hence to take jurisdiction of this claim would be a palpable and unwarrantable violation of the spirit and intention of the convention establishing this commission, to which the United States would have a perfect right to take exception, as much as if this commission were to pass laws for the Government of the United States or do any other thing wholly without the limits of its authority."

The case was argued at length in reply to the protest of Mr. Thomas, as well as on the merits, by Mr. Hannen, British agent, and Mr. Cairns. On the application of one of the claimants it was reargued before the commissioners and the umpire by Messrs. Reverdy Johnson and Hannen for the claim, and Mr. Thomas against it. The arguments of counsel and the opinions of the commissioners, who differed as to the liability of the United States for the payment of the bonds, covered a wide range. In the printed report of the proceedings of the commission the umpire's opinion is not given, but it is stated that he dismissed the claim on the ground "that cases of this description were not included among the unsettled claims that had received the cognizance of the Governments or were designed to be embraced within the provisions of the convention. and were therefore not within the jurisdiction of the commis-Whatever may have been the meaning intended to be conveyed by this vague statement as to what the umpire held the language is misleading. The umpire's awards on the Texas bond claims are on file and are textually as follows:

"LONDON, 29th November, 1854.

"The umpire appointed agreeably to the provisions of the convention entered into between Great Britain and the United States on the 8th of February, 1853, for the adjustment of claims by a mixed commission, having been duly notified by the commissioners under the said convention that they had been unable to agree upon the decision to be given with reference to the claims of the heirs of James Holford against the United States in relation to Texan bonds, and having carefully examined and considered the papers and evidence produced on the hearing of the said claim, and having conferred with the said commissioners thereon, hereby reports that this commission can not entertain the claim, it being for transactions with the independent Republic of Texas prior to its admission as a State of the United States.

"JOSHUA BATES, Umpire." "LONDON, 29th November, 1854.

"The umpire appointed agreeably to the provisions of the convention entered into between Great Britain and the United States on the 8th of February, 1853, for the adjustment of claims by a mixed commission, having been duly notified by the commissioners under the said convention that they had been unable to agree upon the decision to be given with reference to the claim of Messrs. Dawson, of Baltimore, in the United States relating to Texan bonds-against the Government, and having carefully examined and considered the papers and evidence produced on the hearing of the said claim, and having conferred with the said commissioners thereon, hereby reports that in his opinion Messrs. Dawson have no right to claim before this commission, being, according to the law of nations, citizens of the United States and not British subjects, and were they British subjects, the claim being for transactions with the independent Republic of Texas before it became a State of the United States, the claim can not be entertained by this commission. Commission under the convention between the United States and Great Britain of February 8, 1853. (S. Ex. Doc. 103, 34th Cong., 1st sess., 382-426.)

In 1835 the Territorial government of Florida incorporated the Union Bank, with a capital of $1,000,000, with power to increase its capital to $3,000,000. To aid in raising the capital Florida bond cases. stock the Territory issued bonds acknowledging its indebtedness to the bank, which bonds were signed officially by the governor and the treasurer of the Territory, and were intrusted to the bank with authority to dispose of them for its benefit. The stockholders of the bank were to consist entirely of citizens of Florida. They were required to mortgage personal property and real estate to an amount equal in value to the stock subscribed for by them, and this property was to be held by the bank and applied to the payment of the principal and interest of the bonds of the Territory as they fell due.

A charter with provisions of a similar character was granted about the same time to the Southern Life Insurance & Trust Co. This company issued bonds or "certificates," as they were called, which were guaranteed by the Territory, and the property of the stockholders which was held by the company was pledged for their payment.

Through misfortunes and mismanagement these institutions failed, for the most part, to pay either the principal of the bonds and certificates issued to them by the Territory or the interest upon them, and up to the time when the present question arose payment had not been made either by the Territory or the State of Florida. Some of the bonds and certificates were negotiated in Europe, and, in default of their payment by Florida, a claim was made before the commission under the convention between the United States and Great Britain of February 8, 1853, for their payment by the United States.

The following articles in the constitution of Florida of 1838 were adverted to in the arguments of counsel and the opinions of the commissioners and umpire:

"We, the people of the Territory of Florida, by our delegates in convention assembled at the city of St. Joseph on Monday, the 3d day of December, A. D. 1838, and of the Independof the United States the sixty-third year, having and claiming the right of admission into the Union as one of the United States of America consistent with the principle of the Federal Constitution and by virtue of the treaty of amity, settlement, and limits between the United States and the King of Spain ceding the Provinces of East and West Florida to the United States, in order to secure to ourselves and our posterity the enjoyment of all the rights of life, liberty, and property, and the pursuit of happiness, do mutually agree, each with the other, to form ourselves into a free and independent State by the name of the State of Florida.

"ARTICLE 1.

"DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.

"Clause 19. That no law impairing the obligation of contracts shall ever be passed.

"ARTICLE 8.

"TAXATION AND REVENUE.

"Clause 2. No other or greater amount of tax or revenue shall at any time be levied than may be required for the necessary expenses of government.

"ARTICLE 11.

"PUBLIC DOMINION AND INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT.

"Clause 2. A liberal system of internal improvements being essential to the development of the resources of the country shall be encouraged by the government of this State, and it shall be the duty of the general assembly, as soon as practicable, to ascertain by law proper objects of improvement in relation to roads, canals, and navigable streams, and to provide for a suitable application of such funds as may be appropriated for such improvements.

"ARTICLE 17.

"SCHEDULE AND ORDINANCE.

"Section 1. That all laws or parts of laws now in force, or which may hereafter be passed by the governor and Legislative Council of the Territory of Florida, not repugnant to the provisions of this constitution, shall continue in force until by operation of their provisions or limitations the same shall cease to be in force, or until the general assembly of this State shall alter or repeal the same, and all writs, actions, prosecutions, judgments, and contracts shall be and continue unimpaired; and all process which has heretofore issued, or which may be issued prior to the last day of the first session of the general assembly of this State, shall be as valid as if issued in the name of the State; and nothing in this constitution shall impair the obligation of contracts or violate vested rights either of individnals or of associations claiming to exercise corporate privileges in this State."

Mr. Rolt, Queen's counsel, and Mr. Cairns argued the case for the claimants, assisted by Mr. Hannen, the special agent and counsel for Her Majesty's Government.

The following points were taken by Mr. Rolt:

"1. The principles of equity, reason, and public morals required the United States to pay this debt of Florida contracted while Florida was a Territory.

"2. The terms of the treaty of cession of Florida by Spain to the United States in 1819, Articles II and VI, conduced to the same result.
"3. The debt, from its origin, was a debt of the United States as well as of the Territory.

"4. In any event, the United States confirmed and assumed this debt when Florida was admitted into the Union.'

Mr. Thomas, the agent of the United States, said that the claim for the payment of the interest and ultimately of the principal of the bonds was now for the first time presented against the Government of the United States. Florida was ceded to the United States by Spain on February 22, 1819, and it was agreed that the inhabitants should be incorporated into the Union as soon as consistent with the Federal Constitution and admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, privileges, and immunities of citizens of the United States. By section 3, Article IV, of the Federal Constitution Congress is empowered "to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.'

In 1822 Congress by law established a Territorial government for Florida. In this, as in all previous Territorial governments, the legislature had no power over the primary disposal of the soil, or any power to tax the lands of the United States, nor to interfere with claims to lands within the Territory. Nevertheless, the government created for the Territory was not an agency of the United States, but a government by which the people could execute their purposes. Its officials were officers of the Territory and not of the United States. It had executive, legislative, and judicial departments, possessing the powers usually exercised by the government of a State. Process ran in the name of the Territory. It had complete civil and criminal jurisdiction and possessed the power to lay and collect taxes. In the exercise of these ample powers it chartered the bank and the trust company in question.

The failure of the government of Florida to pay the bonds and certificates did not, said Mr. Thomas, impose on the Government of the United States any obligation, nor had that Government any authority to pay them. Its powers were limited by the Federal Constitution. It had power to borrow money on the credit of the United States to pay the debts of the United States, but none to borrow money on the credit of a Territory or to pay the latter's debts. It was true that in the act authorizing the Territorial government Congress reserved the power to disapprove the acts of the legislature; but this was not a new principle, and it did not render the United States liable for all the acts of the legislature and what was done under them. In the bill to charter the Union Bank there was a clause requiring the express sanction of Congress before the act should take effect. The governor objected to this clause as derogating from the powers of the legislature, and it was stricken out. This fact was before the world when the bonds were sold, and if anything were wanting to show that it was understood that the credit of the United States was in no way involved it was the circumstance that the bonds were sold and purchased at 10 per cent below par, while the obligations of the United States were selling above it. The bonds on their face pledged the credit of the Territory of Florida and not of the United States. The implication of liability in the case of the British Government in respect of colonial bonds was much stronger than in the case of the United States in respect of Territorial bonds; and yet no one supposed that the British Government was bound for colonial bonds, unless it had expressly assumed liability for them, as in the case of the "guaranteed loan" of Canada. In support of his position, Mr. Thomas cited Williams v. Bank of Michigan (7 Wendell, 539); opinion of J. C. Spencer (5 Wendell, 481); State v. New Orleans Navigation Co. (11 Martin (La.), 300).

Mr. Cairns, for the bondholders, assisted by Hannen, agent and counsel for Great Britain, in reply, supported the claim on the following grounds:

"1. On the general ground of the subordinate power and position of a Territory under the General Government. The United States, it was pointed out, held the supreme power over Territories, appointed their chief executives, had a large interest in their lands, and in numerous respects held such a responsibility and charge over them, and such control over their legislation that in justice and equity the General Government should be responsible for their debts.

"2. That the article in the constitution of Florida limiting the right of taxation to the necessary expenses of government might be construed, and probably was designed to be construed, such a manner as to prevent the State government from making the necessary appropriations for the payment of the debts of the Territory, and that Congress by the admission of the Territory with such a provision became accessory to the wrong, and should be held to have pledged the resources of the United States for the payment of such debts.

"3. It was further contended that under all the circumstances of the case the United States was morally bound to pay these debts; that a moral obligation was as high a claim as could be set up against a sovereign power, and was in such case fully as binding as a legal obligation, since a moral obligation was the only kind of a claim that could exist against a sovereign.

Mr. Upham, the American commissioner, delivered the fol-

Opinion of lowing opinion:
Mr. Upham. "I have liet "I have listened attentively to the arguments urged in this case, but have been unable to see any just grounds on which the claim is based,

To sustain the claim, one of two propositions must be maintained-either that the act of the Territory of Florida pledging her credit originally bound the United States, or that Congress subsequently approved and sanctioned the law of the Territory, so as to make it obligatory on the whole people of the Union.

"I. Could the Territory of Florida bind the United States originally by her acts? This depends entirely on the power vested in her as a government. Florida had been originally colonized by Spain, and had long been subject to her authority. It was ceded by that power to the United States on the 22d of February, 1819, with a provision that it 'should be incorporated into the Union as soon as it should be consistent with the principles of the Federal Constitution.'

The power of holding Territories is evidently given to the General Government. The Constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall have power 'to make all needful rules and regulations respecting its Territories.'

"The course of proceeding by Congress in such cases has been to constitute, within any given Territory, whenever the number of inhabitants will justify it, a Territorial government, with power to establish its own laws, subject only to such reservations and restrictions as are specifically named in the charter bestowed upon it.

The governors of Territories have been uniformly appointed by the President of the United States; and in some instances, for a short time, a territorial council has been appointed in the same manner, having the usual powers and authority of a legislature.

"A council was appointed in this manner in Florida until 1826, when it was provided that the inhabitants should elect their Territorial council; or, in other words, their legislature annually. By the act constituting the Territory of Florida the governor was invested with the powers of a chief executive magistrate; and the council or legislature was authorized, in express terms, 'to legislate on all rightful subjects of legisla-' provided that its laws were to be reported to Congress annually, and 'if they were disapproved by Congress they were thenceforth to be of no force.'

'Under the authority thus conferred courts were established having the highest civil and criminal jurisdiction; and her own laws, within her own jurisdiction, subject only to the Constitution of the United States and the negative of Congress, constituted the supreme laws of the Territory.

"Florida exercised under this charter all the ordinary powers of a government. She regulated her own policy, assessed her own taxes, granted numerous acts of incorporation, and established various institutions deemed essential to her welfare and prosperity until 1835, when she passed the acts under which the indebtedness of the Territory was incurred. Can the United States be said to have enacted either of these laws or to be holden, as a government, responsible for the payment of the obligation created by them? No evidence has been shown to sustain such a proposition and no theory of government countenances it. Various suggestions have been thrown out as bearing on this point, to which we propose to advert.

"One suggestion which has been made is: That the governor of Florida was appointed by the President of the United States.

"In like manner the governors of every Province of Great Britain are appointed by the Crown; but it was never understood that such Provinces had not full power of enacting valid, binding laws, within their constituted sphere of action, to the same extent as other governments. It is wholly immaterial in this respect how the chief executive magistrate of a Province or the other branches of its government are appointed. When constituted they form the government of the Province, with the ordinary rights, duties, and powers of a government. One of the very least of these powers is the capacity to contract debts in aid of the functions for which it was constituted. Each government possesses this power as one of its attributes, in common with every other public or private corporation, except so far as it may be expressly restricted in its exercise by some or-ganic or other law, and no such law is here intimated or pre-

"Another suggestion made is that the laws of Florida might be disapproved by the General Government. But this does not make the laws of the Territory the laws of the Union or bind the Union to the obligations they impose. Such laws, when approved, only operate on the people of Florida. They have no power beyond her limits. If disapproved, they are a mere nullity. The power of approval of colonial laws before they take effect has always existed in the Crown of Great Britain from her earliest territorial acquisitions and in every other government having colonies or subordinate possessions. laws made by the colonies are, notwithstanding, their own laws and have never been holden to bind the mother country,

"The capability of incurring debts for certain objects ordinarily exists in parishes, towns, cities, counties, etc.; and though they may be under the control of the General Government, their contracts and their debts incurred by them are nevertheless their own. A different doctrine would confound all principles of just and accurate responsibility and would seriously impair the advantages devised, through a variety of subordinate organizations, to secure the essential ends of good government.

"Again it is said that the lands belonging to the United States within the Territory of Florida were not liable to be taxed. This is so. The public lands, however, of the United States are graduated at a price best calculated to insure their rapid settlement, and they become at once liable to taxation on their being sold and improved. The same policy exists in other governments. Public lands and public property are nowhere taxed, but such an exemption was never construed to render the General Government liable for the debts of any town, county, or province within which such lands or property might be situated.

It has been also said, and numerous authorities have been cited to the point, that the original power of the General Government over the public territory was absolute and unlimited.

"So the people of the United States had originally unlimited power to adopt the form of government they preferred; and they may still change and modify their Constitution at pleasure, but this does not alter the facts as to the binding character of the acts of the Government when once established.

The United States has chosen to extend to her Territories, in the outset, the right of self-government, and has intrusted them, as in the case of Florida, with powers 'to act in all rightful subjects of legislation.' This power once granted is complete. From 13 original States the Union has thus extended to 31 States, formed mostly from new Territories, each of which is wholly independent of the other as to the contracts and liabilities they may make and the legislation they may adopt, saving only their obligation to the general Constitution of the Union. The government of a Territory does not depend so fully and perfectly on the action of its own people as that of the individual States, but its laws, once enacted and not disapproved, have precisely the same binding power and efficacy, within its limits, as those of a State. No one of these suggestions to which we have adverted, or the whole combined, tends to show that the acts of Florida are the acts of the General Government or that her responsibilities are the responsibilities of the American people.

"II. It remains to consider the second point raised-whether Congress subsequently approved and sanctioned the local law of Florida so as to make it a provision binding generally on the people of the Union. It is not contended that this local law was adopted or liability incurred by any direct act of the General Government assuming the debt. It is said, however, that the Government has rendered itself liable for its payment, because she admitted Florida into the Union as a State without first compelling her to make payment of these debts.

The argument proceeds on the ground that the United States can not admit a portion of its territory into the Union while in debt without becoming responsible for such indebtedness. It asserts, in substance, the principle that whenever the Government has in its power, by the conditional denial of any privilege, to compel a Territory to make payment of a debt it must insist on such compulsion or it shall be holden to have assumed such debt.

This is a new responsibility imposed on governments.

"It is quite clear to me, on the other hand, that the United States might well assume the position that she had nothing to do with the contracts between her Territories and individuals, and that it is not a part of her duty to constitute herself into a judicial tribunal to pass upon the pecuniary relations existing between them. Florida might well contend that this should not be done and that she will not be dictated to or interfered with by the United States on the subject.

"But this point is put still stronger. It is said that a provision was inserted into the constitution of Florida, preparatory to her admission as a State, that 'no other or greater amount of tax or revenue shall at any time be levied than may be required for the necessary expenses of government,' and it is contended that this provision expressly prohibits the payment of any prior existing debt, and that the United States, by admitting Florida into the Union with such a clause in her constitution, became accessory to the wrong done and should be held responsible for it. But this is a far-fetched construction of the clause in question, and forms altogether too remote a claim to impose a legal pecuniary liability. The most necessary expenses of a government are the payment of its obligations as they fall due. It can hardly be pretended if a tax should be assessed by the State of Florida upon its citizens to raise funds to meet such obligations, that an individual could resist payment of such tax on the ground that it was unconstitutional. No court would give such a construction to this provision of constitution, and unless we hold that such would necessarily be the decision of the court, then the objection is without foundation and constitutes no ground for the assertion that the United States, by admitting Florida into the Union with this provision, should be held to have assumed the debts of the Territory.

But whether such be the interpretation of the clause in the constitution or not, the inference attempted to be drawn from it would not follow. If Florida has repudiated her debts for any cause, it was her act, and it was not incumbent on the United States to compel her, by any denial of the ordinary right of admission into the Union, to pay such debts. She had no more rightful control over the acts of a Territory so situated than she had over a State.

"The creditors of the Territory had no power, either legal or moral, to interpose any such bar to her admission. It is not a remedy for coercing the payment of debts which was contemplated by any party to the contract when entered into. The United States therefore violated no principle of law or equity or moral obligation in admitting Florida into the Union, and is guilty of no laches for which she could be holden responsible in not disapproving the acts passed by her as a Terri-

"The several States and Territories are independent sovereignties for the ordinary purposes of local government. They have the power over the liberty and lives of their citizens and the formation of their own civil and social relations within their precinct.

"They can incur obligations for all expenditures coming within their appropriate sphere as fully as the General Government. Their delinquencies in any matter coming within the range of their powers are their own, and however grievous a wrong they may inflict by such delinquencies on their creditors the precedent of holding the General Government responsible for such wrong would be still more disastrous. It would impose burdens on individuals having no immediate share or interest in the benefits received, would constitute taxation without representation, and would confound the necessary and rightful distinctions in the partition of responsibility and accountability essential for the maintenance of government.

"The wrong complained of is not one which can be charged against the United States; she is not amenable for it, and a proper appreciation of the distinct agencies of different organizations in government will fully exonerate the United States from the claim set up in this case. In my view, therefore, the claimants have shown no ground entitling them to recovery against the General Government."

Mr. Hornby, the British commissioner, contended that the United States was liable for the bonds, first, be-Opinion of cause the Territories were "subject to the absolute government of Congress." Not only, he said, did the right of government belong to Congress, but the United States also owned the unsettled lands, the funds derived from the sale of which were at the absolute disposal of the National Government, and were applied to national purposes. (Citing 1 Kent Comm., 276; Story on the Constitution, par. 1327; State v. New Orleans Navigation Co., 11 Martin (La.), 313; Opinion of Butler, At. Geu. Op., 1006; Opinion of Sherman (Senator), Williams v. Bank of Michigan, 7 Wend., 554.) From an early period in its existence the Territorial government of Florida created a great number of corporations for public purposes. The acts for that purpose were duly submitted to Congress; some were disallowed while others were permitted to stand, after having been the subject of discussion in that body. Amon these was the one establishing the "Union Bank of Florida (1833). This act, though declared by a committee of the Senate to contain some objectionable provisions, was suffered to stand.

Mr. Hornby contended that Congress had thus "authorized and ratified" the various acts relating to the corporations whose bonds were before the commission, and the discussion had, he said, "entirely turned upon the extent to which Congress is affected by having given such authority and ratification.

On this subject Mr. Hornby said:

"Up to the 1st July, 1841, the interest on the bonds was duly paid at the time and places appointed, but from that date to the present time no payment whatever has been made on account of them, and the corporations have become completely insolvent. Upon this payment of the interest on the bonds was sought to be obtained from the Territorial government, in accordance with the terms of the bonds; but the claim was refused, and in 1842 the Territorial legislature passed resolutions declaring that the governor and council were 'never invested with authority to pledge the faith of the Territory so as to render the citizens responsible for the debts or engagements of any corporation chartered by the Territorial legislature.' The revenue laws of the Territory were also suspended, 'so far as they authorize the assessment and collection of a Territorial revenue in future,' with certain specific exceptions. These acts of the Territorial legislature were submitted to Congress, and were permitted to pass into law without disapproval.

"From this time, then, until the admission of Florida into the Union as a State, the territorial legislature persisted in its repudiation of the engagements contracted on the bonds; and although the subject was repeatedly brought before Congress in various ways—in some cases by memorial of the bondholders praying for relief—no action of Congress took place, and the bondholders remained without redress.

'Let us pause for a moment to consider what the position of the bondholders and Congress would have been had the facts already stated constituted the whole case.

"The bondholders advanced their money on an engagement entered into by the agents duly constituted by Congress for the government of the Territory, for the payment of money by the Territory; such engagement being sanctioned by Congress, its acquiescence in the passing of the bank act having induced the public, in the language of Mr. Chancellor Kent, to invest property and make contracts upon the faith and validity of the charter. The Territory acknowledged itself to be indebted in the amount of the bond, and the 'faith of the Territory' was pledged for the payment. Now, what is the meaning of a Territory or State acknowledging itself to owe a debt and pledging its faith for the liquidation of it? It plainly means this-or it means nothing-that the governing power engages that the revenue, resources, and property of the Territory or State are pledged for the debt and shall be applied to its discharge. In other words, an obligation was created on the part of Florida by the executive, as the agent of the sovereign power, and by the legislature, as the agent of the people, which was sanctioned by Congress to pay the debt; that obligation, in fact, operating on all the property of the Territory of Florida.

"It has been already shown that the government of the Territory was at the absolute disposal of the United States (represented by Congress), in whom the right of eminent domain was vested, and that Congress assented in the fullest manner to the pledge which was given by the Territorial government. There was then an engagement to apply the resources of the Territory for the payment of a debt incurred with the assent of the sovereign power. Upon this state of facts it is obvious that, if those principles of equity which are binding on individuals be applicable to States, it became the duty of Congress to see that the funds which it had permitted to be pledged should be applied to the discharge of the debts they were intended to secure, and the bondholders were entitled to call upon the United States Government to cause those funds to be anplied to their relief or to indemnify them for loss arising from the failure to do so.

"The duty of thus protecting the interests of the bondholders was the more incumbent on Congress from the fact that, by reason of its being the owner of by far the greater portion of the soil of the Territory, it was the party most benefited by the introduction of the bondholders' capital into the Territory

"But if the position of the bondholders was such as I have stated it to have been while Florida continued a Territory, it will be found that their claim assumed an entirely new form and acquired immeasurably more force from the moment that the Territory was admitted to the Union as an independent State.

This admission took place on March 3, 1845.

"By the second section of the eighth article of the constitution of the new State, which received the assent of Congress, it was declared that 'no other or greater amount of tax or revenue shall at any time be levied than may be required for the necessary expenses of the government.'

"By the introduction of this clause into the constitution Congress appears to have designed to lend effect to the repudiating resolutions of the Territorial legislature, to which it had already given its assent.

"It has, indeed, been denied in the course of the argument that this clause was intended to have or had the effect of preventing the State from raising revenue in order to pay debts of the Territory; but if any doubt could exist on this point it must be removed by the fact that those best able to judge of the meaning of the constitution of Florida and having the power to enforce its own interpretation, viz, the legislature of the State, have declared that they are precluded by the article of the constitution in question from levying any tax to provide for the payment of the interest or principal of these bonds or from entering on any consideration of the question

"It was then, when Congress admitted the insertion of this clause with a full knowledge of the injustice it would work, that the power to pay was taken away from the State that was then being called into existence. But this was not all, for the power which had hitherto been vested in Congress by virtue of its very sovereignty, whenever it chose to exercise it, to compel a Territory to observe the obligation of a contract or to do that which it was legally and morally bound to do was also divested by the change thus effected in the form of the government of Florida.

"While, then, Florida remained a Territory the means existed of compelling it to perform the contracts entered into in its name, but from the moment that it became a State the creditors of the former Territory were deprived of all means whatever of enforcing their just demands.

"For the State of Florida, to whom it is said the debts of the Territory have been transferred, can not be sued by the creditors, for the Constitution expressly enacts that no State can be sued in the United States courts, and, of course, a State can not be sued in its own courts.

"Nor can Congress compel Florida to pay its debts, for it is an independent State, and can not be coerced by the others, either singly or collectively, into doing even that which is its

"And, lastly, not only has Congress, by admitting Florida as a State, deprived the creditors of the means of enforcing their rights, but it has bestowed upon the State a constitution which actually prevents it from paying its debts.

"The debt, then, is at present practically confiscated. This is the wrong which is complained of, and we have to determine whether it is one for which the United States is answerable. The possibility of a better state of public opinion inducing the inhabitants of Florida at some future time to remodel their constitution, so as to rescind the existing confiscation, can not affect the rights and liabilities arising out of the present state of facts.

"The principal arguments advanced in opposition to the claim, which I have not already adverted to, are these:

"1. That Congress, having only the powers enumerated by the Constitution, can do no more than is to be found within that document, and that the power to pay the debts of a Territory is not specified or to be implied.

"2. That Congress had not the power of rejecting the clause of the constitution of the proposed State of Florida which forbade the collecting af revenue for any other purpose than the necessary expenses of government, but that it was bound to admit the new State with this clause in its constitution, however objectionable it may be.

"The first of these objections tends to raise a discussion on a point which has long been definitely settled in the United States.

"In the first place, it assumes the whole question at issue in this case. If the United States have, by the acts of Congress, incurred an obligation to indemnify the present claimants, then a debt has arisen and Congress has express power to levy taxes in order to pay its debts. I presume that it is not necessary to show by argument that a technical meaning is not to be attached to the word 'debts,' but that it signifies any pecuniary claim, whether for a sum certain or for unliquidated damages. But, secondly, the Constitution only prescribes the purposes for which taxes, and so forth, are to be levied. It is wholly silent as to the appropriation of national funds arising from other sources, such as the sale of public lands; and it has been shown that this is a source of revenue which is peculiarly proper to be applied to the relief of the present claimants. And, lastly, the Constitution has never been construed in the United States in the narrow spirit in which it is now sought to interpret it. It is fully established by Mr. Justice Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, book 3, chapter 14, that Congress has full power to apply the funds of the Nation, from whatever source derived, to all purposes which they may deem national.

"That learned writer concludes his remarks with these words, 'In regard to the practice of government, it has been entirely in conformity to these principles. Appropriations have never been limited by Congress to cases falling within the specific powers enumerated in the Constitution, whether those powers be construed in their broad or narrow sense. And in an especial manner appropriations have been made to aid internal improvements of various sorts, in our roads, our navigation, our streams, and other objects of a national character and importance. In some cases, not silently, but upon discussion, Congress has gone the length of making appropriations to aid destitute foreigners and cities laboring under severe calamities, as in the relief of the San Domingo refugees in 1794, and the citizens of Venezuela who suffered from an earthquake in 1812.' So also in the case of three cities in [the District of] Columbia—Washington, Georgetown, and Alexandria—Congress assumed the debt which the cities had incurred, and for the liquidation of which their public faith had been pledged, and the Secretary of the Treasury was ordered to pay it.

"It is a misapprehension of the power of Congress to suppose that it was bound to admit the Territory of Florida to the Union without any discretion as to the terms upon which the admission was to take place. The time and mode of admission were entirely for Congress to determine. Story, in his Commentaries, section 1321, shows that precedents and judicial decisions 'have established the rightful authority of Congress to impose restrictions upon the admission of new But, without citing authorities, it is obvious that Congress can not be regarded as having merely administrative functions on such admission, to record the event without control over it. It would be powerless to discharge the most important of its functions as the guardian of the national interests, if it were bound to admit every new State with any constitution its inhabitants might think fit to propose for themselves, however inconsistent it might be with the general welfare of the Union, with private morality, or with public honor.

"It will not be necessary to examine the history of the Pensacola Bank and the Southern Life Assurance Co., whose obligations were also guaranteed by the Territorial government. As against that government, the claim of the holders of the Pensacola Bank bonds is strengthened by the circumstance that that company gave the Territorial government very considerable security on real and personal property against the liability which was incurred by pledging the public faith. The claim, however, as against the United States Government, is the same in each case.

"I am of opinion, therefore, upon these facts, that the United States Government is bound to pay to the British subjects hereunder enumerated the principal of the bonds of which they are holders when the same shall become due, and to pay to them forthwith the arrears of interest on such bonds, with interest at 5 per cent on such arrears, up to the 14th of September, 1854, amounting in the whole to the sums set opposite their names.'

The commissioners having disagreed, the umpire rendered the following decision:

"This claim has been brought before the commissioners by the holders of bonds issued by the 'Territory of Florida,' while it was under a Territorial government and before Florida was admitted into the Union as one of the States of the United

"At the time of the issue of the bonds in question the Territory was governed by a legislative council chosen by the people, the governor being appointed by the President of the United States. All the acts or laws of the legislative council were required, by the law of the United States, to be laid before Congress, and if not disapproved of they became law in Florida.

"For one portion of these bonds the claimants contended that, by the right which Congress claimed to reject or veto any law passed by the legislative council of Florida, the United States Government rendered itself liable to pay the interest and principal of these bonds should Florida fail to do so.

For another portion of the bonds the claim on this ground was abandoned and their claim was based on the fact that the United States had, in the session of Congress of 1843-44, admitted Florida into the Union with a constitution having the following clause in it: 'No greater amount of tax or revenue shall at any time be levied than may be required for the necessary expenses of government.' (Art. 8 of Florida constitution.)

"The first ground of claim need hardly be treated seriously; it might as well be contended that the British Government is responsible for all the Canadian debentures, because all the acts passed by the Canadian Parliament require the sanction of the home Government before they become laws. It will be seen, however, that at the time these bonds were bought it was never imagined by the buyers that the United States were in any way liable. "With regard to the second ground of claim—that the United States, by having admitted Florida into the Union as a State, with the article in her constitution above referred to, were rendered liable to pay the debts of Florida—it may be remarked that Congress could not justly refuse to admit Florida into the Union with such a constitution; there was nothing in it contrary (to) or in violation of the Constitution of the United States; Congress had only the power to fix the time of admission, and reject any constitution that was contrary to the Constitution of the United States: nor does it appear that the bondholders are in any way damaged by this article in the constitution of Florida.

"If the people of Florida refused to pay or neglected to pay as a Territory, would they be less likely to pay as a State? There would be the same people to deal with; the members of the convention that formed the constitution were chosen by the people; and the legislature, chosen by the people, would not be likely to be very different from the convention. means clear that the eighth article of the constitution forbids any taxes for liquidating the liabilities of the State; and if that be so, there is no difficulty in amending the constitution. Most of the States have amended their constitutions from time to time. The bondholders have the same remedy against the State as they had against the Territory. They have a just claim. But they are under the well-known disadvantage in both cases—they could not sue the Territory; they can not sue the State.

"It has been urged that there is no way of getting at a State government except through the Government of the United States; this is a mistake. There is no difficulty in the way of individuals dealing with the separate States in any matters that concern the State alone; nearly all the States have public works and contract loans with individuals, American and foreign, and any person aggrieved may petition the governor or legislature for relief. A State can not deal with a foreign government; the intercourse with foreign nations belongs to the General Government.

"To show that the Florida bondholders never supposed the United States in any way responsible, attention is called to the prospectus issued by the agents for the sale of the bonds created for the Union Bank. It is as follows: "'Florida 6 per cent sterling bonds—interest and principal payable at the house of Messrs. Palmers, MacKillop, Dent & Co.

"'These are the bonds of the Territory of Florida, payable to the order of the Bank of Florida, and indorsed by the bank. They are in sums of $1,000 each, bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable half yearly—the interest and principal payable in London at the rate of 4s. 6d. sterling per dollar. The bonds are payable on the 1st of January, 1862, 1864, 1866, and 1868. The proceeds of the sale of the bonds form an addition to the active capital of the Union Bank. The bank commenced business on the 16th of January, 1835, with a capital of $1,000,000, with a privilege of increasing it to $3,000,000; and it is to complete that increase of capital that these bonds are to be sold. The profits of the bank, after paying interest of bonds and expenses of management, are retained to accumulate as a sinking fund until that fund shall be equal in amount to the bonds issued.

'On the 1st of January, 1839, upon a bank capital of $1,000,000, the amount of the sinking fund exceeded $300,000. Owing to peculiar circumstances, the profits of the past year have been very large, but previous experience has proved that in ordinary years (after paying the interest of its capital and the expense of management) the annual surplus profits of the bank (which will be added to the sinking fund) will exceed 4 per cent, which annuity, compounded at the bank interest at 82 per cent, will cause the sinking fund to effect its object in 14 years. Indeed, the present amount of that fund, compounded at the bank interest, would pay off the whole $3,000,000 of bonds in 28 years without any aid from the future annual profits of the bank, the average maturity of the bonds being 26 years.

"'The capital of the bank, equal in amount to the bonds and the sinking fund, are to be retained and held as security for the repayment of the bonds. Another ample security for their payment is provided by a mortgage of the property of the stockholders of the bank to the extent of $3,000,000. The value of the property mortgaged for that object was first ascertained by the appraisement, upon oath, of five commissioners in each county, appointed for that purpose by the governor and the legislature of the Territory; and these appraisements were again subjected to the revision of a board of 12 directors, of whom 5 are appointed by the governor and legislature. So great has been the rise in value of every kind of property in Florida that the property mortgaged to the bank would, even now, sell for thrice the amount of the bonds, and each succeeding year necessarily enhances its value; the holders of the bonds have, therefore, a fourfold security for their payment, viz:

"'1. The capital of the bank, equal in amount to the bonds. "'2. The sinking fund, which will effect its object in 14 years.

"'3. The property of the stockholders, originally appraised at three millions, with its increased value.

"'4. The faith and credit of the Territory and State of

"'By the direction of an act of Congress a convention is now in session for the purpose of framing a constitution for Florida, and she will probably become a State this year.

"The securities enumerated in this document are four, and they were ample if honestly administered; but not the slightest allusion is made to any liability of the United States, nor is there discoverable the smallest foundation for the claim of the bondholders before this commission, which is constituted for the purpose of settling the claims of British subjects against the Government of the United States or of the citizens of the United States against the British Government. THE CALENDAR.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII? The Chair hears no objection. The Secretary will report the first bill on the calendar under Rule VIII.

VOLUNTEER FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES.

The bill (S. 2518) to provide for raising the Volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war was announced as first in order on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was read in full July 8 last and in part amended. The Secretary will state further amendments that were not then acted upon.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, in the amendment of the committee, in line 9-

Mr. OVERMAN. Before unanimous consent is given for the consideration of the bill, I should like to have the chairman of the committee express his views upon what is proposed by the measure.

Mr. BACON. What is the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is the bill to provide for raising the vol-unteer forces of the United States.

Mr. BACON. The bill is on the calendar?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the first bill on the calendar. Mr. BACON. It will be impossible to consider the bill under the five-minute rule. I therefore object. I do not object to its being taken up at the proper time, when we can give full consideration to it, but it is a very important matter, and can not possibly be considered on the call of the calendar.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia objects.

I do not object to its consideration at any time when the Senate may see proper to proceed to its consideration, but I object to its consideration under the fiveminute rule.

Mr. DU PONT. The Senator from Georgia may overlook the fact that the Senate has already partially considered the bill and passed several sections of it. In July last it went practically a third through the bill. A third of the bill has been already considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia objects to its consideration at this time, and the bill goes over.

Mr. BACON. I wish to repeat, in order that I may not be misunderstood, that I shall not object at any time when the Senate may see proper to take up the bill for a full considera-I do not think it is practicable to do so under the fiveminute rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hill will go over.

Mr. DU PONT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, the objection of the Senator from Georgia to the contrary notwithstanding.

. Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I raise this question of order. Under the request made by the Senator from Minnesota the Senate agreed to proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases on the calendar. I submit that the motion is scarcely in order.

Mr. NELSON. The Senate agreed to proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. GALLINGER. By unanimous consent.

Mr. NELSON. I want to supplement what the Senator from New Hampshire said. I think at this time, in view of the request made, the motion is out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

was the request of the Senator from Minnesota. The bill will go over.

RILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2925) providing for a Confederate naval monument in the Vicksburg National Military Park was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution 109, providing for a certain program of legislation and for a recess of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the resolution go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the resolution may go to the calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be transferred to the calendar under Rule IX. The Chair hears no objection.

The next business on the calendar was the Senate concurrent resolution 4, instructing the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co.

Mr. POMERENE. One of the Senators who desires to be heard on the resolution is not present. I did not understand that the calendar was to be called except after the close of the morning business. For that reason I suggest that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 252) to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 290) to authorize the appointment of dental surgeons in the United States Navy was announced as next in

Mr. BRISTOW. May I inquire if the bill adds so many more officers to the naval establishment?

Mr. PERKINS. It does. Mr. BRISTOW. I ask t I ask that the bill may go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

LAND IN CITY OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 2748) for the relief of Clara Dougherty, Ernest Kubel, and Josephine Taylor, owners of lot No. 13; of Ernest Kubel, owner of lot No. 41; and of Mary Meder, owner of the south 17.10 feet front by the full depth thereof of lot No. 14, all of said property in square No. 724, in Washington, D. C., with regard to assessment and payment for damages on account of change of grade due to the construction of Union Station, in said District, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia how much money would be appropriated under the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not any; I will say to the Senator. Mr. OVERMAN. It says that there shall be an award, whatever that is.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state the facts in the case. There were damages properly due certain parties because of the change of grade in the construction of the Union Station, and these two or three parties were either nonresidents or else did not notice the advertisement and did not put in their claims. We have passed two or three similar bills. This is simply to waive the statute of limitations and let them go into court and bring their claims. The advertisement was in very small type, and there were a few people who had just claims who failed to observe it, or in a few cases were nonresidents and were not notified of the fact. It is entirely a proper bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CLAIMS.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, on page 1, line 7, after the word "woman," to insert "who is pregnant with child"; in line 9, after the words "District of Columbia," to insert "or on page 2, line 1, after the word "time," to insert "during pregnancy or"; and in line 2, after the word "person," to strike out "residing in said District," so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 16, after the word "examination," to strike out "if the child be yet living and under two years old"; in line 21 to strike out the word "trial" and insert "preliminary examination"; in line 23, after the word "who," to insert "upon each preliminary to the word "trial" and insert "preliminary examination"; in line 23, after the word "who," to insert "upon each preliminary to the word "trial" and insert "preliminary examination "trial" to the word "trial" and insert "preliminary examination "trial" to the word "trial" and insert "preliminary examination "trial" to the word "trial" and insert "preliminary examination "trial" and "trial" examination"; on page 3, line 3, after the word "next," to insert "or any succeeding"; and in line 5, after the word "court," to insert "but in the event that the woman be preg-nant at the time of the arrest, final trial shall not take place until after the birth of the child," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That on such examination a warrant shall be issued by the clerk, directed to the United States marshal, or to the major and superintendent or any member of the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia, requiring the person accused to be arrested and brought for preliminary examination before the judge of the juvenile court, District of Columbia, who, upon each preliminary examination, may require the accused to enter into bond, with good surety to the United States of America, in a sum to be fixed by such judge, not to exceed $2,500, for his appearance and trial in the juvenile court, District of Columbia, on the first day of the next or any succeeding term thereof, and to perform the judgment of said court, but in the event that the woman be pregnant at the time of the arrest, final trial shall not take place until after the birth of the child. If the person accused shall fall to give bond required of him, the judge shall forthwith commit him to the Washington Asylum and Jail, there to remain until he enter into the required bond or otherwise be discharged by due process of law. In all prosecutions under this act, the accused shall, upon his demand therefor, be entitled to a trial by jury; otherwise the trial shall be by the judge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (S. 4314) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I inquire of the chairman of the committee if he desires this legislation now, in view of the general bill which is coming before us?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think we should go right on with this special legislation.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read to page 20, line 5.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 20, line 5, before the word "dollars," I move to insert "four," so that the rate will be $24 per month.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.
The Secretary. On page 20, line 5, before the word "dollars," insert the word "four," so as to read:

The name of Lucy E. Culp, widow of Edward C. Culp, late major, Twenty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota how many names are provided, because I think as read there seemed to be only one on each page. watched the Secretary as he read the bill, and there seemed to be about half a dozen names. I should like to know how many there really are.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think there are over 100. Mr. GALLINGER. All told. Mr. McCUMBER. All told.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then the bill has not been read yet,

I suppose?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Georgia raises the point that the bill has not been read, the Chair will direct the Secretary to read the bill in full from the beginning.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. All right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. LODGE. If there is no objection, I think it would save time and give us an opportunity to get to other bills on the calendar if the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving" should be omitted, those words being repeated with every name on the list.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a part of the bill, and the Senator from Georgia asked that the bill be read in full.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not object to that part of it being omitted. I only wanted to gather some conception of what the bill was carrying, and I had not been able to gather it from the reading at the desk.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and read to line 8 on page 3.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To save time, I desire to object to the consideration of this bill under the five-minute rule. I want to look through the bill and see how much is the total increase.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill goes over. The next bill on the calendar will be reported.

POST-LANTERN LIGHTS ON ST. CROIX RIVER.

The bill (S. 3856) relative to the establishment of post-lantern lights on the St. Croix River, including Lake St. Croix, Wisconsin and Minnesota, was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORT OF ASHTABULA, OHIO.

The bill (S. 2228) to establish Ashtabula, Ohio, a subport of entry in the customs-collection district of Cuyahoga, Ohio, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHTSHIP OFF CAPE BLANCO, OREG.

The bill (S. 296) to direct the construction of a lightship and its maintenance near Orford Reef, off Cape Blanco, Oreg., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORT OF HOLEB, ME.

The bill (S. 3160) to establish at Holeb, Me., a subport of entry in the customs-collection district of Bangor, Me., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order on the calendar.

Mr. BURNHAM. Let the bill go over for the present. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

STEAM YACHT "DIANA."

The bill (S. 1653) to provide American register for the steam yacht Diana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator in charge of the billdid not catch the reading of it entirely-whether or not the proportion of repairs which the law now requires was made on this vessel?

Mr. BRIGGS. The yacht had $170,000 expended on it, $35,000 after it was purchased, which was expended in this country. Then the yacht burned and nothing was left save the hull, and it was entirely rebuilt at an expense of $135,000.

Mr. BACON. I thought it was due that that statement

I thought it was due that that statement should be made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, or-dered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KOOTENAI RIVER BRIDGES, MONTANA.

The bill (S. 3776) permitting the board of county commissioners of Lincoln County, State of Montana, to construct, maintain, and operate three bridges across the Kootenai River, in the State of Montana, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 5, after the word "three," to strike out "steel or iron," and in line 6, after the word "bridges," to strike out "without draw or opening," so as to read:

That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the board of county commissioners of Lincoln County, State of Montana, to construct, maintain, and operate three bridges, and approaches thereto, across the Kootenai River, suitable to the interests of navigation, at the following points, all in Lincoln County, Mont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 2, line 17, after the word "county," to insert the words:

Provided, That the aforesaid bridges shall be constructed, maintained, and operated.

So as to read:

So as to read:

Near the town of Rexford, Mont.: From a point on the south bank of said river in the northwest quarter of sec. 21, T. 36 N., R. 28 W., Montana meridian, in Lincoln County, Mont., to a point on the north bank of said river in sec. 21, T. 36 N., R. 28 W., Montana meridian, in the same county.

Near the town of Libby, Mont.: From a point on the south bank of said river in the northwest quarter of sec. 3, T. 30 N., R. 31 W., Montana meridian, to a point on the north bank of said river in sec. 3, T. 30 N., R. 31 W., Montana meridian, to a point on the north bank of said river in sec. 3, T. 30 N., R. 31 W., Montana meridian, in the same county.

Near the town of Troy, Mont.: From a point on the south bank of said river in the northeast quarter of sec. 12, T. 31 N., R. 34 W., Montana meridian, to a point on the north bank of said river in the northeast quarter of sec. 12, T. 31 N., R. 34 W. Montana meridian, in the same county: Provided, That the aforesaid bridges shall be constructed, maintained, and operated in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges upon navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. I have in my hand a telegram I received from the county attorney of Lincoln County this morning regarding this bill. He said that a mistake was made in the description of a quarter section in two places. I offer as an amendment, on page 2, line 6, to strike out the word "northwest" and insert the word "northeast."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. DIXON. Also, in line 12, I move to strike out the word "northeast" and insert the word "southeast."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SLAVO RAMADANOVITCH.

It proposes to pay to Slavo Rama-danovitch, of Cettigne, a Montenegrin subject, heir and administrator of Marcus Ramadanovitch, alias Radich, deceased, formerly a Montenegrin subject, the sum of $6,396, recommended by the President in his message to Congress dated July 5, 1909.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEMOTED EMPLOYEES OF THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 161) directing the Postmaster General to furnish a statement of demoted employees of the Post Office Department, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Reads January 15, 1912, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with a statement of the number of railway mall clerks and other post-office employees who have been demoted since January 1, 1911, for conduct deemed detrimental to the service or subversive of discipline, and how much in the aggregate per month the loss of pay has amounted to in the cases of men so demoted.

The resolution was agreed to.

MILITARY AND NAVAL RECORDS OF THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

The bill (S. 271) to authorize the compilation of the military and naval records of the Revolutionary War with a view to their publication was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. That bill calls for a very large appropriation, and I believe I will object to its consideration for the

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill will go

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I do not want to dissuade the Senator from North Carolina-

Mr. OVERMAN. I see that the bill proposes to appropriate $50,000.

Mr. DIXON. I want to ask the Senator whether he was pres ent at the meeting of the Military Committee when this bill was reported and heard the testimony?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not on the Military Committee.

Mr. DIXON. Excuse me. Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether I shall object to the bill, but it carries such a large appropriation that when we are acting under the five-minute rule we can not pass it, and there are probably others bills on the calendar which are not objectionable and which do not appropriate so much money.

Mr. DIXON. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that the bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. The records of the War Department, so far as the Revolutionary War is concerned, are in a lamentable

Mr. OVERMAN. Has there never been any publication of the Revolutionary War records?

Mr. DIXON. There never has been. The evidence showed that probably as to a fourth of the records from the various organizations of troops serving in the Revolutionary Army the War Department is wholly without any information regarding them, except as they find it in the records of the State historical societies, the Society of the Cincinnati, or other sources of that kind. The bill merely authorizes the Secretary of War to complete the compilation of the troops serving in the Revolutionary armies. The report was made that the longer the matter was put off and delayed the more difficult it would become to obtain the full records. The Military Committee was unanimous in reporting the bill.

Inasmuch as my State, I think, furnished Mr. OVERMAN. more soldiers for the Revolutionary Army or as many as any other State, and as I should like to know the facts, I withdraw my objection, except that I want to ask the Senator from Montana, why would it cost so much money? Fifty thousand dollars is a very large amount of money.

Mr. DIXON. A bill precisely similar to this passed the Senate two years ago. The Adjutant General made a very full report on the subject at that time. Some of these records can only be obtained in France and in England, in the archives of the French and British Governments. No man can forestell what the work may possibly cost; but this limitation was put on so that there should be no temptation to go into any vast expenditure of money. Considering, however, the fact that the entire records of the Revolutionary War are involved, we thought the measure was meritorious.

Mr. OVERMAN. I withdraw my objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, after the word "collect," to strike out "and compile" and to insert "or copy and classify," and in line 7, after the word "collect," to strike out "and compile" and to insert "or copy and classify," so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to collect or copy and classify, with a view to publication, the scattered military records of the Revolutionary War, and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to collect or copy and classify, with a view to publication, the scattered naval records of the Revolutionary

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 7, after the words "Navy Department," to insert:

Provided. That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used in the purchase of any such records that may be discovered either in the hands of private owners or in public depositories.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That there is hereby appropriated for the purposes of this act, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $50,000 for the War Department and $10,000 for the Navy Department: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used in the purchase of any such records that may be discovered either in the hands of private owners or in public depositories.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana what is the purpose of that last amendment? I do not know that I caught it exactly.

Mr. DIXON. That limitation was put in the bill as it passed the Senate a year ago, providing that no part of this money should be used for the purchase of old records.

Mr. BACON. "The purchase." I did not catch that.

Mr. DIXON. Yes; it was inserted out of abundance of caution. We did not want anybody to appear with muster rolls and sell them to the Government. It appears from the evidence taken by the subcommittee that on the disbandment of some of the regiments in some of the States the regular muster-out rolls were made up; but the officers took them with them to their own homes, and they were not returned to the War De-This amendment was merely to guard against some man with the notion of making money selling these old muster rolls to the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does this propose to publish the names and history of the troops in the States where the soldiers who fought the battles did not belong to the Continental Army, but were only State troops? Does it propose to get those facts and publish them also?

Mr. DIXON. This covers all of the troops included, as I understand, both in the Continental forces and in the State

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well. The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the collection of the military and naval records of the Revolutionary War with a view to their publication."

Mr. DIXON subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to ask unanimous consent, after conferring with some Senators interested in the bill which just passed, to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, in order to offer an amendment which I think is rather important.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent to reconsider the votes by which Senate bill 271 was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. DIXON. Now, Mr. President, after the word "War," in line 6, page 1, section 1, I offer an amendment to insert "including all troops acting under State authority."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 1, line 6, after the word "War," it is proposed to insert "including all troops acting under State authority."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE IN BELTRAMI COUNTY, MINN,

The bill (H. R. 15920) to authorize the board of county commissioners for Beltrami County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR MASSACHUSETTS.

The bill (S. 1150) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint an additional judge of the district court of the United States for the district of Massachusetts, who shall reside in said district, and who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation as the present district judge of said district.

Sec. 2. That this act shall take effect immediately.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for an additional judge of the district court for the district of Massachusetts."

ARANSAS PASS LIGHT STATION.

The bill (S. 4251) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to purchase from the State of Texas certain land required for lighthouse purposes at the Aransas Pass Light Station, Tex., was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that bill go over in the absence of the Senator from Texas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill goes

MISSOURI STATE CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 2493) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an examination of certain claims of the State of Missouri was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator reporting the bill make a statement in regard to it.

Mr. OVERMAN. A bill precisely similar to this has passed a number of times. It is a bill introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who desires the Secretary of the Treasury to examine into the war records. It calls for no appropriation whatever, and I see no objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the object, then, of the examination, can the Senator state?

Mr. OVERMAN. I suppose the State of Missouri is asking that the examination of these records be made. The State thinks it has some claims against the Government, but does not know whether it has or not. The State officials want to see if they are not entitled to what other States have been getting. There has been some confusion about the records. The bill does not call for a single dollar of appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not had time to read the report, but can the Senator say whether the bill is favorably reported upon by the department?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator will find that information in the report which he has before him.

Mr. SMOOT. I was looking to ascertain.
Mr. OVERMAN. There is a full report which can be read, if the Senator desires to hear it. A similar bill has passed here numbers of times

Mr. SMOOT. Would the Senator have any objection to letting the bill go over at this time?

Mr. OVERMAN. No. The Senator from Missouri is not here, and I should like for him to be here if there is going to be any objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

ELIZABETH MUHLEMAN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4041) for the relief of Elizabeth Muhleman, widow, and the heirs at law of Samuel A. Muhleman, deceased, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on page 1, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "one," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay Elizabeth Muhleman, widow, and the heirs at law of Samuel A. Muhleman, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, in full compensation for the death of said Samuel A. Muhleman on February 14, 1898, caused by injury received on the 9th day of June 1893, while employed as a clerk in the Record and Pension Office, War Department, while located in Ford's Theater at the time of its collapse.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN SURETY CO. OF NEW YORK.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3469) for the relief of the American Surety Co. of New York. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the American Surety Co. of New York $115.51, as reimbursement in full of a payment made by that company as surety on the bond of John W. Coltrane, a railway postal clerk, to cover the sum embezzled by him, the payment having been made to the Postmaster General and covered into the Treasury of the United States without knowledge of the fact that a like sum to cover the same embezzlement had already been paid by John W. Coltrane to the clerk of the United States District Court for the Eastern Division of North Carolina and turned into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the file of reports which I have here I see no report from the Treasury Department as to this case

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is such a report. It is the most simple case in the world of a double payment. The party liable had paid in one jurisdiction, and the American Surety Co., not knowing that fact, paid in another. The only thing we can properly do is to refund the money. A report was made to us by the department.

Mr. LODGE. The report is here.
Mr. SMOOT. I will only say that it is not before me in the file that I have; but if there is such a report I have no objection at all to the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The report is there.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HERBERT THOMPSON.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1293) for the relief of Herbert Thompson. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Virginia Trust Co., of Richmond, Va., guardian of Herbert Thompson, minor and only child of Charles J. Thompson, deceased, $701.12, in full compensation for the loss of his father, late a master rigger at the Norfolk Navy Yard, and who was killed by an accident while in line of duty on September 14, 1899, while engaged in removing the battery of the U. S. S. Newport, at the navy yard in Norfolk, Va.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT S. GILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2127) for the relief of the heirs of Robert S. Gill, which had been reported by the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "of," to strike out "ten thousand" and insert "twenty-five hundred and twenty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the heirs of Robert S. Gill, of Memphis, Tenn., out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,520, to compensate them for injuries received by Robert S. Gill while in the employ of the Government on the Panama Canal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BELLEVADORAH STEELE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (8. 2311) for the relief of Bellevadorah Steele, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "of," to strike out "ten thousand" and insert "one thousand two hundred and fortyeight," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Bellevadorah Steele, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,248, in full compensation for injuries received by Horatio N. Steele, husband of the said Bellevadorah Steele, while performing his duties as a master mechanic in the gun-carriage shop of the navy yard at Washington, D. C.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if the accident causing the injury of Mr. Steele happened before the general statute was passed relating to such cases?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It happened just a short time before that. We have made the allowance on the basis of the statute-one

Mr. SMOOT. That covers the $1,000, and the remainder is for expenses incurred, doctors' bills, and so forth, I suppose?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In this case I am not sure that there were any expenses. In another case the cost of an artificial foot and certain hospital expenses were allowed; but instead of allowing the amount claimed in the bill, we followed the statute substantially by giving one year's pay.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIBBIE ARNOLD.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2628) for the relief of Libbie Arnold, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "five," to strike out "thousand" and insert "hundred," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500 to Libbie Arnold for injuries sustained by her on the Senate elevator on the 2d day of December, 1895, and expenses of medical attendance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHERINE RATCHFORD.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4050) for the relief of Catherine Ratchford. It proposes to appropriate $900 for the relief of Catherine Ratchford, because of the death of her son, James Ratchford, on or about the 7th day of August, 1895, caused by injuries received by him on or about the 24th of July, 1895, while an employee of the United States Government, riprapping on the Missouri River, near Leavenworth, Kans., because of the negligent and careless acts of omission of his foreman in using a rotten and defective rope after he had notice of the same, and after they had promised to replace the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice on reading the report on the bill which has just been considered that there was nothing whatever from the department to show that there was a record made of the injury. Does the Senator know whether that information was given?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I can not answer the Senator's question with reference to this particular bill. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Oliver] made the examination and the report. I do not personally recall whether that information was furnished. The report accompanies the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing on that point in the report.

It is merely a recommendation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The bill may be passed over until the Senator from Pennsylvania is here, because he is perfectly familiar with it.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, will be reconsidered and the bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Utah.

ESTATE OF JOHN STEWART.

The bill (S. 2611) for the relief of the estate of John Stewart, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $2,000 to pay to William L. Browning, administrator of the estate of John Stewart, deceased, late civil engineer, for extra compensation for services rendered by him to the Government in connection with the Potomac Flats case

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF ELIZA B. HAUSE.

The bill (S. 1508) for the relief of the estate of Eliza B. Hause was announced as next in order, and the Secretary read

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let that bill go over. I should like to see the report in that case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

CLAIM OF THE STATE OF RHODE ISLAND.

The bill (S. 269) referring the claim of the State of Rhode Island to the Court of Claims for adjudication was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the items of the claim of the State of Rhode Island, for reimbursement for expenditures made in aiding the United States to raise its Voluntary Army in the War with Spain, and which are comprehended and described in the acts of Congress approved July 8, 1898, and March 3, 1899, and which were disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, shall be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication and report to Congress. And the certificate of the governor or the adjutant general of Rhode Island that the expenditures named in the items were necessary, just, and reasonable, and were incurred in good faith for the purposes mentioned, shall be sufficient evidence to authorize the adjudiciation under the provisions of the acts cited.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING LAWS.

The bill (S. 4239) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is too late in the day to start the consideration of this bill, and so I ask that it go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, at the request of the Senator from Utah.

GIFTS FROM FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

The bill (S. 2749) authorizing the State Department to deliver to certain persons gifts from the Governments of foreign States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes E. C. Hadley, light keeper at The Graves, Winthrop, Mass., to accept a watch tendered to him by the Canadian Government through the Department of State of the United States; and authorizes the Department of State to deliver to the widow or heir at law of Albert Whitten, deceased, former light keeper at Cape Ann, Rockport, Mass., a watch tendered to him by the Canadian Government through the Department of State of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GENERAL ARBITRATION TREATIES.

The resolution (S. Res. 176) requesting the President to make certain inquiries of the Governments of Great Britain and France touching the arbitration of justiciable controversies or disputes, submitted by Mr. Cummins on the 8th instant, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over, Mr. President.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING.

The resolution (S. Res. 184) authorizing the Committee on Mines and Mining to employ a messenger, submitted by Mr. Poindexter on the 15th instant, was announced as next in order, and the Secretary read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining is hereby authorized to employ a messenger at a salary of $1,200 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to have the resolution again read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. WARREN. I had understood that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate would provide such employees for the session of Congress rather than "until otherwise provided by law."

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the Committee on Mines and Mining has but two clerks, and this resolution provides a third.

Mr. WARREN. My objection is not to granting the Committee on Mines and Mining three clerks, but heretofore we have had innumerable cases where an employee has been put on the rolls "to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law." Provision for the place does not appear in the appropriation bills, and, in consequence, the incumbent who holds it goes on forever almost, sometimes for 25 or 30 years, drawing salary, because the resolution states that "until otherwise provided for by law" he shall be paid out of the contingent fund. My idea is that such employees ought to be paid in the same way that other clerks are paid—by a regular appropriation provided for in an annual appropriation bill. That being the case, there is no need for the wording "until otherwise provided for by law."

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly I think that is correct, but the chairman of the committee is not here.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have no objection whatever to the resolution, except as to that feature; and if the Senator from Kansas, who is a member of the committee, is not ready to change it, I will ask that the resolution go over.

Mr. BRISTOW. The chairman of the committee was really in charge of it, and I would not want to suggest a change in his absence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over at the request of the Senator from Wyoming.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The resolution (S. Res. 169) authorizing the Committee on Foreign Relations to employ a stenographer was announced as the next business in order and was read.

Mr. WARREN. The pending resolution merely refers, as it should with every other committee, to the present Congress. Therefore, of course, I do not make the same objection as in the previous case.

Mr. SMOOT. This is for a stenographer to report hearings. The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

ROSE H. COLLINS.

The resolution (S. Res. 166) to pay Rose H. Collins, widow of the late Walter F. Collins, was considered. The resolution had been reported from the Committee to

Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment, in line 2, after the word "pay," to insert "from the contingent fund of the Senate," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, from the contingent fund of the Senate, to Rose II. Collins, widow of Walter F. Collins, late assistant in folding room, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSENGER TO SENATOR THOMAS P. GORE.

The resolution (S. Res. 126) authorizing the Committee on Railroads to employ a messenger was considered.

The resolution had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment, in line 1, after the word "That," to strike out "the Committee on Railroads" and insert "Senator Thomas P. Gore," and in line 2 strike out "it" and insert "he," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That Senator THOMAS P. GORE be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger at a salary of $1,200 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

Mr. WARREN. Am I to understand that the amendment changes the resolution as to this being "until otherwise provided for by law" chargeable to the contingent fund of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That provision is in the resolution. Mr. WARREN. I ask that the resolution may go over without prejudice.

Mr. BRISTOW. The amendment which the Senator from Wyoming has suggested to the resolution would be acceptable to make it for this Congress instead of until otherwise provided for by law.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from Kansas, speaking for the committee, is willing, I should like to have such an amendment made-that it shall be for the present session.

Mr. BRISTOW. Strike out the words "until otherwise pro-

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will inquire if the Senator named in this resolution is chairman of the Committee on Railroads?
Mr. BRISTOW. He is.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then why not allow the resolution in its original form to stand? If we commence giving clerks to individual Senators, it will get us into endless trouble. We, of course, all know the reason for the proposed change in this case, but I hope the words originally in the resolution will stand.

Mr. BRISTOW. The committee, in considering this resolu-tion, thought that the reasons presented in this case made the change peculiarly necessary, and for that reason the change was proposed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would it not answer the same purpose if the resolution were to remain in its present form-"the Committee on Railroads"?

Mr. BRISTOW. The committee objected to that because the Senator who is now the chairman might not be its chairman for more than two or three or four months, and then the committee would have this additional clerk when it was not absolutely necessary. It was thought that the Senator who is at the head of this committee at the present time is entitled to have this messenger.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think he is. I shall not object to it. But I do dislike to have the Senate, even in this case of great merit, give clerks to Senators by name.

Mr. BRISTOW. That was considered by the committee, but it was thought, under all the circumstances—

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not object.

Mr. WARREN. I think we all understand the reasons why the resolution should be changed in this respect, but I should like to ask if the amendment confining it to the present session was agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to. The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

The resolution (S. Res. 164) authorizing the Committee on Commerce to conduct hearings, etc., was considered.

The resolution had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment, after the word "stenographer," at the end of line 3, to insert "from time to time," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oath, and to employ a stenographer from time to time to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, and to have the same printed for its use, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

The resolution (S. Res. 179) authorizing the Committee on Interoceanic Canals to conduct hearings, etc., was considered.

The resolution had been reported from the Committee to

Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment, in line 3, after the word "stenographers," to insert "from time to time," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized during the Sixty-second Congress to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ stenographers from time to time to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject that may be pending before said committee, and to have the testimony and proceedings of such hearings printed for the use of the committee. The expense of such hearings shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and said committee and subcommittees thereof may sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR.

The resolution (S. Res. 182) authorizing the Committee on Education and Labor to conduct hearings, etc., was considered.

The resolution had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment, in line 3, after the word "employ," to "from time to time," so as to make the resolution read: to insert

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oath, and to employ from time to time a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, and to have the same printed for its use, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CAPT. JOSEPH HERRING, UNITED STATES ARMY.

The bill (S. 67) for the relief of Capt. Joseph Herring, United States Army, retired, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $402.30 for the relief of Capt. Joseph Herring, United States Army, retired, said sum having been paid out of his own personal funds.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time,

and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASES OF PENSIONS.

The bill (S. 4623) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as the next business in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to ask that the bill go over. The bill (S. 4624) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that the bill go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills indicated by the Senator from Georgia will go over.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States was announced as the next in order on the calendar.

Mr. LODGE. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

HOMESTEADERS ON FORMER INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The bill (S. 3475) extending the time of payment to certain homesteaders on the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask right here whether there was not fixed a definite time for these payments?

Mr. GAMBLE. The law provided for annual installments, and this bill provides for an extension of one year. But all payments must be paid within the limitation of time, which was five years. I may state that unusual conditions existed in that section of the State. It was extremely dry.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not object to the bill, but only to the unlimited time.

Mr. GAMBLE. There is no unlimited time. All the payments must be made within five years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WARREN E. DAY.

The bill (S. 4033) for the relief of Warren E. Day was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Warren E. Day $1,200 for professional services rendered and medicine furnished the Hualapai Indians in Arizona Territory under the orders and approval of the Commissioner of Indian

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I see on the calendar, under the head of resolutions over under the rule, a resolution (S. Res. 58) directing that there be printed as a public document the testimony taken by the Illinois Senate in the case of the junior Senator [Mr. Lorimer]. It was introduced by me. It is ancient history, the occasion has passed, and I should like unanimous consent to take up the resolution and have it indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be indefinitely postponed. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROPOSED PROGRAM OF LEGISLATION.

Mr. GALLINGER. Preceding that resolution is a resolution (S. Res. 41) by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands] declaring what measures ought to be considered by Congress dur-ing the "present extra session." I make the same motion— that it be taken from the calendar and indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that order is entered.

GENERAL ARBITRATION TREATIES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to ask that the title of the amendment which I proposed last Thursday be corrected. As printed it indicates that the Senator from New York [Mr. Root] offered an amendment to his own resolution, and I make the correction in order that he may be relieved of that. reads, "Proposed amendment to the resolution of ratification presented by Mr. Root." It should read, "Amendment proposed presented by Mr. Root." by Mr. SMITH of Georgia to the resolution of ratification presented by Mr. Root."

I ask leave that the amendment with this correction be reprinted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will be done.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, January 22, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, give us the larger vision, the broader fields of endeavor, the finer sense of justice, abroad in the land, involved in the brotherhood of mankind, and help us to realize that no commercial enterprise, no legislative enactment, no philanthropic movement, no religious endeavor can fully succeed which is not based upon the broad principles of fatherhood and brotherhood. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 20, 1912, was read and approved.

EXPENDITURES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report (H. Rept. 249) from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, on the Dr. Wiley investigation, and ask to have it printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] presents a privileged report and asks that it be printed. The Clerk will read the heading of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Moss of Indiana, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, submitted the following report—

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will state it. Mr. MANN. Does the Chair hold that this is a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] states that it is. The Chair has not passed on the question,

Mr. MANN. I do not think it makes any difference. I have no objection; but I do not think it is privileged.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then the Chair will not pass on that question until he has an opportunity to investigate it. If there be no objection, the report will be printed and will go to the House Calendar.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 14944. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Connecticut River, in the State of Connecticut, between the towns of East Haddam and Haddam.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL:

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 17681) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this is the day set apart under the rules for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. That committee is given two Mondays in each month. In this month there are five Mondays. I have no objection to the Committee on Appropriations going ahead now with its bill provided the District Committee may have next Monday to transact its business, so that it will at least have two Mondays in the month.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17681, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and pending that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson], chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, asks unanimous consent that next Monday, the fifth Monday in January, be set apart as District day instead of to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. Burleson was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. Garrett in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the enforcement of the provisions of an act to provide for the drainage of lots in the District of Columbia, approved May 19, 1896, and an act to provide for the abatement of nulsances in the District of Columbia by the Commissioners of said District, and for other purposes, approved April 14, 1906, $1,000.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to a statement made at the close of the session on Saturday in regard to the governor of California having vetoed a bill making appropriations to assist in exterminating the rodents in California infested with fleas which are calculated to communicate the bubonic plague. I am not advised whether the governor vetoed such a bill as that or not, but if he did, in my opinion he was amply justified in doing so, because the act of March 13, 1909, of the State of California fully provides for this matter.

That act makes it the duty of individuals and corporations owning or controlling any land in the State of California to exterminate, at their own expense, the squirrels, gophers, rats, and other rodents that could by any possibility harbor any fleas infected with bubonic plague. If they fail to do so, it is made the duty of the State board of health to go on the premises and exterminate them and charge up the cost thereof to the counties and the cities in which the land is located.

By this act it is made the duty of the board of supervisors of the several counties and the governing boards of the cities and municipalities to spend any money that may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the act. In accordance with that act the municipalities of California and the various counties have for some time been spending large sums of money, in addition to the sums spent by individuals, to destroy the rodents in the State of California. I have here in my hand correspondence from the board of supervisors of the smallest county in my district—the county of San Benito—which shows that that county has been spending large sums of money in their campaign against squirrels and gophers. This communication asks that the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture may cooperate with the people of San Benito County in order to destroy the gophers and ground squirrels that infest this county. A very large percentage of the surface of that county is owned by the United States, and this public land is infested with ground squirrels, and the futility is pointed out of expending more money unless it is seconded by the action of the Government in stamping out these rodents on the public land.

In my own city, San Jose, whatever money has been necessary has already been spent by the city to rid the city of rodents. The people of my county have spent tens of thousands of dollars in this campaign, and I think the county is nearly free from ground squirrels.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the gentleman any definite statement as to the amount expended by any county?

Mr. HAYES. Such a statement could not be compiled accurately, but perhaps I can state for the gentleman's information that to my certain knowledge the total must be hundreds of thousands of dollars. That campaign is still in progress, and I hope the gentleman's desire for economy, in which I heartlly sympathize, will not carry him so far as to prevent the United States from doing its part in helping the State rid itself of these rodents.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The United States has done its part; it has spent $1,000,000, and it has an organization there now that is costing $23,000 a month. My statement on Saturday with reference to the matter was due to the fact that the governor of the gentleman's State had vetoed a bill that appropriated less than $100,000 to enable the State to cooperate with the Government.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman perhaps was not in the House when I stated that there are ample laws on the statute books of California for this purpose now. I am not advised why the governor vetoed such a bill. If he did he is, in my opinion, amply justified, because the law of March 13, 1909, provided fully for the participation of the State, municipalities, and citizens in this campaign, and not only provided for it but makes it their duty to do so, and failure to do it a public nuisance; it makes it the duty of the State board of health to go upon the lands that are infested and exterminate the rodents and charge it up to the city or the county in which it is necessary to do it.

Now this campaign is going on everywhere in the State where there are any rodents that may possibly be infected, and it is intended that it shall go on in the future to a finish. I think it is but fair, as already stated by my colleague [Mr. Kahn], that the United States should continue to bear its share of the burden. Because the State of California happens to be on the western rim of the continent, and because the policing has to be done in that State to protect not California alone but the whole country from the invasion of bubonic plague, I see no reason why the people of California should bear the whole burden.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Will the gentleman yield for a statement? Mr. HAYES. In just a moment. I have here correspondence on this subject not only from the county of San Benito but from the county of San Luis Obispo.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Many of the farmers in the counties have voluntarily paid so much per acre as being the amount requested by the Government of the United States for this cooperative work. In my own county, for instance, all the farmers voluntarily paid the amount per acre which was requested by the Government officials, and that fund has been collected for cooperative work. As a landowner I have paid my share of the amount which the Government of the United States requested I should contribute for the cooperative work. That has been done in almost all the counties in my district.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, in my section of the State that is true of every county, and I myself have paid the necessary money to rid my premises of the rodents, and have helped to rid the surrounding country of them. There is in California the most loyal support of Dr. Blue in his work to rid the coast of these rodents, and there will continue to be that loyalty, and the people are not sparing their money. They are not niggardly in the expenditure of it in order to accomplish this result. We only desire that the United States shall do its fair share in this matter. It has been done largely under the leadership of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service; but the people have cooperated, and are ready and anxious to cooperate, and I am sure that I speak for the whole State when I say that they will spend any money that is necessary. If the Government of the United States thinks it is too poor to clear its public lands of these rodents and to do its share in this matter, then I am satisfied that the people of the State of California will do it for them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly the Government of the United States has not been derelict in doing its duty. It is not only doing the work on the public lands, but it did the work in the city of San Francisco and in other places, which properly belonged to the State of California. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted] or myself had come to the Congress and asked for help to get rid of an epidemic of cholera or other disease in Philadelphia or New York, we would have been laughed off the floor of the House.

Mr. HAYES. I want to suggest that the gentleman is correct in saying the United States has done its share in the city of San Francisco and in the other coast towns, but he is not right in saying that the United States has done its share in ridding the public lands of these pests. I have corresponded with the Secretary of the Interior and with the Secretary of Agriculture in regard to this matter, and have had their pledge that they will cooperate and do anything in their power to assist the people of California in stamping out these rodents, and I hope that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald]—and I have no doubt he will when he understands the matter-will give his assent to the General Government doing its share. I merely bring this up so that there may be no misapprehension or any thought left in the mind of anyone that the people of California or the governor of California have been remiss in their duty in this matter. They have not. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary expenses of inspection of dairy farms, including amounts that may be allowed the health officer and assistant health officer, medical inspector in charge of contagious-disease service, and inspectors assigned to the inspection of dairy farms, for the maintenance by each of a horse and vehicle, or motor vehicle, for use in the discharge of his official duties, not to exceed $240 per annum, and other necessary traveling expenses, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 69, line 1, after the word "duties," strike out the words "not to exceed $240 per annum" and insert the words "not to exceed $30 per month."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the committee that this reduction is made because for similar service the law fixes a limitation upon the amount that should be furnished riding policemen. The law fixes the limit of $240 per annum. The committee went into the matter at some length and ascertained that it cost approximately $15 a month to maintain a horse. I have it from one of the policemen who has heretofore been allowed an amount in excess of what was allowed by law, that he maintained his horse and vehicle for about $180 a year. The law in the police department fixes a limit of $240, which should be allowed for this service. In view of those facts, we reached the conclusion that there was no reason why we should discriminate in favor of the dairy and food inspectors and allow them just twice what the service actually cost and $120 a year in addition to what is allowed by the law for the police service. For that reason your committee made this reduction.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the law up to this time has allowed $30 a month for this service. My amendment applies more especially to the keeping of the animal in the country by the veterinary surgeon.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman is mistaken about that. have been appropriating for the last few years in appropriation bills not to exceed $30 a month for this particular service, but the law does not fix any limitation upon the amount as far as dairy inspectors are concerned, but does fix a limit in the police department, namely, that they shall not be paid to exceed $240.

Mr. CARLIN. Is that for the care of the horse?

Mr. BURLESON. The care of the horse and the vehicle also. We went into the matter and I have information that it costs only about $15 a month to maintain this service, and for that reason we proposed to give just what is actually required and $120 in excess of what the law allows in another department for similar service.

Mr. CARLIN. I do not think that a horse can be kept for $15 a month in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. I had information from one of the police officers, which has also been reduced-

Mr. CARLIN. I thought I had a letter in my pocket which I had received from a gentleman who is a raiser and breeder of horses and feeds a great many of them, and he advises me that a horse can not be maintained at $20 a month at the Now, for that reason I offered the present cost of feed. amendment

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It costs $10 to actually feed them.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask the gentleman a question? And that is, the gentleman's opinion of the cost of keeping a human being in the District.

Mr. CARLIN. Well, that depends largely on the habits of the human being.

Mr. SIMS. I am talking about the necessaries of life. Mr. CARLIN. Those things are not as reasonable as they used to be; a human being certainly can not be kept for $20.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman think it exceeds $20 for the laboring people of the District-I mean those who earn their living by manual labor.

Mr. CARLIN. Yes; I do not think you can get a good, comfortable living in Washington for $20 a month.

Mr. SIMS. Men, women, and children, all taken together.

Mr. CARLIN. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not a fact they are receiving less than that?

Mr. CARLIN. Less than $20?

Mr. SIMS. Women, children, and all.

Mr. CARLIN. I hope not.

Mr. SIMS. Among the laboring classes? Mr. CARLIN. I hope not.

Mr. SIMS. But you have not the information?
Mr. CARLIN. I have not the information the gentleman desires. I do not believe it is possible to do it.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman knows women who are employed as cooks get from $15 to $25 a month as a rule, and have as cooks get from $15 to $25 a month as a rdie, and nave usually to furnish their own room and often some other person is dependent upon them. Now, it seems to me that if those who cook in this District can live on $15 to $25 a month and provide themselves with clothing, and so forth, horses certainly ought to get along on $20 a month. I may be mistaken about it.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman thoroughly understands that a horse can not hire himself out as a cook and he is dependent upon some one else to maintain him, provide his feed, and so forth, and it is a matter-Mr. SIMS. I am in favor of taking care of the horses, but I believe $20 a month is about the average that the wage earner of the District gets, taking into consideration the per capita of those depending on him. Mr. CARLIN. As I say, I offered the amendment to take the sense of the House. I think they ought to be paid more than $20 a month.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance, including personal services, of the public crematory, $1,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I believe there is no estimate this year for an appropriation to exterminate the rats.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. They did not use the appropriation of last year.

Mr. BURLESON. I apprehend it will never be used unless occasion-

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman whether he does not think it advisable to have that appropriation in case a contingency should arise so as to require the use of it?

Mr. BURLESON. Undoubtedly it would be advisable if the contingency arose which would render it necessary, but I will state to the gentleman that they did not use the appropriation carried in last year's bill and did not ask for an appropriation for this year, and consequently-

Mr, MANN. I understand. I think they did not appreciate the danger to which I alluded on Saturday.

Mr. BURLESON. Well, the $500 as he knows, is still avail-

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.
Mr. BURLESON. It is carried in last year's bill and will be available for the fiscal year 1912 and the fiscal year will not expire until June 30.

Mr. MANN. It is available until the 30th of June?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes. Mr. MANN. Now, my information is, I can not say anything more about it, but the authorities very much fear an outbreak of bubonic plague from the Atlantic side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman think, if there is any very great danger in that respect, the information would have been given to the committee?

Mr. MANN. I do not suppose the District authorities know anything about it, and I doubt if the others will advertise it to any extent. I do not think it is anything that ought to be

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was something in the papers a few days ago to the effect that the champion rat killer of the United States had arrived in town and is working in the public buildings. I think he is to clear up the Capitol.

Mr. MANN. I think that gentleman is engaged now in cleaning rats and rodents and other vermin out of the Capitol and other buildings in town.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the appropriation in this bill will not be available except for the District officials.

Mr. MANN. I understand that. It is not very much. probably will not cost anything unless there is occasion for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If there is any real necessity for it, think there will be ample time for us to take care of it in the proper way.

Mr. MANN. My own impression is that we will likely be here for the next two years; but, then, we might not.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that I am just as anxious to destroy rats as he can possibly be, and especially am I anxious to provide against this horrible and loathsome disease which he has in mind. But the District Commissioners did not estimate for this amount. They did not expend the amount that is now available for the purpose, and I do not think we ought to carry it in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Of course, there is no occasion to spend the amount, as I understand it, and probably would not be. That was really a contingent appropriation as a contingent expense.

Mr. BURLESON. I will call the gentleman's attention, furthermore, to the fact that we have an emergency fund, carried in this bill, of $8,000, to provide against contagious diseases, and that fund would be available for that purpose if it was necessary that it should be used.

Mr. MANN. The emergency fund is the one that we were discussing on Saturday. That is reduced from what it was

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that he is mistaken about the emergency fund, which we have not reached in the bill, of $8,000 to prevent the spread of contagious diseases, and every dollar of that fund would be available; and, furthermore, in the event that a great emergency should arise, I am inclined to believe that Congress would be in session for the purpose of grappling with the situation.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Is it not a fact that this emergency fund of $8,000 is spent each year for suppressing contagious diseases?

Mr. BURLESON. On the contrary, it is very rarely that the fund is expended. In fact, frequently only a small part of it is expended. For four or five years the District was comparatively free from contagious diseases and only a small part was expended.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. What was this emergency fund that was appropriated for in the deficiency bill?

Mr. BURLESON. That particular year the emergency fund was exhausted, as we stated here the other day, in connection with the leper that was here in the District.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman willing to have the emergency fund $10,000?

Mr. BURLESON. It is $8,000, which has been ample. went back over a series of years and reached the conclusion that $5,000 was more than ample to meet the situation. In fact, it has been a long time, and only in the one exceptional period in the history of the District, when this fund was entirely exhausted

Mr. MANN. Of course it ought to be more than is usually

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes; I think it is very important that it should be.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not think there is any necessity for it at this particular time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous: For compensation of jurors, $1,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in one place here the allowance for meals of jurors was fixed at a very small sum, and now the compensation is proposed to be reduced.

Mr. BURLESON. I would state to the gentleman that in the matter of feeding the jurors we reduced that item to $25, was it not?

Mr. MANN. Yes.
Mr. BURLESON. We have not reached the item for meals in the bill. I will state to the gentleman, however, that for the year 1909, of the $100 appropriated, only $8.40 was used. 1910, of the $100 appropriated, only $8.40 was used; and in 1911, of the $100 appropriated, only $8.40 was used. We have 1911, of the $100 appropriated, only $8.40 was used. therefore reduced the amount, leaving it, however, three times as much as they have expended at any time in the past three years. That reduction, I know, will appeal to the gentleman.

Now, in connection with this particular item for compensation of jurors we reported $720 for the years 1909, 1910, and 1911. In the year 1909 only $520 was expended. In 1910 only $588 was expended, and in 1911, $570 was expended of this sum. We reached the conclusion that it was bad administration constantly to carry an amount largely in excess of what was being used, and accordingly we made the reduction.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember that a few years ago we were called upon to appropriate, and did appropriate, quite a large sum of money to cover the expenses of the trial of some western land cases where a contingency arose. I suppose these appropriations that are usually larger than are necessary have been made because no one could tell what contingency might arise, and there is no way of spending the money unless there is occasion for it.

Mr. BURLESON. That is true. The gentleman understands that this is for the fees of jurors in the juvenile court?

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. BURLESON. It is rather a standard charge in the District, and we find that at no period of time in the last three years was there a demand upon this fund such as to justify the appropriation we were carrying in the bill. It was the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Appropriations that the policy of appropriating sums of money largely in excess of what was needed would probably lead to bad administration, and for that reason we tried to keep these fees down so as to indicate to those chargeable with the responsibility of expending these funds that the Committee on Appropriations had its hand upon the item and was fully aware of what was being done in the way of expending the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I concede the fact that the appropriation of large sums of money more than is necessary may lead to bad administration ordinarily, but that is not possible so far as fees of jurors are concerned. There is no question of administration involved there. I suppose that the limitation that the gentleman seeks to put on this bill elsewhere about the proportionate expenses per month that are permitted would not apply to jurors' expenses, or would it?

Mr. BURLESON. Not to an item of this character, because it would be a legitimate deficiency. I think we were justified, in view of the statement from the auditor that these funds for three years past had not been used, in cutting the amount of the item just as we have cut it. We still leave more than a sufficient fund to meet the necessities of this particular service.

Mr. MANN. And as to the other item that has not yet been reached, where you cut the fees of jurors from $10,000 to $7,000, what were the figures of expenditures on that:

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman will delay until we reach that item, I will give him a full statement of the facts in connection with that expenditure.

Mr. MANN. I thought possibly the gentleman had it there. Mr. BURLESON. No; I do not have it before me at this

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel, ice, gas, and laundry work, stationery, printing, law books, books of reference, periodicals, typewriter and repairs thereto, binding and rebinding, preservation of records, mops, brooms, and buckets, removal of ashes and refuse, telephone service, traveling expenses, and other incidental expenses not otherwise provided for, $1,000; in all, $2,440

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As to the item of traveling expenses, I can see no reason for traveling expenses unless it is for the transportation of juveniles to certain quarters where they belong. For that reason I ask the chairman of the subcommittee what the item is intended to cover.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that a few years ago, at the instance of those in charge of the administra-tion of this particular fund, we embodied this item of traveling expenses in the appropriation, so as to justify the payment of a certain sum to defray traveling expenses. That was to meet this situation: It was discovered that frequently the District could relieve itself of responsibility for the care of certain indigent persons, juveniles or younger persons charged with minor offenses, by ascertaining where they came from and having them transported back to the jurisdiction that was properly chargeable with their support. As a matter of fact this item has resulted in relieving the District of the expenditure of a considerable sum of money.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman mean by that that if a juvenile coming from the State of Virginia is found in the District of Columbia, that juvenile may be properly apprehended and sent back to the State of Virginia?

Mr. BURLESON. That is true in a number of cases, where the juvenile has probably run away and wandered into the District. It has been found that we could relieve the District of the care of that person by having him transferred back to the jurisdiction from which he came.

Mr. FOWLER. And pay his traveling expenses out of this

Mr. BURLESON. Defray the expenses of transporting him there. It is much cheaper.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. To send him home, rather than leave him to be a charge against the District.

BURLESON. It is cheaper to send him to the place where he belongs, than to let him remain here and become a charge upon the District.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman means by that that it is cheaper for the District to handle him in that way than it is to keep him here?

That is it. Mr. BURLESON.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn and the clerk will

The Clerk read as follows:

INTEREST AND SINKING FUND.

For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt. $975.408.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on this section of the bill, and I wish to discuss it a I regard this as one of the very important items in the bill. In fact, I think there is no one item that is more important than this. It has been carried along in the appropriation bill for a number of years. However, when it was first put in the appropriation bill it was inserted with the form of the statute of 1879 upon the subject. Since that time they have ceased to use the statute with this form, but have used somebody's conclusion as to what the statute meant, and have inserted that conclusion in the appropriation bill instead of the act itself.

Before going further into that particular subject, I wish to devote a little time, not to a criticism, but to a review of some of the rulings which the Chairman of this committee has made.

A ruling by the Chair to the effect that an appropriation made out of public moneys for the purpose of resurfacing streets with asphalt can be diverted from the purpose for which it was appropriated and used to build brick paving for the street car companies; and another ruling to the effect that an appropriation made for the public schools, with which to equip publicschool playgrounds, can be diverted from that purpose and spent upon any other playgrounds-parochial, sectarian, or otherwise-do not inspire one to further points of order.

Because the street car companies desire the District authorities to construct that part of the streets which, under the law, the street car companies must build and maintain is no reason why the District authorities should want to go into the streetbuilding business for the street railroads. The District officials should, in my opinion, confine themselves to the task of caring for their part of the work; and, instead of becoming contractors for the railroads, should notify the railroad companies that they themselves must do it. The railroads might not care for a small fine, but if they did not comply with the law their franchises would be forfeited. These franchises were secured at too little an expense, and are now so valuable an asset that not the remotest risk will be assumed which might endanger their forfeiture.

I am conscious of the fact that no one who will read the RECORD containing the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole House while this bill has been under consideration can arrive at the honest and intelligent conclusion that any motion made or any amendment offered by me has had for its purpose the repeal or impairment of a single act of Congress. sought to do that, this is neither the time nor the place for it.

Upon the other hand, I have faithfully endeavored to have the Committee of the Whole House confine itself strictly to the law as it is now upon the statute books. During the remainder of the time this bill is under consideration I shall continue my efforts in that direction.

It will be infinitely better for both the United States and the District of Columbia if a strict interpretation of the law is here adhered to. I do not wish to criticize adversely the decisions of my good friend, the distinguished gentleman who now occupies the chair; but I trust it is not at all distasteful even to him for me to review some of them; to see how this year a too liberal construction given to a law leads next year to another too liberal construction until, in a few years, the original law is lost sight of and the accumulated, unwarranted constructions theretofore given become the accepted law.

The Chair has held that under existing law an appropriation can be made from the Public Treasury for equipping publicschool playgrounds. Whether or not the law warrants that is not at issue, for the reason that no point was raised as to that. But a point was raised as to whether or not the Public Treasury be invaded for the purpose of equipping other playgrounds; and the Chair has held that an appropriation of the money could be put into the hands of the District authorities with no limitation upon it other than an expressed belief upon his part that those with whom it would be intrusted would not go beyond proper limits in expending it.

If this policy should be generally pursued, there would be no need for a single official bond in the entire Union; in fact, if we are to presume that only the proper and just act is always to be done, there would be no need for laws, no need for courts, no need for this legislature. The law relative to the schools of the District of Columbia not only contemplates, but says so in so many words, that only the public schools are to be cared for at public expense. If, as the Chair has ruled, the public money can legally be spent for playgrounds other than the publicschool playgrounds, if the officials into whose hands the money to be expended has been put think so, then all limitation is re If the public money can be spent by District officials upon any playgrounds which they select, then let us see where If this expenditure may legally go beyond the public school, then it can go to the sectarian school; next it may go to the private school; next it may go to the public playgroundand just here I wish to call attention to the playground item. That item does not limit the public fund to equipping the publicschool playgrounds; neither does it limit it even to school grounds. Under the decision of the Chair the District officials into whose hands this money is put, if they wish to do so, can expend any part or all of it upon any playgrounds. Then, if they wish to do so, they can spend it upon grounds other than those generally accepted as playgrounds for school children; and, from all I can learn, they contemplate expending it upon grounds other than public-school grounds.

When the ground upon which the money is spent is not property legally acquired by the District for the public-school system, then that ground occupies the same legal status as a park The public fund may properly be spent to improve a park publicly owned; but it can not properly be spent upon a park privately owned, except under authority of an act and it requires an act of Congress to Congress: discretion to the District officials which the ruling of the Chair gives them. There is no act of Congress which authorizes the expenditure of public money upon such private park or private grounds as I have mentioned. And, if there is no such act of Congress, then the item in the appropriation bill is clearly subject to a point of order, at least until a limitation of its use is confined to the public schools.

Again, if public money can, in the judgment of District officials, be spent to equip playgrounds, who is to determine what that equipment is to be? Inasmuch as there is no maximum school-age limit in the District the equipment must, of necessity, take a wide range. The official report of the school board discloses their statement that the school children (?)

range in age between 5 years and 66 years.

The equipment of a playground for these would range from rocking horses to crutches. If, under the ruling of the Chair, the District officials can spend Uncle Sam's money for crutches, the crutch must fit the 66-year-old school child who is to use it, else it would be without value in the playgrounds. As arnica and salves are used at public expense in the playgrounds to enable the children to pursue their games, why should not rheumatic remedies also be carried in stock for the 66-year-old children? Jackknives should be furnished in the playgrounds, so that the boys can amuse themselves whittling upon the 300,000 lead pencils recently purchased by the school board. I take it for granted that the 300,000 lead pencils must of necessities and females. sity be for some other purpose than for writing and figuring purposes. That other purpose must be for jackstraws in the playgrounds. If this trainload of pencils were not of suitable size already for jackstraws, hatchets might be supplied instead of jackknives. However, hatchets should be furnished the school children, anyway. They could get abundant amuse-ment out of breaking up and making mumble pegs out of the $3,000 worth of good school furniture which was thrown out of the schoolhouses to make room for new furniture, which was shy on specifications-so the papers said, and the papers are always right.

Then, Mr. Chairman, your ruling on this question leads to other equipment for the playgrounds. The school board report also contains the information that one of the colored teachers takes her "kindergartents" around to Corcoran Art Gallery once a week and there entertains these little 5-year-old tots by pointing out to them the artistic and masterly features of the greatest collection of paintings in this whole country. Uncle Sam pays in salaries, houses, and grounds one-half of an aver--year in and year out-of about $4,000,000. Mr. Chairman, just so soon as your Uncle Sam can spare the money your ruling should be brought into service, and the Corcoran Art Gallery purchased as a playground for the colored "kindergartents" of the District. [Laughter.] Kentucky, my native State, will erect a monument to my memory for having made a point of order which brought forth a ruling which establishes a precedent upon which Kentucky taxpayers may have the pleasure of sending one of these little colored tots of artistic temperament to the Old World to gather up for the Washington playgrounds all the bogus pieces of the masters which J. Pierpont Morgan did not have unloaded upon him. [Laughter.]

While Kentucky would thus honor me, Mr. Chairman, for having done nothing more than unwillingly made the opportunity for such a chance to spend the public money, marble shaft and fulsome epitaph for you, Mr. Chairman, who established the precedent, would be but mockery of the honors which Tennessee would confer upon you for giving her, Kentucky's sister State, an opportunity to pour the money of her people into such a glorious work.

Again, Mr. Chairman, the printed report of the school board for this city brings the delightful information that the people's money is spent to teach the young men and young ladiesand white, from 6 years to 66 years-to "trip the light fantas-

By all means the playground, paid for by your constituent and mine, should be equipped with a ballroom having gilded wall and waxen floors, that these ladies and gentlemen-colored and otherwise-may, in swallowtail coats and kid gloves, sleeveless and bosomless gowns, instruct the disciples of the lowly Nazarene who are teaching from the pulpit that the sensual embrace of the round dance leads directly, in the great hereafter, to the certain attainment of that for which He bowed His head and died upon the cross.

Let us, Mr. Chairman, that our earthly fame may be more lasting, and that our glorious hereafter may be rewarded with a halo as big as a horse collar, go back to those school items, deprive the common herd of taxpayers, with bended backs, crooked fingers, and bleeding palms, from participation in the erection of this dancing tabernacle, and give all the glory to the men of God in Tennessee, and let them pay for it.

[Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman ,in another of the school-board reports I find that one of the colored school-teachers describes the splendid shower baths which have been erected in his school; asks now, in simple justice to the District of Columbia, that a swimming pool be put in at public expense. But that is of no moment to either Kentucky or Tennessee or the other States; all they have to do with it is to pay for it.

Then another colored teacher, so the report says, wants a greenhouse erected and maintained at public expense, in connection with his school.

Mr. Chairman, why should he not have it? In this climate the flowers bloom only in the spring, and that is entirely too seldom for this gentleman of ginger-cake hue. Where you and I reside the chrysanthemum has hardly faded until the lilac blooms, and almost immediately after that the Marechal Niel, which has remained green from fall to spring, blossoms into beauty and fragrance, puts out its tiny arms, and renews its kindly and annual embrace of our humble cottages which stand upon the sites where 50 years ago spacious colonial homes were the pride of Dixie land.

Mr. Chairman, this school-teacher and the children in his school are referred to in the report of the board of education as yet bearing inherited marks from cruel burdens placed upon their parents by heartless taskmasters of the South.

Mr. Chairman, it costs the taxpayers of the Union only a few millions of dollars a year to keep up this teaching of race hatred in the District public schools. Now, why not, in the name of all that is good for the Union, should he who is inculcating these ideas into the youth of his color not have a greenhouse at public expense? [Laughter.]

Under the precedent which you, Mr. Chairman, have just establish, playgrounds may be equipped wherever the District officials may, in the exercise of their official functions, deem best; and as these equipments are within the scope of their selection, would it not be well to increase the appropriation and erect an "Uncle Tom's Cabin"?

Not only is music taught in the Washington schools, but these self-playing pianos—pianolas I believe they call them—are put in and paid for by your and my accordian constituents. Those instruments are not there for instruction, because it requires no more teaching to play one of those mechanical instruments than it does to turn a grinding organ. Under this new precedent that District officials can equip anybody's playgrounds, and can equip them with such games and amusements as they choose, why not send these pianolas from the schoolhouses to the school playgrounds?

Mr. Chairman, I am not afraid to make a small wager that Bob Taylor paid for the instrument upon which he learned to charm and thrill the souls of the music-loving men and women of this country; but if he wishes to hang his fiddle and bow upon the wall, never to take them down again, and take lessons upon the pianola or the grinding organ, he is still within the school age of the District of Columbia. [Laughter.]

However, I am not quite sure that I will not make a point of order against Senator Taylor taking lessons on the grinding organ at the expense of the American citizen. If that concession is made to him he may next demand to take lessons in the public school with the bear and the drum. The grinding organ and the bear and the drum must, by all means be reserved for the many foreign born who are in Washington, declining our citizenship, refusing to pay taxes, hoarding our money to be sent back to a foreign land, while all the time their children are receiving the advantages of free tuition, free books, free scientific instruments, and hot lunches in the schoolhouse. When the desirable ones of these become citizens with us, take upon themselves an oath to support the Constitution and "Old Glory," help support the Government, then, Mr. Chairman. I am willing for them to go into our tax-supported playgrounds and receive the long, tedious, and difficult instructions from our accomplished teachers upon the grinding organ; then they should be permitted to play with our Teddy bear and beat our tom-tom, but not until then.

Mr. Chairman, under the "tight-wad" public-school system which the American Congress imposes upon the District of Columbia the pupils have cooking schools. The teachers give the public money to little children, send them into the market, and have them taught how to buy. These stall keepers in these markets who teach them do not, I imagine, charge too little for the teaching.

When they have had this lesson in buying they take, or have sent, to the school that which the stall keeper has taught them to buy; then it is served in five and six course "festibles." recently saw one of these menu cards. It had ice cream on it. asked the principal of the school-he was a colored manwhether the children made the ice cream or bought it. He said they bought it already frozen, but he could not tell me how much teaching it required to have the children and their invited guests to learn how to eat it. But, Mr. Chairman, that is of but little interest to your constituents or mine. All they have to do is work hard 16 hours out of the 24 to get the money with which to pay for it all.

Then, in the public schools here in Washington, they have sewing schools. The Government furnishes them with the material which they use in the sewing lessons. They make aprons, and so forth, and then, after they are made, they are made; the same garment can not be made any more, so they just let the girl take it home with her.

Then, they teach millinery in the public schools here. The Government buys untrimmed hat frames, also material with which to trim them. The teacher gives instructions how to trim the hats. When a girl has trimmed one to suit her new dress, it is trimmed; it can not be trimmed any more; it is useless to the Government, so the girl is permitted just to run along home with it.

Then, so a printed report of the school board says, if she wants to trim another she does so. If, after it is trimmed, it is trimmed, it is of no use to Uncle Sam; he does not wear that kind of headgear, and the girl is told just to run along home with it and give it to one of the family.

Mr. Chairman, your constituents and mine do not care anything about that; all they have to do with the matter is to plow corn, pick cotton, and hoe tobacco, so they can get the money with which to pay for all this.

There are a lot of other things done in the Washington schools with which the people back in the States have nothing to do, except pay the bills.

I recently came across an item furnishing automobiles for some of the school fraternity. The poorly paid school-teachers back in the States do not care anything about this. All they have to do with it is to be taxed upon their own small salaries to help buy those automobiles for the Washington schoolteachers.

If a janitor of a school is caught hauling off coal covered up with ashes from the school he may be reprimanded, but he does not fail to have his confederate put in a bill for hauling the ashes away; but the taxpayer back in the States does not care, all he has to do with it is to buy the coal and pay for hauling the ashes.

The ashes are hauled away free from every man's back yard in Washington. But the taxpayer back in the States has nothing to do with that; all he has to do is to pay for the hauling.

A number of dentists are employed to do dental work for nearly 60,000 school children in Washington, these children ranging in age from 6 years to 66 years-some of them unnaturalized foreigners.

But the people back in Kentucky and Tennessee have nothing to do with this but pay one-half of the bills.

The school children—these children ranging in age from 6 years to 66 years—have physicians, paid out of the public funds, to treat them. But the people of the United States have nothing to do with this matter but to pay one-half of the bills.

These same school children have trained nurses to wait upon them when ill. But that is of no concern to the people in the different States; all they have to do with it is to pay dentists, physicians, nurses, and employ teachers for their own children, and then pay one-half of that cost for nearly 60,000 enrolled children—children black, children white, children of the American citizen, children of the foreigner who disdains our flag, children 6 years old, children 66 years old. But the merchant, the farmer, the laborer, the school child, the school-teacher back in the States has nothing to do with this except pay one-half of great howl goes up in Washington against the committee which would not this year build two new schoolhouses at a cost of $1,250,000.

The poor man in the different States in the Union buys schoolbooks for his own children, and then contributes toward the purchase of the schoolbooks for the children of the millionaire in Washington.

And I am an incompetent in their eyes because I stand between the people in an effort to stop raids upon the Public Because I object to giving away real estate owned by the United States, I am narrow. Because I object to having the Government go into the construction business for the street car companies, instead of sticking to governmental functions, I am wrong. Because I object to seeing one gang of men laying streets, followed in a short time by another gang tearing them up, I am not progressive. Because I object to seeing men here take advantage of the necessities of those who are in distress and compel the unfortunate to pay from 36 per cent to 250 per cent interest on borrowed money, then I am interfering with contracts. Because I wish the homeless renter should be permitted to pay as small a rate of taxation upon his little effects in the rented house as his landlord pays upon the house in which the tenant lives, then I am an anarchist. The owner of the house pays a dollar and a half rate on a two-thirds valuation. This makes his rate a dollar a hundred on a real valuation. The tenant pays a dollar and a half a hundred on a full valuation upon his personal property.

In order to do justice to all, one should be lowered or the other should be raised. I care not which it is, so that the city will have sufficient revenue. Intangible personal property is not taxed at all.

I did not raise a point of order in the bill against the one, single, solitary item for which it was provided that the District should pay wholly out of her own revenues, and I shall not.

The District should be permitted to spend her own money as she pleases, but it is the duty of every Member in this body to see to it that the money given by the Federal Government to the District is not thrown away.

I would not object to see the District have her own lawmaking body, elected by the people of the District, and I would be glad to see the District have the privilege to expend her own money just as the people of the District wish to spend it. I, above all others whom I have heard express themselves upon the subject, am in favor of a democratic local self-government in the District.

When the District comes to levy her own taxes, marshal her own assets, expend, untrammeled by Congress, her own taxes, then she will appreciate a responsibility which will encourage Congress to help her with a generous hand.

spirit of wastefulness will stop Congress quicker than anything else in a desire to aid the District.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have heard all these years that whatever the District of Columbia wanted of the United States it got. The language just used by me, I believe, shows that to be conclusive. I never quite understood how it all came about, but the Washington Post of August 28, 1911, had this to say:

The drift of the well-to-do and influential element toward this city could take no better turn than we see in the increased number of congressional homes. Once they become interested it is noticeable that Members undergo a change of heart that bodes no ill for the municipality. Evidently they come to see what Washington really needs.

Mr. Chairman, I saw in the Washington Evening Star of Friday, January 12, 1912, an article which, in speaking of the Government's contribution to the District of Columbia, says:

Government's contribution to the District of Columbia, says:

In its restrictive treatment by the House from year to year in the matter of appropriations the District presents the figure of a growing youth denied clothing adapted to his frame. Thus the House would hand the capital municipality a suit this year of the same size as last year or even smaller. With wrists protruding from the coat cuffs, with knees exposed by upstretching knickerbockers, with waistcoat failing to make connection with the lower part of the costume, with coat tightly stretched across an expanding chest and straining at buttons, the developing District presents a sorry figure after it has been fitted out by the House Appropriations Committee according to the measurements and style laid down by the latest bill to come from that body. The tendency of such a policy is to subject the municipality to ridicule.

Mr. Chairman, I have seen that how. I mee him on the high-

Mr. Chairman, I have seen that boy. I met him on the highway not long ago. Before I saw him I met a woman in the road. She came running down the road in haste, looking back, first over one shoulder and then over the other, as if danger followed. She did not ask any protection from me, however. She seemed in no apparent danger. I asked her no question, When I turned a curve in the road I met and she fled along. a great big, fat, chubby boy, 16 or 17 years old, with curls hanging down his back, the perspiration rolling down his face; and up the road he came running. When I met him he stopped me and said, "Mister, did you meet a woman up the road just ahead of me?" I said I did. He said, "Was she dressed in a black suit of clothes, with a black bonnet and a big black plume in her hat?" I said, "Yes; that is the woman I met, and she was running." He said, "Well, I want to catch her. Will you Will you let me have your horse and buggy that I may catch her?" I said, "I do not know about that. First, tell me what you want with her?" He then said, "That is my mamma, and she is trying to wean me, and I swear I do not intend to let her do it." [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, take this boy, which the District of Columbia says must wear short breeches and an ill-fitting coat, and compare him to your Uncle Sam, and then what does the picture present? No clothes at all will fit him. If a suit, perchance, had been made at some time or other where the trousers were for a one-legged man, and the one-legged man were willing to have the trousers made in that way, then they might fit your Uncle Sam, because one of his legs has been pulled so long by the District of Columbia that there is no use for but one leg in those trousers. [Laughter.] What kind of a hat must your Uncle Sam have? They say that this boy must have the most modern hat, no matter what it costs, no matter where the money is to come from.

Yet your Uncle Sam has been wearing the same hat since he commenced pouring public money into this bottomless pit, from which no dollar ever returns. Take his coat. It has been tattered and torn during all this time, and he has had but one suit of clothes, while this big, fat, chubby boy, with curly locks, has had a new one every year; and now, when the committee calls a halt they complain because, for the first time since 1874, or as far as that is concerned, for the first time since 1838, when the District of Columbia was bankrupt, he is not to have a new suit of clothes. What has this boy been denied? I say positively nothing. That chubby boy—in other words, the District of Columbia-has been given the last dollar, and then some, to which the law entitles him. Now we come, I say, to where the Federal Government does not ask more than that to which it is entitled under the law; but the time now comes when the Federal Government is asked for that which the District has unlawfully received for long years; when, as a matter of fact, in not one of those years has the District been legally entitled to it.

Mr. Chairman, one of the most appropriate things I ever saw in the language, a thing that was opportune then and is opportune now. I find in an old report.

Mr. SIMS. A report of what?
Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. A report of a congressional committee. The report, in speaking of conditions which then existed, had this to say in speaking of the District government:

existed, had this to say in speaking of the District government:

They have laid their hands upon all the organized forces of the community; they have captured every source of influence, public and private; they have dictated the conduct of the press, controlled the legislature, and manipulated the courts; they have demanded the irresponsible disbursement of the public funds; they have secured the arbitrary appointment of all officials, high and low; they have cultivated congressional committees; they have debauched public servants; they have surrounded the President; they have patronized the rowdy element; they have intimidated the primary assemblages of the people; they have packed political meetings; they have conspired to overthrow political organizations; they have imposed their candidates upon the people and driven voters to their support through threats of starvation; they have suppressed freedom of speech in the District of Columbia and made liberty of political action an offense; they have seduced the wealthy, tyrannized over the poor, ostracized the honest, and persecuted the independent; they have retained the leading members of the bar, subsidized the churches, and schemed for the control of the school and charitable fund; they have sought the power of appointment of judges to be the ministers and have made the police agents of their will; they have organized a militia establishment on the basis of an army corps agents of their will, they have organized basis of an army corps.

This grave indictment, if anywise true of the late governing power of the District, becomes at once a lesson and a prophecy when it is contemplated to vest still broader powers upon the commissioners other than those conferred upon the governor and board of public works.

Mr. Chairman, that is a frightful indictment; but in that indictment a prophecy was made. Has that prophecy been fulfilled? Is it not being fulfilled every day and every hour while we stand here? You hear it said on the streets and you see it in the press that an attempt is going to be made to repeal the half-and-half system. But realizing their enormities, realizing that the Government of the United States has protected this infant industry, the District of Columbia, to the point where the high protective tariff has protected the infant manufactories of this country, namely, to the detriment of the people, they fear and tremble that out of just indignation it may be repealed. They flee when no man pursueth. When they fear its repeal, what is their first step? To the White House There, as predicted 30 years ago, they surround the President of the United States, and when they emerge from the White House they come with smiles upon their faces, saying to themselves and to others, "Do not fear for the half-andhalf plan, because if the American Congress repeals it the President will veto it." The Committee on the Affairs of the District of Columbia has sought to arrive at the condition of the accounts between the District of Columbia and the United States. Are facilities being given to the accountant and to that committee? Let us see. Twice has the Secretary of the Treasury refused even to answer a polite letter from the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia asking that the man who has been in charge of these accounts for nearly 25 years be permitted to go with this accountant and show him the accounts upon the books. Where are those books? Members of Congress know that at the north of the Treasury Building there is a long flight of granite steps.

Back under those steps, covered with the dirt of a third of a century, are the old accounts between the United States Government and the District of Columbia. This accountant, a most competent man-they all admit that he is-has been compelled, and is now driven to the necessity of taking off his clothes down to his undershirt and going back under these nasty, dirty steps, and there taking out books upon which a hand has not been laid for a quarter of a century to seek what he finds. Have the great officers of this country given to the American Congress the right which the American people have, especially when that right is asked in the most polite and dignified terms? If it is denied by any one, he should simply deny it, but not refuse to answer a polite letter, as two of my letters have not been answered by the Secretary of the Treasury. But these accounts will be found. This House has conferred authority upon the Committee on the District of Columbia to go That committee has done so to the fullest extent it could up to the present time; but the power of his House will, say, be called upon, if necessary, to force the production of those books. If these high officials who have them in charge will not lend a helping hand to see whether or not the United States Government, whom they represent, has had and is to have a fair settlement of its accounts between the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia, then I say God help this country. A change is impending. The infant God help this country. A change is impending. manufactories have been protected by a tariff wall so long that the people in the last congressional election arose from ocean to ocean and from the Gulf to the Lakes, and because of that uprising there is a majority upon this side of this House to-day which wishes and which intends to see that the accounts between the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia have been properly kept. [Applause.]
This is but the beginning of another question.

100, I believe they call it here, hang around the Capitol doors and beseech and plead with every man, "For God's sake take care of the National City, in which you own a part." Mr. Chairman, since I have been in Congress I and every other man who has been in Congress have paid enough in exorbitant charges to buy himself a home here which he might call his own, but no matter how much he has paid they will ever call it theirs. Let one of you whose city they say this is offer to take one item of anything without paying two prices for it, and then see whether it is your city or theirs. I say, Mr. Chairman, that is the same condition which arose and caused a public uprising in this land against the trusts, which are but the outgrowth and the offspring of this high protective tariff. Now, there comes and is rising from day to day, not in the Halls of Congress alone, but throughout this land, a cry that money is being taken from the taxpayers in the States and given away here, and then by them wasted, thrown to the winds, in swimming pools, greenhouses, and things like that, which our children in the country never dream of getting. During the last session of Congress, when they had an appropriation bill appropriating sixty odd thousand dollars with which to buy books for the children of this District, I offered an amendment to insert before the word "children the word "indigent." That amendment got practically every Democratic vote, but did not get a single vote on youder side of the House. If our school children have to buy schoolbooks at home, and then have the pennies taken from their pockets to buy schoolbooks for the children of the millionaire here, then I say that if their parents be the right kind of Americans they will not tolerate it longer. But, Mr. Chairman, the prophecy which I read to you but a moment ago shows—I had it in a newspaper clipping here, but I do not find it now. I have it here. In the Washington Times of April 28, 1911, I find these words used by a minister from the pulpit:

Speaking to the citizens of the District-are like a lot of Indians on a reservation, governed by the United States Government and with just as much intelligence as Indians are governed. I have seen legislation passed for the District that has shamed me for my citizenship in the United States.

As forecast nearly 30 years ago, the President has been surrounded, the high officials have been brought in, and now, as then, there seems a suspicion, at least the ministers may have been subsidized by this crowd—to help fasten upon the District of Columbia that condition which we now have. It is of no more importance to me than it is to any other Member on this floor; but I do feel that because of my position on the Committee on the District of Columbia I should call attention to these things.

Mr. Chairman, now we come, as I said in the beginning, to one of the most important items in this whole bill. That item is on page 73, lines 5, 6, 7, and 8, and it says:

INTEREST AND SINKING FUND.

For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, $975,408.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that there is no law, no matter how it may be distorted by sleight-of-hand speakers, that can possibly bring this to mean that this item is in this bill because it has ever been authorized by law. Two items are in it, "Interest and sinking fund," and the caption of your bill says that that shall be paid one-half by the United States and one-half by the District of Columbia. Is that the law? I say, No; that is not the law. If that is not the law, then what is?

We find in the United States Statutes at Large, volume 20, page 105, approved July 11, 1878, this section concerning interest, and that section reads thus:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia, issued in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, when the same shall become due and payable; and all amounts so paid shall be credited as part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia as hereinbefore provided.

In a speech I made on this floor about a week ago I went into that minutely. I trust that what I said then has been read carefully by the chairman, although he heard my speech. I hope that the chairman has studied it.

What do you find in the bill now pending? Do we find an authorization for the payment of one-half of this upon the part of the United States and the other half by the District of Columbia? I say that it is not in the law. But there is in this section, because the District of Columbia then did not have the ready money with which to pay:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed that hereafter he shall pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia as the same shall become due and payable, and all amounts so paid shall be credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District.

Now, there is a plain direction that the Secretary of the Treasury set aside out of the funds belonging to the National Government such a sum as will pay the interest on these bonds when that interest becomes due. Mr. Chairman, can you tell me how much that is? This bill calls for sinking fund and interest, nearly a million dollars. They ask for a specific appropriation; they name the amount, while that amount has been ascertained by no man. The chairman does not know it; I do not know it; no man in the District of Columbia knows it. But we do know this, that out of the nearly $15,000,000 of bonds that were issued of the 3.65 denomination we are now down to about $8,000,000 of them. Who contends that the interest on $8,000,000, at 3.65, is a million dollars? It is nearer $300,000. And yet here is appropriated a specific sum, and here is appropriated a sum that must be determined by but one man on earth, and that man is the Secretary of the Treasury. Has the Secretary of the Treasury fixed this amount? He has not, either directly or indirectly.

I called attention the other day to the fact that when the Secretary of the Treasury sent his Book of Estimates to Congress he neither approved nor disapproved those estimates, although the law requires him to do one or the other. He neither approved nor disapproved, but he sent that Book of Estimates, as the Book of Estimates itself shows, only for the information of the House.

Again, Mr. Chairman, let me ask you how this House can determine the amount of money that is to be advanced by the United States Treasury and paid as interest on those bonds. frankly admit that the United States Government has agreed to advance the interest on those bonds, and she must do it. But I do contend that in the last clause of that section there is a requirement to the effect that when the Secretary of the Treasury has paid it it shall be credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to make an inquiry there? The gentleman concedes, I understand from what he has just stated, the authority to pay the interest? Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I concede the authority for advancing the interest out of the Federal Treasury, with the proviso and upon the condition that after it has been done and when the District has funds it must come out of those funds and be returned to the United States Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has understood that to be the gentleman's position from the beginning. Now, the Chair desires to submit this inquiry, Is there authority in the law to advance out of the Federal Treasury the interest? The Chair understands, of course, that the gentleman speaks now only with reference to the interest. If there is authority to advance that fund, of course it involves the fact that there is authority in the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate the fund or to present a report or bill carrying the appropriation. Now, there being authority of law for that, and there being authority of law for the Committee on Appropriations to bring in an appropriation for that amount, does not that, so far as the interest is concerned, go beyond the Chair, and has the Chair anything to do with the matter of how it is kept after it has passed through the hands of the executive officers of the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, all I ask the Chair to do is to consider together the first clause of this bill and then this provision. The first clause of this bill says that this money "shall be paid one half from the United States Treasury and the other half from the revenues of the District of Columbia." Does this do that? It does not. I challenge any man to controvert that position.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will permit, the Chair would say that the first section does not use the exact language that the gentleman quoted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I was giving the substance of it. Will the Chair please read it? He has the book.

The CHAIRMAN. It says that—half of the following sums named, respectively, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in full for the following purposes.

Now, would not the ordinary construction of that be that it is appropriated for use under the law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it is the construction against which I protest. I say that they have no right to put into this bill the conclusions of any man. Instead of quoting the act itself, as they did immediately after the passage of the act of 1878, they again quote conclusions for the authorization to take this money out of the Treasury and then deduce from that an unwarranted conclusion, and then they say it is now fastened upon the United States.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that the gentleman's objection is that instead of having the item appear as it is in the appropriation bill it should appear in the language of the law requir-ing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the interest on those bonds?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say in answer to the question of the gentleman from Texas that if the Chair overrules my motion to strike out this language, I will move that the statute itself, copied from the statute books, be put in its place. I am willing for that to be done now, without further discussion of the subject. I am willing that the law be put in this appropriation bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to advance the money with which to pay this interest, but I am unwilling that a bill shall be drawn at the Municipal Building carrying the regular appropriations for the District of Columorder that more money than the law permits may be taken from the Federal Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. The Chair understands that the gentleman denies any liability of any character under the sinking fund?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am coming to the sinking fund, Mr. Chairman. The sinking fund act will be found in volume 20, Statutes at Large, page 410. The sinking fund part of that act is in section 3, and section 3 reads thus:

And there is hereby appropriated, out of the proportional sum which the United States may contribute toward the expenses of the District of Columbia in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and annually thereafter, such sums as will, with the interest thereon at the rate of 3 and 65-100ths per cent per annum, be sufficient to pay the principal of the 3,65 bonds of the District of Columbia, issued under the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874.

Now, there is a plain direction, Mr. Chairman, that there shall be set aside, not out of moneys belonging to the United States Government, not out of moneys belonging to the District of Columbia, but out of the sum which the United States Government has contributed toward the expenses of the District of Columbia for that year.

Out of the thousands of appropriation bills that, in the last hundred and more years, have been introduced into the House, not one has ever used that language to dispose of money in the Public Treasury. This money, I say, is not appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States; but, instead, it is appropriated out of the appropriations which the United States Government makes any year for the District of Columbia.

Now, there are joined together here two propositions which I say are inseparable. They took a bill which was drawn by the Comptroller of the Treasury years ago, which bill was sent up here and Congress was asked to adopt it, making this money payable out of the Treasury and making it an annual payment. He sent it, but Congress did not adopt it. The next year his annual report shows that he sent back that same recommendation, accompanied with the draft of a bill, and again Congress refused to adopt it. Now, here come these gentlemen and undertake, in three lines of this bill to write that which it took the Comptroller of the Treasury more than a page of closely printed matter to write. Instead of writing these two acts into this appropriation bill, and then letting the people who have the law to administer use their judgment, after taking counsel if they choose, this House is asked to write a construction which may not be the construction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

I say, do not let the officers of the District government interpret these two acts to mean what they wish them to mean; and then, in three lines, write "interest and sinking fund" to the amount of nearly $1,000,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one other provision in the sinking fund to which I wish to invite the attention of the Chair.

The act says:

And there is hereby appropriated out of the proportional sum which the United States may contribute toward the expenses of the District of Co. mbia in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1875, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and annually thereafter, such sums as will, with the interest thereon at the rate of 3.65 per cent per annum, be sufficient to pay—

What? Not the interest on the bonds, but the principal. The funding act of March 3, 1879, does not mention interest, except that it does say that a sum shall be set aside of sufficient amount as will, with the interest thereon, pay the principal of these bonds at maturity. Has that sum been set aside? I challenge the Secretary of the Treasury, I challenge the Treasury, I challenge the Treasury. urer of the United States, to show to this Congress where any such sum has ever been set aside. But, instead, for a number of years they have provided, and this year they attempt to repeat it, that Congress can name an amount sufficient to pay the interest and the principal upon these bonds through this sinking fund. This sinking fund provides for no interest, but the clause which you are now asked to strike out says that nearly a million dollars is hereby appropriated to pay the interest and sinking fund on the half-and-half plan. the interest and sinking fund on what, let me ask the Chair? Does this bill disclose? Point out to me where this bill discloses to any man's mind that there is any particular sinking fund to which this nearly $1,000,000 is to go.

I admit that there is a sinking fund created by law; but the history of this sinking fund, Mr. Chairman, is fearfully and wonderfully made. The law says the 3.65 bonds shall be retired at par. There was another act later on which said that the commissioners of the sinking fund might acquire, for the benefit of the District of Columbia, certain other described indebtedness; that they might invest in other bonds for this sinking fund. Invest? What a mockery! What do bia, giving their conclusions, instead of quoting the law, in they do with the bonds when they take the money from the 3,65 sinking fund and invest in these bonds? They immediately destroy the bonds. Is that an investment, or is that appropriating them to the District? However, the act unwisely gives them that power. The sinking-fund act says that when they make investments in those bonds, then interest shall cease and they shall destroy the bonds, as United States Government bonds are destroyed. Did the Congress advisedly intend to give that authority? But grant that they did. Let us go back to the proposition and see whether or not the Treasurer has the right to retire the 3.65 bonds at a premium, and this money, which I say is here unauthorized in this bill, will go to that very purpose.

I admit that any bonds, except the 3.65s, that are invested in for that sinking fund, although they cease to bear interest and are destroyed, are provided for; and the Treasurer may acquire such bonds at any price that is agreed upon. But there is a price fixed by law at which he shall retire the 3.65 bonds, and that price is par. Can the Appropriations Committee by its construction repeal that law?

The Treasurer says, in writing to me, that he acquires his authority to pay a premium on the 3.65 bonds by the act of Congress which gives him the right to retire other bonds at a price not fixed by law. I have just stated that I admit that under the law, infamous as it is to the American people, the Treasurer has the right to retire some bonds at a premium, but he has no right to retire the 3.65 bonds at anything

There is a law known to every man who knows any one law, and that is as old as the law itself, as old as civilization, and every man who has read the pages of Blackstone will there find it, and no man has ever disputed it; and that is that a special act always overrules a general act. If the general law is that bonds may be retired at a price which the Treasurer of the United States sees fit to pay, he can follow that general law, lead where it may. But when there stares him in the face the special act which says that these 3.65 bonds shall be retired at par that special act controls.

There is a general law of this land granting the right of trial by jury to every man. It is a great, it is a grand, it is a glorious law, it is the law upon which this country thrives and prospers. But, Mr. Chairman, there is a special law limiting that general law which justifies, even under the highest law of this land, the Constitution and Bill of Rights, that the Navy may try a man for offenses even where the death sentence may be inflicted; that the War Department may try a man under military court, and there give him a sentence of death without the intervention of a jury. The special law there overrides the general, a principle that no man will dispute.

And further than that, Mr. Chairman, the Canal Zone has been placed under the control of the President of the United States in some way akin to the War Department. An American citizen upon the Canal Zone is a citizen under the American flag. He goes from here to the Canal Zone with all the protection which the Constitution of the United States guarantees him, that of right of a trial by jury. Yet there an American citizen was given the death penalty, tried by a judge and not by a jury.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that without authority of law, but in the face of the law, the Treasurer of the United States has paid out of the funds which the United States put into that sinking fund more than $800,000 as a premium upon the 3.65 bonds; and yet you, as the presiding officer of this great body, are asked to include in this appropriation, not the law, but somebody's too liberal interpretation of the law.

that practice is to continue, such sums as are included in that more than $800,000 will be expended out of this item, because the Treasurer of the United States, notwithstanding the special act which says that he shall not retire the 3.65 bonds at a premium, insists that it is his right to do so, and I understand that he continues to do so. Now, I am not in close communication with them. I have just said that I have asked the superior officer of that department to allow the accountant of the Committee on the District of Columbia to have some assistance to go through those books; and that gentleman, the Secretary of the Treasury, the great financial officer of the American people, has flatly failed and refused to answer my communications, although there were two of them.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will permit, the Chair is very much interested in the argument the gentleman is making. Knowing that this point of order was to come, for the gentleman practically gave notice of his intention to raise the point of order in his opening speech on this bill, the Chair has been giving it more or less attention. Of course with the adminisgiving it more or less attention. Of course with the administration of the law and any maladministration on the part of the administrative offices of the Government the Chair would not be chargeable.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I grant that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The sole parliamentary question, it seems to the Chair, is whether or not there is authority in Congress to appropriate. If, after it be appropriated, there be mal-administration, and the law be violated in its administration, could that be reached by a point of order? The Chair under-stands that the gentleman takes the ground that there is no authority to appropriate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish the Chair to properly understand me, that my position is this: That a sum of money can be properly advanced by the United States Government to the District of Columbia with which to pay this interest; and further, that the Secretary of the Treasury can ascertain what amount of money it will take, not out of the Treasury, but out of an appropriation made by Congress for the expenses of the District of Columbia with which to create a sinking fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the Chair weigh, and weigh well, this point: That these two acts, mandatory to the officers of the United States, should be put in this appropriation bill, and then be construed. No man. no official within the District of Columbia, should interpret those acts and then insert his interpretation into the bill. That is the point against which I contend. If these acts, copied in haec verbae, were in this bill my voice would not be lifted here to-day against the item, because I would not be justified

But, Mr. Chairman, it is against an interpretation which the Committee on Appropriations has made that I contend, an interpretation which the officers of the District of Columbia have made, which has found its way into this bill; and when this bill, bearing their interpretation, goes to the Secretary of the Treasury he will ask himself the question, Am I bound to go behind the language that is in this appropriation bill? He can say that Congress has construed it, and he can say that the District Commissioners have construed it; and he may say that Congress has passed it as construed by them, and that therefore he will give it the construction which the draftsman gave it when he prepared it in the municipal building. But, Mr. Chairman, put in this bill these two statutes, and then let the Secretary of the Treasury take counsel of the Attorney General of the United States, or let him take it into the courts and there get a construction, and what is done will then, with me, be in the past. I contend, Mr. Chairman, and most earnestly, that you, as a judge, sitting to try this case, have no right under the rules of this House to write into this bill another man's construction of two sections of the law. There is the ruling before the Chair, in two sections of the law. There is the ruling before the Chair, in Volume IV of Hinds's Precedents—and I can turn to the page—that it is in order and is not subject to a point of order; that the exact language of the statute itself may go into a bill.

That is what I ask. I ask no advantage of anybody. not undertaking to refuse a single farthing that is due to any man; but I am asking this: That this statute be copied into the pending bill. Let not those men in the Treasury Building console themselves by saying that they have given it an interpretation which the Commissioners of the District of Columbia gave it. I ask again that the law be put into the bill as it was written, and as it is found upon the Statute books, and that there be then placed upon those gentlemen in the Treasury Building the responsibility of construing it themselves, and that upon them, and upon them alone, be placed the burden of con-They should not take the construction of struing it correctly. a layman, one who has never even undertaken to get a license to practice law, upon these great acts which mean millions and millions of dollars to the taxpayers of this country. The legal department of the United States should interpret those acts. When those three lines are taken out and these two acts inserted, where is the man who wants nothing but right who will object? If his interpretation of those two acts is justified by law, he has nothing to fear. It is only the man who apprehends that he and others, parties to the cause, have given an interpretation which can not be defended.

Mr. Chairman, in your capacity as a sworn judge in this case, in your capacity as a patriotic citizen of this Nation, what now becomes your duty? Is it your duty to leave in this bill now becomes your duty? Is it your duty to leave in this bill three lines which are nothing more and nothing less than another man's interpretation of the law, or is it your bounden duty, your sworn duty, your duty to your constituents, your duty to every man, woman, and child in the United States to place these two short sections of the law in the bill and then let the highest legal authority of the United States interpret them? In that event, everybody will be satisfied.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, for the committee I insist that the item to which the point of order is directed is properly carried in the bill and is fully authorized by law. Prior to June 20, 1874, the fiscal affairs of the city of Washington and the District of Columbia were involved in great confusion, were in a chaotic state. There was the large floating indebtedness and bonding indebtedness in excess of $20,000,000, which was being sold upon the open market at less than par, and inasmuch as the city of Washington and the District of Columbia were under the exclusive control of Congress by the terms of the Constitution, it was imperative that some action should be taken. At that time an act of Congress was passed looking to the funding of this indebtedness, and subsequently, on February 21, 1875, that act was amended, and as authority for carrying this item in the bill I now cite that and the act of June 11, 1878, and the act of March 3, 1879, under the terms of the act of February 20, 1875, which was as follows:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated by this act and by causing to be levied upon property within said District as will do so, provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas thinks that part he has read providing the necessary funds refers to the proportional appropriation as well as-

Mr. BURLESON. Undoubtedly. This act of Congress was construed differently by Members of Congress who participated in the enactment of that law. Some contended that it imposed an obligation upon the Federal Government, the General Government, to pay a part of the interest and a part of the bonded indebtedness of the District, which was argued at great length upon the floor, and at a subsequent Congress, in 1878, another act was passed. I will read that act to the Chair:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia issued in pursuance with the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, when the same shall become due and payable, and all amounts so paid shall be credited as part of the appropriations for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia as herein provided.

After that act was passed there was still a difference of opinion on the part of Members of Congress as to how it should be construed. It was construed by some that it imposed an obligation upon the Government to pay part of the interest, and it was contended by others that it did not impose an obligation upon the Government to pay any part of the principal of this indebtedness. The matter was still left open, it was still being discussed, and while a construction different from that which is now given this act was being insisted upon by some Members of Congress who participated in the enactment of the law, the following act was passed:

And there is hereby appropriated out of the proportional sums which the United States may contribute toward the expenses of the District of Columbia in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and annually thereafter, such sums as will, with the interest thereon at the rate of 3.65 per cent per annua, be sufficient to pay the principal of the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia issued under act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, at maturity, which sums the Secretary of the Treasury shall annually invest in said bonds at not exceeding the par value thereof; and all bonds so redeemed shall cease to bear interest and shall be canceled and destroyed in the same manner that United States bonds are canceled and destroyed.

When this provision was pending before Congress it was conceded by the gentlemen who had theretofore insisted that no obligation rested upon the Federal Government to pay any part of the principal of the funded indebtedness that if it became law the Government would thereby escape the obligation to pay one-half of the principal. The gentleman from Tennessee, Gen. Atkins, who was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations at that time, in response to a query propounded to him on the floor, asking him, "Why do you propose the embodying of this item in the law?" answered, "Because the General Government, under the acts of 1874 and 1878, is obligated to pay one-half the interest, and if this becomes a law the obligation will the be imposed upon the General Government, which the proposed upon the General Government, and the second of the foundation to the contract of the foundation to the foundation the foundation to the foundation the foundation to the foundation to the foundation to the foundation the foundation to the foundation the foundation to the foundation to the foundation to the foundation the foundation to the foundation the foundation the foundation the found ment to pay one-half the principal of the funded indebtedness of the District of Columbia." This view was earnestly contested by the gentleman from Kentucky, who was afterwards a Senator of the United States, the Hon. J. S. C. Blackburn, who was at that time a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. Subsequently it became a law and he became a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and in that same Congress, though he took a view at that time that the Federal Government was obligated to pay one-half the interest that it was not obligated to pay one-half the principal, he reported an appropriation bill which carried an item, just as it is carried now in the bill, and from that moment there was no controversy between those who had entertained conflicting views theretofore that the Federal Government was obligated to pay one-half the interest and one-half the funded indebtedness of the District of Columbia.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss this proposition any further. I have prepared this in concrete form so that the Chair may have these three acts before him. The details of the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] will be discussed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Saunders], a member of the subcommittee, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Taylor], who will present the views of the committee on this subject.

Now I ask that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Saunders] may have such time to discuss this point of order as may be necessary.

Mr. SIMS. Was the provision of law read passed on the 3d day of March, 1879, on an appropriation bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. On the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. BURLESON. It was; on the sundry civil bill, where the appropriations for the District of Columbia were made at that time.

Mr. SIMS. But it has substantive legislation in it?

Mr. BURLESON. It has.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman has just stated there that Gen. Atkins, who represented the same district that I do now, at that time contended that, if that act passed, the United States would have to pay one-half of the principal of the bonds. What did the House determine about that?

Mr. BURLESON. Those who were opposing Gen. Atkins's views at that time insisted that under the acts of 1874 and 1878 the obligation was imposed on the Federal Government to pay one-half the interest and sinking fund on the funded in-debtedness. Gen. Atkins and Senator Blackburn, who was at that time a Member of the House, conceded the proposition that the Federal Government had to pay one-half the interest, but combated vigorously the proposition that the Federal Government had assumed to pay one-half of the principal. They combated vigorously the proposition that the Federal Government had assumed to pay one-half the principal of this debt.

And when Gen. Atkins, on this floor, was asked the direct question, "Why is it you oppose embodying this item in the bill?" he answered, "Because, if this item becomes law, thereafter the Federal Government will be obligated to pay one-half the principal of the funded indebtedness of the District of Co-Mr. Blackburn, who was at that time a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, concurred in the views expressed by Gen. Atkins, and insisted that the Federal Government at that time was obligated to pay only one-half the interest and not obligated to pay one-half of the principal of this indebtedness. Subsequently he became a member of the Committee on Appropriations, preparing the first bill that was submitted to Congress, carrying substantially the item that is now carried in the bill. And until the question was raised a few years thereafter there was no contention on the part of any of the men who participated in the enactment of these three laws other than that the Federal Government had assumed to pay one-half the interest and one-half the principal. For 30 years the Congress of the United States has acquiesced in that construction. I say, Mr. Chairman, even if there was doubt, and I do not concede there was doubt, even if there had been doubt as to the construction that should be given to this law, the Federal Government at this time is now estopped from asserting that any other construction should be given it than was given to it by the man who participated in the enactment of this law.

Mr. SIMS. After the act of 1879 there was no contention that the Government should not pay one-half the principal as well as one-half the interest?

Mr. BURLESON. That is true. Mr. SIMS. And the act seems to have placed a quietus upon that contention?

Mr. BURLESON. That is true.

Mr. SIMS. Was it conceded that Gen. Atkins was correct?

Mr. BURLESON. He said he opposed it because if it became law, then the Federal Government would be put in the attitude of assuming to pay one-half of the principal of this debt. He resisted it upon that ground. Representative Blackburn resisted it upon the ground that whereas the Government was then obligated to pay one-half of the interest that there was not a shadow of legal obligation to pay one-half the principal. Therefore there was no contention upon the part of either of these gentlemen that the law was other than we now con-

Mr. SIMS. I am asking these questions simply because the law appears to have been enacted on the last day of the session of Congress, and as a general rule, as the gentleman knows, who has been here so long, that matters at that time in the way of new legislation are not generally well discussed. I wanted to know how it was.

Mr. BURLESON. This was brought directly to the attention of Congress, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Saunders] will discuss it in detail and lay the contemporaneous construction that was given to this act fully before the House.

I ask that the gentleman from Virginia be heard on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the contention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson], it is: First, that there is no authority of existing law for the payment on the part of the United States of one-half of the interest on the funded indebtedness of the District of Columbia. Second, that there is no authority of law on our part for the payment of one-half of the funded indebtedness of the District.

I willingly undertake, Mr. Chairman, to maintain the affirmative of these propositions, and to demonstrate, I hope, by sufficient argument and sufficient citations of law and precedent that there is ample authority in existing law for the payment of one-half of this interest by the United States, and equally ample authority in existing law for the discharge of one-half of the funded indebtedness, by the same Government.

This matter has been twice before the House of Representatives: In the first instance the point now raised by the gentleman from Kentucky was ruled on by indirection. Hence this ruling is not full authority for my present contention. When the point was again before the Committee of the Whole, the ruling was full, direct, and emphatic.

This ruling therefore may be cited as an ample and authoritative precedent in support of my position.

In 1894, when this same item of appropriation was before the House of Representatives, it then having under consideration the District of Columbia appropriation bill, the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. De Armond, moved an amendment to the item. He did not direct a point of order to the paragraph on the ground that it was not supported by existing law, but offered an amendment to the effect that amount appropriated for sinking fund and interest should be paid exclusively out of the funds of the District of Columbia. To this amendment a point of order was raised, on the ground that it interfered with existing law. But the Chair in ruling held—the Holman rule being in operation at that time—that he was not concerned to inquire whether there was existing law or not to support the appropriation, inasmuch as the amendment was undoubtedly in order because it reduced expenses. This, said the Chair, was the test. On this ground the amendment was considered to be in order, and being submitted to the House was rejected.

This was the indirect ruling to which I have referred, the Chair impliedly holding that existing law supported its ruling, since it ascertained the amendment to be in order under the Holman rule, and not on the ground that existing law was lacking to support the item against which Mr. De Armond directed his attack.

Two years later the same gentleman from Missouri, Judge De Armond, renewed his attack on this item of the appropriation bill, offering the same amendment which theretofore had been rejected. In the meantime the Holman rule had been abrogated. An objection of order was promptly raised to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, the objection being that the amendment changed existing law. Hence it will be observed that this point of order required the Chair to decide whether existing law did or did not support an appropriation for the sinking fund and interest. A decision sustaining the point of order, was of necessity a decision in substance and in terms that existing law provided for the payment of the item carried in the bill.

I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the point of order was fully debated at the time. I wish to call the attention of the House to the further fact that Judge De Armond, who certainly had no superior then, or now, as an incisive and logical debater, argued the same proposition that has been argued to-day by the gentleman from Kentucky, save that he omitted from his argument certain pertinent references, to which I wish to call the attention of the House in the progress of my remarks.

The opposing view was argued by the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. Grout, also a logician and debater of great power. The Chair took time to consider, and when it finally rendered its opinion, that opinion sustained the point of order. The Chair held, citing the statutes of 1878 and 1879, that existing law provided for the payment by the United States of one-half of the interest and sinking fund. Hence the Chair properly concluded that the De Armond amendment would change existing law, and was therefore subject to a point of order.

From that day no question was raised over the authority for this item, until two years ago. Without objection and without controversy the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia, for 14 successive years, has contained an appropriation to pay interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of the District.

Now, Mr. Chairman, so much for the parliamentary precedents. Permit me, apart from these precedents, to submit to the Chair the statutes upon which, entirely apart from any parliamentary precedent, I undertake to say that the items in the bill whether for interest, or funded indebtedness, may be considered to securely rest.

In 1874 the Congress passed an act relating to the District of Columbia, and its future government. That act created three commissioners, and defined the duties which these officials should discharge. A little later further on in the statute a joint select committee was established to prepare and submit a scheme of government for the District of Columbia. (Stat. L., vol. 18, pp. 116, 118.) I desire to call the attention of the Chair to certain details of the bill creating this committee, and defining its duties.

But first, as a rather more logical order of presentation, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to certain language that will be insisted on later as an undertaking on the part of the Government to provide for both interest and sinking fund by the contribution of a proportional part to that end—and the levy of sufficient taxes on property within the District. I refer the Chair to page 120 of volume 18 of the Statutes at Large, in which this language will be found:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will do so, provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

I have read into that act the words "do so," because, while they do not appear in the book from which I am now reading, they were subsequently added to the act. I regard the addition of the words "do so" as entirely superfluous and unnecessary. Any court, or functionary properly charged with the interpretation of this act, would read these words into the law, as a matter of necessary and inevitable interpretation.

But the Chair will observe that the Government's faith is pledged that it will accomplish a definite result by a compound composed of proportionate contributions on its part, and the levy of sufficient District taxes. What is meant by proportionate contributions? Turning to page 118 of the act this reference is explained. The committee already mentioned is distinctly charged with the duty of preparing and submitting to Congress a "statement of the proper proportion of the expenses of the District government, or any branch thereof, including interest on the funded debt, which should be borne by said District, and the United States respectively, together with the reasons upon which their conclusions might be based." The Chair is asked to examine this reference in its appropriate connection. I see no reason why the language just read, in relation to the proportional contribution of the Government, and the levy of necessary taxes, does not provide for the sinking fund as well as interest. The Chair will find that this view is maintained by a number of distinguished men. But I waive this contention for the present. I expect to be able to establish that if the act of 1874 does not provide for the principal of the funded debt, the later act of 1879 did so provide.

For the present we are only concerned to inquire into the meaning of the words, "proportional appropriations," interpreting them by the antecedent provision of the act that the committee shall prepare a report providing the proper proportion of the expenses of the District of Columbia, including interest, which shall be borne by the Government. I say that then and there there was stamped upon this act, an undertaking on the part of the Government of the United States that it would assume some proportion of the interest on the funded

The CHAIRMAN. That was the resolution of the House creating the committee?

Mr. SAUNDERS. That was in the act which created the committee, and provided for the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. That was a joint committee?

Mr. SAUNDERS. That was a joint select committee, created by the act of 1874. That act, as I have said, did not provide what the specific contribution on the part of the Government should be, but it did provide that the report of the committee should include the interest on the funded debt, as a part of the expenses to be borne by the Government. That was in 1874, creating the committee, and the commissioners.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman contend that the 3.65 bonds were in existence at that time?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Not at all. I am coming to that. I wish to say, in response to the gentleman's inquiry, that in my opinion the reference to the funded debt, includes the whole debt, not only that already funded, but the portion to be thereafter funded. The act of 1874 was an act to provide for a future government, and the indebtedness of that government. Hence its reference to the funded debt is general and comprehensive in its character, and is not to be limited to the then funded proportion of the whole indebtedness. It is a fair and necessary conclusion that Congress had in mind the funded debt of the District, including that which had been funded, and that which would be thereafter funded, under the act of 1874, and the cognate and supplemental acts. The act of 1874 contemplated the assumption on the part of the United States of a proportional part of the expenses of the District of Columbia, including in direct terms interest on the debt, as a part of these expenses.

The gentleman from Kentucky maintains in his argument that interest on the public debt, would not be a part of the expenses of the District government. I submit that unless there is something in the specific law under consideration which would require that view, under the usual, the necessary, the everyday, the legal, the ordinary interpretation of the word "expenses," interest on a municipal debt which is a municipal burden, would be fairly a municipal expense.

He cites the act which he undertakes to say maintains his proposition. This is the so-called true-intent act. Permit me to call the attention of the Chair to the argument of our friend from Kentucky in that connection.

On page 890 of the current RECORD he says:

But it must be borne in mind that Congress has enumerated what items compose the expenses of the District; and as "sweeping, cleaning, and removing all refuse and filthy accumulations in the streets, alleys, avenues" were not municipal functions within control of the commissioners until made so by special act of Congress; and as an enumeration of items is set out in the same section of the act of 1878 which contains the half-and-half clause.

He draws the conclusion by interpretation that these items are not a part of the expenses, and cleaning streets not a municipal function under the act of 1874.

Mr. Chairman, I deny that proposition. I deny it for the reason that the act to which he refers, the true-intent statute, does not undertake to say that these functions were not a part of the original functions of the District.

If the later act had done that, if it had called attention to the fact that these functions were not prescribed by the antecedent act, if it had called attention to the fact that while these functions were not municipal functions in the contemplation of the original act, it was the intention of the later act to give authority in express terms to the District to discharge these functions, and include the expense of the same in its budget of municipal expenses, why then the gentleman's contention that the initial act did not include these items under the head of expenses, would be sustained. But the true intent statute does nothing of the sort. It provides in substance that whereas a question has been raised as to whether these items are a part of the expenses of the District, this objection was not well taken. The true intent statute then proceeds to declare that these expenses were provided for in the original act, and that this act properly construed intended to include the cost of street cleanings, under the general head of expenses. That is a very different proposition, from the one advanced by the gentleman from Kentucky. The amending statute in terms declares that the interpretation which had been placed upon the prior act to the effect that these expenses were not within its terms, was a misinterpretation, and that from the beginning, the true intent of that statute was that these items should be included in, and made a part of the expenses of the District, to be borne as a part of the municipal burden. Permit me to read the act in this connection. The true intent statute is as follows:

It was the true intent and meaning of the act passed June 20, 1874, that the sweeping, cleaning, and removal of refuse and filthy accumulations from the streets, etc., were necessary municipal objects which belong to the current expenses of the same, to be paid for in money as other ordinary municipal expenses. (Stat. L., vol. 18, p. 337-338.)

This is an interpretation to correct the original misinterpretation of the act. It is not a new act, giving new authority. It is a legislative declaration that the original meaning of the old act, is the meaning now declared to attach to it.

Mr. Chairman, I maintain that from the beginning, the Government contemplated the payment of a portion of the interest on the funded debt, as a part of its contribution to the burdens of the District of Columbia. In 1878 another act was passed.

This act was passed pursuant to the report of the committee created by the act of 1874. For the first time, the proportionate contribution of the Government to the expenses of the District, was fixed by law. Permit me to submit a citation from that act in this connection:

To the extent to which Congress shall approve said estimates, Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereon, and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimates, shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property, etc., of the District of Columbia. (Stat. L., vol. 20, p. 104.)

The preceding provisions of this section provide that these estimates shall be for the expenses of the District of Columbia. But these expenses—as we have seen—necessarily include as a portion thereof, the amount required for the payment of in-terest. Hence it is clear that when the Government undertakes to pay one-half of the expenses of the District, and those expenses include interest, the Government has specifically undertaken to pay one-half of the interest. The act cited supra (p. 104) enumerates certain specified items that shall be included in the report of the commissioners to the Secretary of the Treasury. I call the attention of the Chair to these items, which are as follows: The cost of repairing, and constructing bridges, the cost of maintaining charities. Then the paragraph concludes by saying the commissioners shall report an itemized statement and estimate of the amount necessary to defray the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia. are the expenses which Congress later assumes to pay to the extent of one-half. Unless the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] can eliminate from the meaning of the word "expenses," the contemplation of interest as a part of these expenses, I maintain that this statute in connection with the preceding statutes directly provides that the Government shall pay one-half of the interest on the funded debt. It has been so construed from that time forward.

This Mr. Chairman, is my answer to the proposition that there is no warrant in existing law for the payment of one-half of the interest on the funded indebtedness of the District of Columbia by the Government of the United States. the sundry civil appropriation bill was before this body. that time the sundry civil bill carried an appropriation for the District of Columbia. My colleague on the committee reminds me in this connection, and it is a potent circumstance, that in 1878 an effort was made to provide for the assumption by the United States of one-half of the sinking fund, for the District indebtedness. This effort was defeated. A year later the same item was included in the conference report on the sundry civil The item was objected to, on the ground that it did provide for the assumption of one-half of the sinking fund. was the same item which the House had theretofore rejected, and rejected simply and solely because it was intended to saddle the United States with one-half of the above fund. Hence when this item was adopted a year later, upon full debate, it is a clear and inevitable conclusion that the House knew what it was doing.

I wish to say a few words in this connection, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the interpretation of the language we find in these acts, the acts referred to by the gentleman from Ken-I admit freely that sometimes the phrases used are I admit freely that at times the terms used are not precise. I admit that at times it would be difficult to interpret some sentence, or portion of these acts, if we fastened our view on the precise sentence, or paragraph, and omitted from our contemplation the general intent of the whole body of these statutes, and the meaning with which they have been heretofore impressed by competent authority. But these facts present no difficulties to a presiding officer, to a court, or to anyone accustomed to the construction of statutes. We know that when inapt and inappropriate language is used, the Chair in interpreting this language looks to all the statutes on one subject matter. If it is a coherent and continuing body of legislation, that fact is a potent factor in the process of interpretation. The intent running through a series of cognate statutes is used by the functionary charged with the interpretation of one of these statutes, to aid him in arriving at the true interpretation of the paragraph, or section under consideration. I submit in this connection these familiar propositions.

In case of inapt, or ambiguous terms, or phrases, the real meaning of the legislator is to be gathered from the context, and the general purport and tenor of the enactment. In such a situation that construction will be adopted which will make all the provisions of the statute consistent with each other, and with the preexisting body of the law.

We now come to the act of 1879. That was an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill. The amendment was not found in the law when it passed this body. It was in the conference report, having been added presumably in the Senate.

As soon as the report was submitted, the question was raised as to what was meant by this new and unexpected item. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. Atkins, Mr. Blackburn, and other gentlemen of this House, including the friends and the opponents of the proposition, united in agreeing that the effect of the language of the new item was to fasten upon the United States' something that theretofore had been rejected, namely the assumption of one-half of the sinking fund of the District of Columbia.

This, Mr. Chairman, was the contemporaneous interpretation of the body that was dealing with this act, and as I have said this interpretation was concurred in by both the friends, and the opponents of the amendments. In this respect there was no difference between them. Permit me to read to the Chair some citations from the debate upon this amendment.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.
Mr. CARLIN. If I understand the gentleman correctly, his position is that we have had a legislative construction of the act and that the Chair at present is bound by that construc-

Mr. SAUNDERS. We have had both a parliamentary and a legislative construction of it. The parliamentary construction I referred to before my colleague came into the Chamber, but I undertake to maintain that apart from that parliamentary precedent, the act itself fairly construed, according to the familiar rules of interpretation, provides for the discharge by the Government of one-half of this sinking fund.

I wish to say in this connection, adverting to language here-tofore cited, that in the progress of the debate that ensued on the Atkins report, more than one gentleman construed the pledge of faith found in the act of 1874, to mean that the Government would pay a part of both the interest and sinking fund, This paragraph has been given in full, and in my judgment it justly bears the meaning that others have given to it, namely that by two concurrent, and potent things, proportionate appropriations by the Government, and adequate taxes on property in the District of Columbia, the interest and sinking fund should be provided for. The amount of the proportionate contribution of the Government was otherwise fixed. Recurring to the act of 1879, that is the sundry civil bill, I quote from the remarks of Mr. Atkins who first demanded the previous question. Mr. Atkins, as has been stated, was the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations at that time. "I can answer," said Mr. Atkins "the question of the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Franklin." Even at that time it appears that the Representatives of the State of Missouri were desirous of being shown.

I can answer

Proceeded Mr. Atkins-

both the question of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Franklin], and the question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Reagan] at the same time. The gentleman from Texas asks me to state what the bill provides in regard to the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of the District. This provision is made: "For the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, $1,155,583,55." About $120,000 of that amount is designed to be a sinking fund, one half of which is to be paid by the District of Columbia, and the other half by the United States Government. Now, Mr. Speaker, I state with perfect frankness to the House that I did not in conference committee favor that proposition. I would have preferred that that had not been put in this bill. But, sir, I was overruled by a majority of the House conferees, and I am not willing, it is equally frank for me to say, to defeat this bill simply because that feature is in the bill, although I was not in favor of it. (Record, vol. 35, p. 2356.)

Such was the interpretation placed on the item by Mr. Atkins who opposed it. I go a step further, and quote from Mr. Blackburn, who was also opposed to this proposition. I think I may say that Mr. Blackburn's position was that while the Government was to undertake the payment of one-half of the interest on the indebtedness-he was inclined to the opinion that it undertook this payment was to be reimbursed. But be this as it may be, as to the interest, Mr. Blackburn certainly opposed the proposition reported by the conference committee, and agreed with Mr. Atkins that it imposed upon the Government the burden of one-half of the sinking fund for the District of Columbia. Mr. Blackburn said:

This proposition of this section of the bill, is to fasten upon the Government of the United States, for the first time, an obligation to pay one half of all this funded debt, and leave the people of the District of Columbia, already ground into the earth by taxation, to pay the other half of this debt. The law to-day does not require the Government to pay a dollar. (RECORD, vol. 35, p. 2357.)

So that both the gentleman from Kentucky, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS], after announcing the pre-liminary proposition that the Government was not liable for one dollar of this funded indebtedness, agree that the item reported, and then under consideration, saddled upon the Government one-half of the funded debt of the District of Colum-

Mr. CARLIN. Will my colleague yield at this point, just to fortify his position? I do not intend to speak on the question, and I agree with him. I want to call his attention to the rule of court, which is almost universal, that where a statute is ambiguous and there has been legislative construction of the statute the court will adopt that legislative construction.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes, that is undoubtedly true, and the further proposition is undoubtedly true, that when a statute is passed which has been interpreted in another State, in another jurisdiction, that is the existing interpretation is presumed to have been written into the later statute. Just as my friend from Virginia says, when this body acted with knowledge of what it was doing, who can gainsay, that they intended to do, what they did, and enacted the amendment with the meaning that was given to it, on all hands. I proceed further with the quotation from Mr. Blackburn's remarks:

The law requires the United States to see that the interest is paid, and that a sinking fund is provided for, and that there shall be taxes levied on the property sufficient to do it, etc.

I have read these citations, Mr. Chairman, for the one purpose, namely, to show that the House was not acting in ignorance, but with full knowledge of what was before them, and what the amendment reported, was intended to accomplish. The proposition was dissected, and debated by a number of gentlemen, who desired to be informed as to its meaning, purpose, and effect. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. Mills, asked the gentleman from Kentucky:

I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if the Government of the United States is called on to pay this debt.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I answer that this provision of the report of the committee on conference binds this Government in its own capacity to the payment of half of the debt.

Such was the view of the meaning of the language of the amendment, by one who opposed its adoption on principle.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. What is the date of the debate from which the gentleman is reading?

Mr. SAUNDERS. This was in 1879, 33 years ago.
Mr. OLMSTED. The language there seems to speak of a specific then-existing debt. It says, "This debt." Do I understand the gentleman to mean that the law then passed applied to any debt that the District of Columbia might to the end of time incur?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Not at all. There again I will say to my friend, that there were a number of statutes referring to the indebtedness of the District. It was the existing, antecedent indebtedness that the Government assumed in part. The statutes refer to this indebtedness from time to time. It is all one and the same body of indebtedness. Whether it was all one and the same body of indebtedness. funded in 1874 is immaterial. I assume that by 1879, all had been funded.

Mr. OLMSTED. One other word. We are appropriating in this bill, and we appropriate year after year, a large sum of money, one-half to be paid by the District of Columbia and one-half out of the Federal Treasury. Now, if the District of Columbia runs behind year after year, and increases the debt, do I understand the gentleman from Virginia to say that we are bound to pay half the debt?

Mr. SAUNDERS. By no means.
Mr. OLMSTED. If it amounts to that it will result in the Government paying more of the expenses.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If I have said anything to create such an impression. I desire to correct it at this time.

Was not the indebtedness incurred subse-Mr. OLMSTED. quent to the time of that debate, and was it not incurred for expenditures for improvements or repairs, one-half of which was to be paid by the United States at the time?

Mr. SAUNDERS. As shown by the debate itself, and shown by the statute to which I have referred, the indebtedness to which reference was made, was the indebtedness existing at the time that Congress took over the reorganization of the District of Columbia, and lifted it out of the mire of debt and hopelessness in which it was sunken.

Mr. OLMSTED. And applied only to the then-existing debt? Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not understand that the act applies anything but the then existing indebtedness.

One word further in support of that proposition. Mr. Black-burn was asked at the time about this indebtedness, and I will call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to his response.

Mr. Blackburn. I answer that this provision of the report of the committee on conference binds this Government in its own capacity to the payment of half the debt. (Id. p. 2357.)

Then he was asked what that debt was, and his answer was: I think about $22,000,000 in round numbers.

This is the only debt with which we are concerned, and it is the same debt about which Congress has legislated from that time to the present. It is the only debt to which this item This item is a part of a continuing appropriation, and has been diminished from time to time as the funded indebtedness has been continuously liquidated. In this connection the question might be raised whether this is permanent law, or not. Even that question was debated at that time, as follows:

Mr. ATKINS. I would suggest to the gentleman that the next Congress can repeal this provision.

Mr. BLACKBURN. This is a permanent provision for the payment of a permanent debt. (Id.)

There is no ambiguity in this question, and answer. There is no need to interpret this language. Its meaning is palpable and manifest.

Mr. BURLESON. Right in that connection, even if this item were stricken out of the bill, there is an obligation imposed upon the Government to make the appropriation.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, may I call your attention to further extracts from the debate of 1879? So far I have cited only the attitude of the opponents of the amendment, and adverted to the interpretation which they placed upon its terms. But there were gentlemen in that House who favored the amendment as an original proposition. These gentlemen agreed with its opponents as to its meaning. One of these gentlemen was Mr. Hale. I presume, although I do not know, that this was the same Mr. Hale who was afterwards. Senator from the State of Maine. But be that as it may, Mr. Hale contended that the Government ought to assume one-half of the funded indebtedness as a matter of precaution. He said in substance that, judging from the way things were proceeding, if one-half of this indebtedness was not assumed, the Government would later on be induced to assume all of it.

Hence he said, he was acting in a preventive capacity, and in his opinion by the assumption of one-half of the indebtedness, the Government of the United States would be saved from the necessity of later assuming the entire burden of this obligation.

His language was as follows:

His language was as follows:

I know further, Mr. Speaker, that as years run by when this debt matures there will be more and more pressure upon the Government if this measure does not pass here and now to pay the whole of this debt; and if we do not now provide a sinking fund, the Government appropriating for 50 per cent of it, but leave it to the termination of the bonds, the Government will in the end pay the whole of it. So as a matter of economy and of good husbandry this is in the interest of the Government and of protecting it. Any man who lives to see these bonds mature at the termination of the time fixed by them, unless we establish this sinking fund, will see such a raid on the Government and Treasury that we will have to pay the whole of it. That is one of the reasons why I sustained with the gentleman from New York the proposition of the Senate. It was to save us in the end.

A gentleman named took part in that debate. I have stated, Mr. Chairman, that there were gentlemen who maintained the proposition in that debate that I have undertaken to maintain, or rather have stated that I could maintain, if necessary, namely that the original pledging of the faith of the Government of the United States to proportional appropriations related both to the funded debt, and to the interest on that debt. Mr. Hendee was one of these gentlemen. In the course of his

I will read what that act contains upon that point. It contains these words. After going on to say the debt shall be ascertained in a certain way and that it shall be paid in 3.65 bonds, then follow these words:
"And the faith of the Vertex of the vertex words:

"And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations, as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such tax as would do so, provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity."

There can be no language plainer than that. The United States are not only bound under that law to take care of the interest or see that it is paid, but we are also bound to take care that the principal is paid or provide a sinking fund for that purpose.

Mr. Hendee debated the proposition further, and then Mr. Buckner took up the argument. This was another gentleman who favored the particular item under consideration on its merits.

I understand the Government of the United States is just as much bound by proportional appropriations and by the taxation of this District to take care of the sinking fund as it is to provide for the ultimate payment of this debt when it is due and as it is to provide for the interest. We have time and again, year after year, appropriated money from the Treasury of the United States to pay the interest on the 3.65 debt. We did so upon the ground that it was due as the plighted faith of this Government that this interest should be paid. Shall we go on and make no provision for the ultimate payment of the debt by a sinking fund or otherwise by means of taxation or appropriation until 50 years shall have elapsed, and let the whole burden then come at once on the Government? Is that the proposition?

I say that would be not only bad faith but bad policy. I say the Government is bound to take charge of and pay a share of this sinking fund in order to pay off this debt of $13,000,000.

Mark you, it is claimed in this debate that the Government should pay these amounts and be reimbursed; but Mr. Buckner

I say the Government is bound to take charge of and pay a share of this sinking fund in order to pay off this debt.

This is still another interpretation, of the item this time by a friend, an interpretation to the effect that the amendment, if adopted would be an assumption on the part of the Government of the United States of the burden of paying one-half of the sinking fund. Thus it is that friends and enemies are alike agreed on the meaning of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call your attention to another citation. If you will look to page 2360 you will see that a gentleman named Mayham participated in the debate. I do not know from what portion of the country Mr. Mayham came, but he says:

I can not enter into a discussion as to whether these bonds are valid or not.

This was a feature injected into that debate, a charge which is not part of this debate, namely, that these bonds were largely fraudulent in issue, and in creation. This was the contention on the part of the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Blackburn, and he had argued theretofore that the Government should not assume the payment of these on this ground of fraud. He did not question that the amendment, if adopted would place this burden on the government, but insisted that by reason of these antecedent frauds which tainted the whole body of the indebtedness, the Government ought not to assume this liability.

This attitude of general opposition on the part of Mr. Blackburn, makes abundantly clear his intense antagonism to a proposition which he understood, and his colleagues understood, to saddle the Government with the discharge of an indebtedness considered by some of the statesmen of that day, to be tainted with fraud.

Mr. Mayham, proceeding, said:

Mr. Speaker, I can not enter into a discussion of the question whether these bonds are valid or not in five minutes. It seems to be enough for the purpose of a discussion upon this question to look as the statutes under which they were issued.

Then he cited the act of 1874, pledging the faith of the Government to proportional appropriations. I quote further from Mr. Mavham:

Mr. Mayham:

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that my distinguished friend the chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia [Mr. Blackburn] makes any question as to the Federal Government being liable to make provision for the interest on the bonds, and under the plain language of the statute there can be no distinction made between providing for the payment of the interest and the bonds at maturity by the creation of a sinking fund. If the one is binding and obligatory on the Government, the other is equally so. * * *

If the bonds have been issued, and that provision of the statute has been carried out by the officers of the Government, and on the face of that provision of law these bonds have been issued and gone into circulation, then by what principle of justice and good faith can it be said that the Government has to-day been relieved from the obligation of the statute?

of the statute?

Further citations from that debate, but they would only be along the line of those already afforded.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there anyone who took a contrary view of that interpretation?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Not one, not a single solitary man. Not a voice was raised in that debate to say that the provision which they were for the first time writing into the law of the United States, did not bear the meaning given to it by the gentlemen whom I have cited.

There was still another able gentleman who participated in that debate, the Hon. Abram S. Hewitt of the State of New York. He was in favor of the amendment. He was one of the friends of that item on its merits. Mr. Chairman, I have here-tofore said that for the purposes of this debate the statutes antecedent to 1879 were cited to show that the Government did provide in those statutes for the payment of one-half of the interest. On this line, listen to the gentleman from New York.

We have assumed the payment of one-half the interest of this District by an act brought in here by the gentleman from Kentucky himself, Mr. Blackburn. Hearken further:

All that this sundry civil bill does, is to say that out of the fund thus created, of which the United States Government has agreed to pay one-half, the pledge of the Government to establish a sinking fund shall be fulfilled.

Mr. Chairman, the question was asked whether from that time, to the present this matter has been at rest. It has been at rest, save when it was raised by the gentleman from Missouri, who moved an amendment placing all this burden on the District of Columbia.

This effort on his part was rendered abortive in the first instance by the negative action of the House, and in the second instance by the positive ruling of the Chair that his amendment was not in order, the Chair ruling on the same question now presented in this debate. Save for the De Armond amendments, the same item carried in the present bill, has been carried in every District bill without objection from 1879 to 1910. The existing acts have been interpreted as we interpret them to-day. Whenever occasion has arisen for interpretation, the persons charged with the duty of interpretation, have interpreted the acts under consideration, and given to them the same meaning with which we now seek to charge them.

Mr. Chairman, there is a familiar principle of construction, that if a contract is ambiguous, and the parties to that contract, by their acquiescence, or by their action impress that contract with a particular meaning, that interpretation, when challenged, will be treated as the interpretation of the parties themselves.

I invoke the analogy of that principle for the consideration of this question. If the Congress of the United States, adopted this amendment with knowledge of its meaning, and from that time forward has made appropriations in conformity with the interpretation of its intent universally assented to in the debate on its adoption, then Congress itself has satisfic. I the interpretation which it first afforded. There is no further room for controversy. The Congress itself has said that it has assumed to pay one-half of this debt-why then should we now seek to afford a different interpretation at variance with precedent-with uninterrupted practice, and the statutes themselves fairly construed.

If I have carried the burden that I assumed on behalf of the committee, and have supported by reference to precedents, and to statutes, the two propositions that existing law provides at once for the payment of one-half of the interest, and one-half of the funded debt, then I will change a little the figure of our friend from Kentucky, who said that no sleight-of-hand argument could find authority to support the proposition that there is existing law for these items; I will say that no sleight-of-hand argument will be able to strike down the protection which existent law gives to the provision that is included in the report of the Committee on Appropriations for the payment of one-half of the interest, and of the principal of the funded debt.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman sits down, will he permit the Chair to ask him a question? The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] called attention to and laid special emphasis on certain words in the sections that have been read. For instance, in the section which provides "that hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds," and so forth, "and all amounts so paid shall be credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia, as hereinbefore provided." The gentleman from Virginia is familiar with the construction placed upon it by the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.
The CHAIRMAN. What is the construction of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SAUNDERS. It strikes me that the language used is appropriate to carry out the intention of Congress, having in mind that the interest was already included as a part of these The act of 1874 provided that the committee should report a proper proportion of the expenses of the District government, including interest on the funded debt which should be borne respectively by the District and the Government. Later the half-and-half principle was adopted. The language cited was intended I think to carry out that purpose. It may not be very well drawn, but it has always been interpreted to carry the meaning that Congress intended to pay, and assumed to pay one-half of this interest. We should look to the main intent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was interested to have the gentleman's construction in view of the emphasis laid upon it by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to one further matter. The language of one of these acts, considered apart, might give difficulty. I refer to the act of 1879. I frankly admit that standing alone, this paragraph does not very well convey the idea that the Government will pay one-half of the funded indebtedness, the funded 3.65 bonds. For this reason I submitted the cotemporaneous debate on that paragraph when it was submitted.

For that reason I referred the Chair to the principles of statutory construction that inapt language must be construed with reference to the general intent of an entire body of legislation on one subject. I will admit that the language of the act of 1879, "is hereby appropriated out of the proportional sum," standing alone, might give difficulty. I freely admit that. But when the language of that paragraph is interpreted in connection with what precedes it, with the legislation of which it forms a part, the difficulty is removed. But how can any difficulty remain as to this paragraph when it has been construed by a previous occupant of the chair, and stamped with the meaning given to it by the body which enacted it, in the first instance?

If the language is construed literally, the amount appropriated would be taken out of the appropriation for the expenses of the District of Columbia, and, to that extent, the Chair will observe, the Government would not pay that part of the expenses of the District of Columbia for which it was legitimately bound. That would follow, if you stickle over the exact language of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The thought that was in the mind of the Chair is this: Of course, the Chair is only interested in the question whether or not there is authority to appropriate.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Of course.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Chair is to pass upon. With the administration of the fund afterwards the Chair has nothing to do.

Mr. SAUNDERS. No, we have nothing to do with that. If there has been any abuse of administration it ought to be dealt with in a drastic way.

The CHAIRMAN. If the language "is hereby appropriated out of the proportional sum" is to be construed that this is to come out of the proportional part as, for instance, of this bill which is before us here, that would create a deficit so far as the Government part is concerned in these expenses.

That is precisely the point presented. Mr. SAUNDERS. it is taken out of the part the Government has appropriated for expenses, that appropriation not including a provision for the sinking fund, then as we have seen the Government would fail to pay one-half of the expenses of the District. Now this language, however inapt it may be, has been stamped with a meaning. It is the meaning given to it by Mr. Atkins, Mr. Blackburn, Mr. Hendee, Mr. Hale, Mr. Hewitt, and others. This meaning is that when the Congress passed the act of 1879, the Government assumed in the language of Mr. Black-burn, "to pay in its own capacity one-half of this debt."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an interruption at this place inasmuch as both of us desire to talk about this one subject?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, before that is done I want to make this suggestion: From my viewpoint the purpose of that was to strengthen these bonds. These bonds theretofore had been selling at less than par, and it was decided that it was expedient that out of the proportional sum to be appropriated by the Federal Government the interest and sinking fund should be a charge, and if the proportional part was $2,000,000 and the District government was to put up $2,000,000 to offset it, mathematically and legally the effect would be the same, the sole purpose in saying it shall be taken out of the General Government's proportional part being to have the effect of strengthening these bonds which had been selling at less than par.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Has the Chair Volume XX before him?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair has not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, let us take the act of March 3, 1879, which immediately follows the organic act of 1878. It will be found on page 410 of Volume XX. Does the Chair not find there this provision:

For the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, $1,155,583.55. That is what is now in the bill under consideration. The figures in this are slightly reduced from those given in the act of March 3, 1879.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.
Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then, Mr. Chairman, if in 1879, the very next year after the adoption of the organic act, that section is put in, pray tell me why that which follows should be put in:

And there is hereby appropriated, out of the proportional sum which the United States may contribute toward the expenses of the District of Columbia, in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and annually thereafter, such sums as will with the interest thereon at the rate of 3.65 per cent per annum, etc.

Is it not patent to anybody that those two sections contemplated two different bond issues? The first item was for the interest and sinking fund on the old funded debt, being for the bonded debt which the District of Columbia, under the commission form of government, inherited from the Territorial form of government; and those bonds have been paid out of this fund and destroyed. Yet that appropriation, because nobody chose to make a point of order against it, has stood all of these years without ever having been authorized—authority upon the statute books; when, immediately following it, is this provision for a sinking fund for 3.65 per cent bonds. All of these years those who have drafted this bill and advocated its passage have been afraid to copy that next section, and that is what I ask that now be put into this bill. I ask nothing more. I ask that the provision which appropriated one million and odd dollars for the retirement of the old funded debt be stricken out, because that old funded debt has long since been paid. To-day the funded debt of the District of Columbia is made up of the 3.65 funded debt of the District of Columbia is made up of bonds. More than $8,000,000 of the old funded debt, created by legislative act under the provisional form of government, have surely contemplated two bond issues-the old bonded debt and the 3.65 per cent bonded debt.

I now propose to read into this appropriation bill that act which relates not to the old bonded debt, the bonds of which have been paid off years ago, but that act which relates only to the 3.65 bonds.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate has proceeded so far upon the idea that this debt, whatever it was, referred to those 3.65 bonds. The Chair, as a matter of fact, was not aware of any other funded debt.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I took it for granted that the Chair had responded to my modest request, and had read very carefully all I said in the speech made upon the floor of this House a week ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has done so; the Chair has read it twice

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And I said then, and I repeat now, that the commission form of government which now exists took over $8,000,000 of bonds from the Territorial form of government. Some of these bonds were then 30 or 40 years old, and if they were in existence now some would be 75 or 80 years old; but they have been all retired, out of the appropriation which is now continued in this bill. I ask that only the law which relates to the 3.65 bonds be carried in this act, because there are no other bonds.

Now, Mr. Chairman, for the information of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who made an inquiry awhile ago, what Mr. Blackburn said I do not consider binding upon this House any more than my opinion is binding upon any future House and no more than the opinion of the gentleman from Virginia will bind any future House. But here is what Mr. Blackburn said, if you want to know:

you want to know:

Mr. Blackburn. I desire to say that if every Member of this House will read one of the other sections of this bill he will see that this bill does not propose to make the Federal Government responsible for one dollar of the debt of the District of Columbia or one dollar of the interest of that debt. It simply proposes to make the Government of the United States pay one-half of the current expenses of the District.

Then it goes on further and provides that as the Federal Government is already bound to guarantee the payment of the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District, every dollar that the Government of the United States pays as interest on that bonded debt of the District shall be accredited to it upon such portion of the current expenses as it assumes. This bill nowhere makes the Federal Treasury responsible for one dollar of the debt of this District, either of the principal or of the interest. But it does say that the Government of the United States shall pay 50 per cent of the current expenses of the District and that it shall have credit on that payment for every dollar of interest it pays.

Mr. SAUNDERS. What page?

Mr. SAUNDERS. What page?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I read from the Congressional RECORD of May 6, 1878.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is the difference-

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No difference in what Mr. Blackburn said.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is from a debate at a different time, and under different circumstances, and related to a different subject matter. I read from the debate of 1879 which related to the item that is now inserted in the bill, and while I understand perfectly well there were two issues of these bonds, yet I maintain that these 3.65 bonds are part of the $22,000,000 indebtedness. This is what Mr. Blackburn said in 1879,

Mr. Blackburn. I answer that this provision of the report of the committee of conference binds this Government in its own capacity to the payment of half the debt.

Mr. Mills. How much is that?

Mr. Blackburn. I think about $22,000,000, in round numbers. I answer further that, in my judgment, for the payment of $8,000,000 of that sum neither the Government of the United States nor the District of Columbia nor anybody else is responsible.

There is no question about what this means. Government in its own capacity to one-half the debt, and that is the $22,000,000, of which he says $8,000,000 is not owed by anybody. Mr. Blackburn also says:

Also to fasten upon the Government of the United States one-half of an obligation of $22,000,000, not one cent of which the Government ever owed or is obligated by law to pay, and $8,000,000 of which I deny that anybody owes.

So that you see in arguing this specific item Mr. Blackburn's status and attitude are brought out, as to the aggregate indebtedness of $22,000,000. A large portion of this has been discharged. This was the attitude of that gentleman at that time and while the gentleman from Kentucky is perfectly right in respect to the two issues, yet I say that this proposition is also true that when the amendment in the sundry civil bill was debated in that body all the debaters, both the friends and opponents of this item, agreed as to its meaning, and with that knowledge, passed this act, and wrote it into law. Thereafter the gentle-man from Kentucky, Mr. Blackburn, who was for years a Member of this body, never raised any question over this item but continued the same item in the subsequent appropriation This stamps, and properly stamps this act, with the meaning for which we contend.

The Chair is perfectly right in its suggestion. It carries the same thought I sought to present, namely that if you take that section literally, if you deduct the appropriation for the sinking fund from the total appropriation for expenses, then the Government will not pay one-half of the expenses as agreed, and for which it is bound.

Mr. Chairman, what I say with respect to that section is, that it plainly means that the Government, set aside, so far as the formula of the bookkeeping is concerned, a sum for the payment of the sinking fund, and one-half of it was to be deliberately assumed by the Government as an obligation from that time forward. Congress assumed that debt with knowledge, and we have been knowingly acting in conformity with the precedent from that time to the present. The actors in that debate, who have long since passed away, never challenged a subsequent appropriation for this purpose or doubted that it was supported by existing law. In addition to all that may be said in this connection the same question has been ruled upon, in this House, and that precedent has been cited to the present occupant of the Chair.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have not heard this whole discussion, but so far as I have heard it, and so far as I have been able to hear the acts of Congress that have been cited, I have difficulty in finding any obligation upon, or any authority for, the United States to pay one-half of the principal of these bonds.

In the act of 1874, providing for the selection of a joint committee, it was provided:

That they shall also prepare and submit to Congress a statement on the proper proportion of the expense of said Government or any branch thereof, including interest on the funded debt.

Not the principal, but the interest.

In the second section of that act it is declared:

That the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will pay proper proportional appropriations contemplated in this act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will pardon me one minute, turn back to section 5, and he will see there is the bonded debt to which they refer, and which, I say, Mr. Chairman, has been during these long years paid off and retired by that appropriation of one million and some odd thousand

Mr. OLMSTED. I am not prepared to dispute that proposi-But the provision in the seventh section, pledging the United States, is that it will make the proportional appropriation provided for in this act, which is a proportionate part of the interest. There is nothing said in this act about paying any part of the principal of whatever bonds are referred to. the act of 1879 is, if I correctly understood the gentleman from Virginia, an appropriation bill. It may be conceded that in that act and in subsequent appropriation bills there have year after year been appropriations made for payment of parts of the funded debt. But that does not establish the fact that there is authority of law for such appropriations. It may be that there is, but I have not seen it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit? The section to which the attention of the Chair has been called, which is claimed as authority for one-half of the principal-that is, onehalf of the sinking fund-seems to be permanent law.

Mr. OLMSTED. What act is that?
The CHAIRMAN. That is the act in the sundry civil bill.
Mr. SAUNDERS. The act of 1879.
The CHAIRMAN. The act of 1879. It says:

There is hereby appropriated, out of the proportional sum which the United States may contribute to the District of Columbia in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and annually thereafter, such sum as will, with the interest thereon, at the rate of 3.65 per cent per annum, be sufficient to pay the principal of the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia.

Mr. OLMSTED. That seems to be a permanent appropriation as to the 3.65 bonds.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the Chair understands my position is that that ought to be in this act, and that that which is before it, on page 410, should not be in here, because there is no law anywhere in the statutes authorizing that provision.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I had intended, if the Chair please, to go into this matter in some detail. As the Chair knows, some months ago, in the effort to get this very question before the House, knowing that it would arise when this bill was presented, I endeavored to go through the laws governing the issuance of these bonds and the authority for their payment on the half-and-half plan, and presented my views to the House. I have no doubt that the Chair has before him in some form a portion, if not all, of my remarks made on that occasion.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] has so elaborately covered the ground which my remarks and my views covered that it seems almost unnecessary for me to extend my remarks on this occasion to any great length. The Chair asked a very pertinent question as to what construction the gentleman from Virginia placed upon the language of that portion of the act of 1878 which provides that-

Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia, issued in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, when the same shall become due and payable, and all amounts so paid shall be credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia, as hereinbefore provided.

My idea of the meaning of that act would be about this, as an illustration: If the Government's 50 per cent, we will say, amounted to $1,000,000, and the interest on these bonds was $500,000, the Secretary of the Treasury would pay the interest, and there would only be available for the expenses of the District of Columbia $1,000,000, secured by taxation, and the halfmillion-dollar balance left after paying the interest. To use an arbitrary example, say that the total expenses of the District are $10,000,000.

The portion payable by the United States would be $5,000,000. The interest on the debt paid by the Secretary of the Treasury would be $500,000. Crediting the latter sum, which covers $250,000 that the United States must pay under section 3 of the act of 1878, and $250,000 which is advanced by the United States as it were for its partner in this business, the District of Columbia, there remains $4,500,000 as the portion of the United States to be paid on account of the whole $10,000,000. The result thus arrived at is exactly the same as we have under the practice begun with the initial appropriation act passed in 1880, and followed annually since, of including in the annual appropriation bill the two permanent appropriations made by the acts of 1878 and 1879 for the joint payments out of the Treasury and out of the District revenues of the interest charge and on sinking-fund requirements of the District of Columbia funded debt.

This law requires the United States, out of its funds, to pay a certain joint liability and to be credited with the amount of such payment on the whole sum of its pro rata share of the total joint liability. If such credit were not required and given, then the United States would be in the attitude of not only having paid its share of this annual interest charge, but it would have paid the share of the District, too, without reimbursement. If this credit was not required the United States would pay more than one-half of the expenses by assuming to pay this joint liability in addition to its one-half. The only way to reach the District for its share of this advance payment is to credit the United States with the whole payment, as required by law, on the total of its joint liability for the whole sum of the District expenses

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that is a fair illustration of the workings of this law. It is interesting at this point to call attention to a few of the debates running through the general debate on the act of 1878, as indicating the understanding of the then Members of the House as to the responsibility of the Government under the language which I have heretofore quoted. set forth in the act of 1874, wherein the Government of the United States pledges its credit to the payment of the interest and principal of the bonds.

On March 18, 1878, Mr. Eden, in discussing whether House bill No. 2917, authorizing the Commissioners of the District to audit certain claims against the District, should be considered in the House or in the Committee of the Whole, entered into a discussion of the act of June 20, 1874, in which he says, on page 1841 of the act of June 20, 1874, provides that the sinking-fund commissioners of said District are hereby continued and that it shall be the duty of said sinking-fund commissioners to cause the bonds of the District of Columbia to be prepared in sums of $50 and $500, bearing date 1st of August, 1874, and payable 50 years after date, and bearing interest at the rate of 3.63 per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, etc., going on to describe the bonds—and then it further provides that the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations, as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied on property within the District such tax as will provide revenue to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due, and for payment of the principal thereof at maturity. It will be seen that the Government of the United States is pledged to pay a proportional part of the bonds which are provided for in the act of June, 1870, and that is the act which is referred to in this bill, under which the additional bonds are to be issued. If those bonds are issued, the law pledges the faith of the Government to make the necessary appropriations to pay them. Consequently, it comes directly within the rule.

The Speaker sustained this point, and the bill under consideration was placed on the Union Calendar.

In the running debate on the act of 1878 Mr. Cox of Ohio who opposed the payment of either the principal or the interest, made the following statement on page 3223 of the RECORD of May 6, 1878, in referring to the language which I have heretofore quoted:

The language of that section demonstrates the fact that I was stating. It provides that the amount so paid by the Government of the United States on the interest of the debt of the District "shall be credited as part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District." It thereby recognizes the fact that this bill makes the interest on the debt of the District a part of the current expenses of the District, of which the Government of the United States is to pay 50 per cent. There is no way of getting from it. If gentlemen of the Committee for the District of Columbia did not intend that, then they should have used other language in the bill.

J. C. S. Blackburn of Kentucky, during this colloquy, in which both Mr. Cox of Ohio and Mr. Cox of New York opposed this section, in reply to their arguments, said as follows:

this section, in reply to their arguments, said as follows:

Will the gentleman allow me to read a single sentence in the act approved June 20, 1874, in order to let the House see whether he and the gentleman from Ohio are right when they say that the Government is under no obligations whatever in this regard? I read from page 120 of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 18: "And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations, as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will provide revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity."

Mr. Cox of New York. That does not bear out the gentleman's position.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply desire to ask, in the face of that proposi-tion, whether there was to be no proportionate assessment of expenses between the Government and the District? Mr. Cox of New York. If that were so understood, I would vote to repeal the statute. I do not believe such was the intention when it was

Mr. Blackburn. Let the gentieman introduce his bill to that effect, but he should not deny the responsibility of the Government while the statute stands unrepealed.

Mr. Buckner, who was a Democrat from Missouri and chairman of the District of Columbia Committee in the House in the preceding Congress, further along in the debate offered an amendment in an effort to create a sinking fund to take care of the principal and interest. This amendment was not passed, but is interesting. In speaking on the same, he says:

but is interesting. In speaking on the same, he says:

I will state to the gentleman what I desire this Congress to do. My amendment provides that the Government of the United States shall comply with the obligations which it incurred by the act of 1874. The Committee on the District of Columbia by this bill provides for complying with that obligation only in part. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on this debt, amounting to one-half million dollars a year. That, however, is only a part compliance with the obligations which this Government entered into with these bond-holders. That obligation was that by appropriations and by taxation the Government would provide a sinking fund whereby to liquidate this debt. Now, what is proposed by this bill in regard to this debt which will become due 45 years hence? This bill proposes to pay the interest on that debt, and so far it is a compliance with the obligations of the act of 1874. But what is to be done with the principal of the debt at the end of that time? Would you repudiate it? Is that the point? I have been charged, with others, with being willing to repudiate the obligations of the Government. But I am for maintaining its obligations, and for that purpose I have moved an amendment requiring a certain percentage to be set aside to make a sinking fund.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as has been said, at the time the act of Now, Mr. Chairman, as has been said, at the time the act of 1878 was passed, the funded debt of the District of Columbia was $22,106,650. This consisted of a number of bond issues other than the 3.65 bonds, which alone now remain as the outstanding debt against the District. By reductions under this very item, which has been carried since 1879, there have been paid off $13,218,250 worth of bonds, and there were outstanding last July, I think, 3.65 bonds in the total sum of $8,880,400. No other bonds are now outstanding. At the time the act of 1878 was passed the Treasurer of the United States was made sinking-fund commissioner in lieu of the former commission.

Now, I stand on the question of interpretation. We have here three acts that are to be vital to this question and must be construed together-the act of 1874, the act of 1878, and the act of 1879. The acts of 1878 and 1879 were passed by the same Congress, and under any rule of interpretation should be read together and be considered as one act.

The most conspicuous participant in the debates in the House was Mr. J. C. S. Blackburn, afterwards Senator from Kentucky, then a Member of the House, who admitted that under the act of 1878 the United States was obligated to pay one-half the interest on the debt, and he opposed the passage of the act of 1879 because he said it also made the United States assume onehalf of the principal of the debt. Mr. Blackburn was a member of the Committee on Appropriations in the next Congress, and became a member of the subcommittee in charge of the first separate District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was Up to that year the District of Columbia appassed in 1880. propriation had been carried in the sundry civil appropriation , and it appeared first in 1880, with Mr. J. C. S. Blackburn actively in charge of it. These two acts, of 1878 and 1879, providing for the interest and the principal, are unquestionable and undisputed permanent annual appropriations.

Those who knew Senator Blackburn, his tenacity of purpose, his superb qualities as a debater, his love of a controversy when it was worth while, will never accept seriously the suggestion that he overlooked the advantages of his place on the Committee on Appropriations and on the subcommittee preparing the District bill to reopen a question on which he had expressed such emphatic views if he had not regarded that question as settled, and settled for all time.

I claim, in following these various acts through to their conclusion, by reading the debates which show the unquestioned interpretation of the Members engaged in them, both proponents and opponents of the measure, that certain well-known rules of interpretation must be considered in construing them, and I base my conclusions upon these rules of interpretation and construction of statutes.

It is a well-known rule that in the construction of a particular statute, or in the interpretation of any of its provisions, all acts relating to the same subject matter or having the same general purpose, should be read in connection with it as together constituting one law. The endeavor should be made at all times to ascertain the purpose of the legislature. This rule, that statutes relating to the same subject matter should be construed together, applies particularly to statutes passed by the same legislature, as were the acts of 1878 and 1879, and both of which were manifestly intended to carry out the provisions of the act of 1874. There is abundant authority for the presumption that such acts are imbued with the same spirit and actuated by the same policy, and they are to be construed together as parts of the same act. I do not concede that there is in any sense ambiguity in the language of either the acts of 1874, 1878, or 1879, but rather that they plainly place the duty upon the United States Government to pay half the sinking fund and interest.

A cardinal principle of the construction of statutes is to ascertain and give effect to the intent of the body making the law which enacted it, and if there should remain any doubt in the mind of the Chair as to the intent of the legislature enacting the laws under which this debt is being paid, a glance at the debates cited will establish the fact that the Congress which enacted the law and the individual Members who actively participated in the debates on this question accepted without question the interpretation that the intent of Congress was to provide for the interest and create a sinking fund for the retirement of the District debt by enacting the acts of 1878 and 1879, and that the Government should participate on the half-and-half basis in paying this item of expense.

I will not speak on the debates covering the act of 1879. My colleague [Mr. Saunders] very elaborately went into those debates. I will only advert for a moment to the statement of Mr. Atkins, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and Mr. Blackburn, who afterwards was a member of that committee, both of whom opposed the bill bitterly for the sole reason that if that measure was enacted into law it would bind the Government of the United States, which had already been bound by the act of 1878, to the payment of one-half of the interest and also the payment of one-half of the principal of the debt. The decision of the Chair on the De Armond amendment gives every justification in the way of precedent for the chairman to overrule the pending point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman sits down, will the gentleman from Ohio permit the Chair to ask him what he says as to the contention of the gentleman from Kentucky that the expression in the bill as it stands and in the sundry civil bill as to the interest in the sinking fund and the funded debt, and so forth, and the subsequent section in the sundry civil bill, which provides that-

There is hereby appropriated out of the proportional sum which the United States may contribute toward the expenses of the District-

And so forth.

What does the gentleman say as to the contention that the two items cover different indebtedness?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I do not think there is anything in the contention whatever. The only funded debt in existence priating for bonds not in contemplation of the act.

to-day is that secured by the so-called 3.65 bonds, authorized to be issued by the act of 1874. It is not the duty of the Chair to look into the history of the funded debt, but I have done so, and I will give the Chair a minute's history of it. There were a number of issues of bonds other than the 3.65 bonds. bond issues all had sinking-fund provisions for their retirement at some time. The report of the Treasurer of the United States, which I am relying upon, suggested that they should bring them all in together and create a new sinking fund covering all the indebtedness, including the 3.65 bonds.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. When was that done? Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I can not give the exact date.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I should like to ask the gentleman to cite to the Chair any sinking-fund act except the one of March 3, 1879.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I have not looked up the various sinking-fund acts. There were certain other bonds authorized, any they were all provided for by some legal authority, running back I do not know how long.

Mr. BURLESON. And let me say that the only bonds being dealt with by this item are the 3.65 bonds.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Yes; the 3.65 bonds; and only $8,000,000 of those out of nearly $15,000,000 remain unpaid.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And therefore the words in this bill and the words just above, the second provision, are without authority at law. There is no such language, no law in the history of the Government, that authorized such a thing; and, notwithstanding, it has been in the law for a number of years. I say there is no law authorizing it. There is a sinking-fund act which is good now, and that is the act which I am perfectly willing, as a matter of justice to all the bondholders, shall be inserted in this appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the committee to indulge him on this point of order. It is an important question, and it seems the bill can not be finished this afternoon.

Mr. BURLESON. There is no objection to its going over.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will indulge me an additional moment, I want to address myself briefly to a question I meant to advert to when I was interrupted.

The Chair asked the gentleman from Ohio what interpretation he would put upon the language:

there is hereby appropriated, out of the proportional sum which the United States may contribute toward the expenses of the District of Columbia in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, etc., such sums as will with the interest thereon at the rate of 3.65 cents per annum be sufficient to pay the principal, * * * which said sum the Secretary of the Treasury shall annually invest in said bonds at not exceeding the par value thereof.

If the Chair asked me what interpretation I would put on that section apart from anything else, I would frankly say I might have difficulty about it. If the Chair means what interpretation should be put on that section in the light of cognate statutes, in the light of the debates on the subject at the time the section was adopted, then the answer becomes easy. That section certainly provides for the 3.65 bonds, and they are the only bonds in existence to-day, as I understand the situation. They are the only ones for which the sinking fund is now

As to whether that section provides for the assumption on the part of the United States of the extinguishment of one-half of the 3.65 bonds. I refer the Chair to the debates at the time the section was adopted. It is true if you look to the letter of this section, disregarding everything else, a very curious and anomalous result would be created, one which has never been acted upon by anybody in connection with this matter. It would create that deficit which was embodied in the question propounded by the Chair to me when I was on my feet heretofore. But I respectfully submit to the Chair that difficulties which arise in the interpretation of sections which are separated for the purpose of interpretation, and are considered as separate and unrelated sections, vanish when you use matter in pari materia, matter that was before the body that enacted the item, or section under consideration. If in the light of the context, and of cotemporaneous debate you ask me what that language means, I have no difficulty in answering the question.

It is perfectly apparent that what it means is to create a sinking fund for the bonds of the 3.65 issue, one-half of which in the language of Mr. Blackburn and in the language of Mr. Hewitt, and in the language of all the participants of that debate, is to be paid by the Government of the United States. If heretofore any payments had been made out of that sinking fund improperly, on other bonds, we are not concerned with such payments at this time, because we are not now approappropriating for bonds which it was the clear intent of the Congress that enacted the section should be provided for. We are only providing for one-half of the sinking fund necessary for the extinguishment of these particular bonds, and for the interest.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion of what I have to say, I wish the Chair to bear in mind that I am not discussing the half-and-half proposition. I make the one allegation: That this sinking fund and interest matter has never been authorized by any law. If it has been, then the burden is upon the other side of this question to produce the law. I do admit that there is a 3.65 bond sinking fund, and I insist that that should go into this bill, just as it went into the act creating it in 1879, which was the first act after the organic act of 1878.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional building and heating plant to be connected with existing buildings, including architect's fees, under a contract to be made by the board of trustees, $60,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. We have a municipal architect in the District whose duty it is to supervise the construction of buildings. There seems to be only one new building provided for in this bill, and that is this one. This provides for another architect. What is the reason for that?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that this is a United States institution and is directly under the Department of Justice. It is controlled by a board of directors appointed by the President of the United States, and while the item for the institution is carried in this bill and one-half of its expense is defrayed by the District government, yet it was thought advisable that we give the board of directors who control it the authority to select an architect to prepare the plans for the building.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Is it not also true that the plans have already been made by an outside architect, and this simply carries forward the work?

Mr. BURLESON. I believe that is true.

Mr. MANN. Prepared without any authority?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. No; last year the appropriation was carried for those plans.

Mr. MANN. We have a Supervising Architect, and why should we provide for architect's fees for another architect?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, in last year's bill, as was said by the gentleman from Ohio, an item was carried providing for the preparation of plans for the building authorized in this bill. The item authorizing the construction of the building is in this bill, but, as I have said, the institution is under the control of the Department of Justice, and an item was carried in last year's bill to provide for the preparation of the plans.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the Supervising Architect's Office is engaged in the preparation of plans for public buildings. Plans of that character would hardly be suitable for a building in connection with a reform school. The types of building are not the same, and, in any event, it would have taken three or four years to have them prepared in that office.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I apprehend that the Supervising Architect, for a building that is needed, can very quickly prepare the plans, and is quite competent to do so, whether for a reform school or for a reform post office.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman undertake to suggest that the buildings authorized by Congress are not needed?

Mr. MANN. I undertake to suggest, as long as the gentleman asks me the question, that many of the buildings authorized by Congress are not at all needed and are gross extravagance.

We have endeavored to eliminate all such Mr. BURLESON.

buildings from this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Against the protest of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not eliminated from this bill

"all such" buildings, but all buildings.

Mr. BURLESON. I read to the gentleman the item relating to this building carried in last year's bill. It says, "For plans and specifications for additional building and heating plant, to cost not to exceed $60,000, $500"; a very modest sum. Mr. MANN. I can see that it is intended the architect shall be paid not out of the $500 appropriated, but out of the $60,000 which was appropriated for this purpose. Here we provide for plans to be prepared at the expense of $500 and thereupon we insert, which is subject to the point of order, for the construction of the building and pay of architect's fees paid out of the appropriation for the building.

Mr. GARNER. Is there any authority of law for the payment unless you have a specific appropriation?

Mr. MANN. There is.

Mr. GARNER. In addition to the $500 he can be paid out of the amount that was heretofore appropriated, out of the $60,000 3

Mr. MANN. Yes; the gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. GARNER. Does not the gentleman from Illinois think there should be some limit as to what should be paid the architect for drawing these plans and specifications?

Mr. MANN. Well, I reserved the point of order upon the paragraph in order to elicit the information for the benefit of myself from the gentleman from Texas-

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman, further-

But having great confidence in the committee in charge of the matter I shall withdraw the point of order. I now withdraw the point of order on the explanation given; anybody can renew it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to reserve the point of order. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill—I am not exactly familiar with the item, and I just came in while it was being discussed—there is a provision in this bill for the municipal architect, is there not?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.
Mr. MADDEN. And I believe the gentleman remembers the discussion that took place in the committee at the time the office was created.

Mr. BURLESON. Quite well.

Mr. MADDEN. To the effect that it was necessary to have a municipal architect in order that he might be able to make plans for any buildings that might be required to be constructed in the District.

Mr. BURLESON. That was our purpose in creating the division.

Mr. MADDEN. And it was argued by the commissioners and by men who represented the District before the committee then, if the gentleman will recall, that it would be a much more economical method of conducting the affairs of the District than it would be to employ outside architects whenever they required them.

Mr. BURLESON. I remember it quite well. Mr. MADDEN. Now, as this seems to go outside of that provision-

Mr. BURLESON. I would like to read to the gentleman what was said when, during the hearings, we raised that question which the gentleman now raises. The president of the board of trustees made this reply:

The question of right to select an architect came up this last summer, and the Comptroller of the Treasury rendered an opinion wherein be held all our buildings belonged to the United States Government, and that the board of trustees has the power to employ an architect to prepare the plans.

Now, on the strength of that ruling and that the board had made an arrangement with an architect, who has already prepared plans, etc., we thought that it was only right, under the circumstances, that this item should be carried in the bill as it is framed.

Mr. MADDEN. I just wish to ask my friend from Texas whether or not the creation of the office of municipal architect was not a mistake?

Mr. BURLESON. It was not a mistake. It has resulted in great economy, and I will say to the gentleman, because he was on the committee at the time the office was created, that in the report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia this year a high tribute is paid the municipal architect as to amount of labor performed and as to economies accomplished by the creation of that office. In fact, every reason that impelled us at the time to create this division has been amply justified and sustained in this year's report of the commissioners. especially commend the work of this very efficient officer.

Mr. MADDEN. Then this Committee on Appropriations say that it is not within the power of the Committee on Appropriations to restrict the payment of architects' fees to the salary paid to the municipal architect and his assistants, but, on the contrary, every branch of the Government service within the District having buildings to erect may call upon an architect for this purpose.

Mr. BURLESON. In this particular case, as I have just read, the matter was submitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury, and he ruled that this being a building owned by the United States and under the Department of Justice the board controlling it had the right to employ an architect, and it did so, and the architect has prepared a number of plans for this

Mr. MADDEN. Does this extend to any broader field than the particular building now before the House?

Mr. BURLESON. No; the municipal architect is discharging all duties it was intended to impose upon him at the time the office was created.

Let me ask my friend from Texas [Mr. Mr. MADDEN. BURLESON] one more question, please. Does the municipal architect make the plans for the fire-engine houses, police stations, and schoolhouses, or are there special fees paid to special architects for doing this work?

Mr. BURLESON. The municipal architect makes all the plans for school buildings, fire-engine houses, and police stations unless there is special authorization by law for employment of outside architects.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it the policy of the Committee on Appropriations to make recommendations for the employment of special architects or is it the policy of the committee to compel the municipal architect really to do all the work it was intended he should do when the office was created?

Mr. BURLESON. He has been compelled to do all the work he should do as a result of the creation of this division.

Mr. MADDEN. When the school buildings are ordered to be erected is it the policy of the District government and the board of education to call in outside architects in order that they may get a variety of designs for the school buildings, or do they, as a matter of fact, impose the duty of making the plans for new buildings upon the man who is paid for making them and whose office was created for making them?

Mr. BURLESON. The duty is imposed upon the municipal architect to prepare the plans and specifications for school buildings, and he has been discharging those duties very acceptably, very efficiently, and at a great saving to the General Government and the District.

Mr. MADDEN. I thank the gentleman. Mr. GARNER. Will my colleague let me ask him a question?

Mr. BURLESON. With pleasure.

Mr. GARNER. Is it desirable to have the municipal architect draw the plans for this building?

Mr. BURLESON. Because of the circumstances which I have detailed, and because of the fact that the Comptroller of the Treasury held that this institution is under control of the Department of Justice, because of the item that was carried in last year's appropriation bill authorizing the preparation of plans for the building, the board of directors by virtue of authority then conferred upon them, employed an architect to prepare plans.

Mr. GARNER. But if it was advisable and economical to have the municipal architect draw these plans can not you so frame this item that the Comptroller of the Treasury would be compelled to pay no portion of it to an outside architect?

To illustrate, could you not strike out the words, "including architects' fees," and put a provision in there providing that no portion of this shall be paid for architects' fees and that the drawings shall be made by the District architect?

Mr. BURLESON. We could. I think that would be a limitation upon the appropriation carried in this bill, but the employment has already been made, as I have stated to the gentleman, under an item carried in last year's appropriation bill.

Mr. GARNER. Have the plans and specifications already been drawn for this additional building?

Mr. BURLESON. I think I have read the gentleman the item carried in last year's bill—the appropriation calling for plans for this building. Those in charge of the institution selected an architect, and they state plans have been made.

Mr. GARNER. Was the architect paid out of the appropriation for the plans and specifications he has already made?

Mr. BURLESON. I suppose he was in part. familiar with the details of the contract made with him.

Mr. GARNER. It appears these plans and specifications have already been drawn under a provision of the bill that was passed last year.

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.
Mr. GARNER. If it is, I do not see any necessity for additional architects' fees at this time.

Mr. BURLESON. It may be the sum carried was not suffi-I do not know.

Mr. MADDEN. I withdraw the point, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter patients may be admitted to Freedmen's Hospital for care and treatment on the payment of such reasonable charges therefor as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe. All money so collected shall be paid into the Treasury, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to the section on the ground of its having legislation in it. It is the word "hereafter." It is my desire to strike out the word "Hereafter," if the gentleman will agree to it, and insert in lieu of it the words "During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that if the point of order is sustained it would necessitate carrying this item every year in the bill. Under the rule we think this item as framed is in order. It requires that patients who go into this hospital shall pay. It imposes no obligation on the part of the Government, but relieves the Government and the District of Columbia of a burden heretofore borne without any reimbursement from this particular class of people who have been treated heretofore in the hospital.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman that I was only desiring time to look into it.

Mr. COX of Ohio. The item was carried in the bill at the expressed wish of the colored people. They wish to be treated there, but under the present conditions they have first to certify that they are paupers before they can receive medical attention. They simply wanted to be permitted to pay for medical treatment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Texas agree to my amendment?

Mr. BURLESON. I do not think it is subject to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] what difference there is between this item and the item that went out the other day on a point of order in regard to the school children?

Mr. BURLESON. I will state that this item on its face necessarily reduces the expenses of the Government and the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARNER. Because it requires them to pay?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; because it requires a certain class of patients to pay; and, as it is now, they receive this service without charge, and this item imposes upon them an obligation

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] withdraws his point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the care and treatment of indigent patients, under a contract to be made with the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum by the Board of Charities, not to exceed $20,000.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to that item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows: Strike out the word "two," in line 22, page 82, and insert the word thirty," so as to read: "For repairs to the Columbia Hospital, "thirty," $30,000."

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just a word in reference to this amendment. The Columbia Hospital was purchased by the Government in 1866, and the act specified that it must be used for the purpose of a lying-in institution and for the treatment of diseases of women. This is a governmental institution, in which the Government owns the building and all the grounds connected therewith. The record shows that since 1866 the Government has spent upon this building for maintenance and repairs about $991,000. Originally the building was a residence, and afterwards, at the time indicated, was converted into a hospital.

Now, in looking over the record, it is found that there is a peculiar condition of affairs which has existed in this city for a good many years. For instance, take the Children's Hospital. I do not desire to go back a great length of time, but let us go back for 10 years, say, and in that case you will find that for the Children's Hospital from 1901 to 1912 there has been appropriated for maintenance $165,000 and for alterations and improvements of buildings $39,000.

These are institutions, I desire to remind the committee, in which the Government has no interest whatever. We find that for the National Homeopathic Hospital, in which the Government has no interest whatever and owns not a dollar's worth of property, there was appropriated from 1901 to 1912 for reconstruction and completion of buildings $68.668.62 and for maintenance $103,000. We find that for Providence Hospital we have appropriated in the 10 years named for maintenance and new buildings $993,879.60. At one time we appropriated for additional buildings the amount of $200,000. we paid a mortgage upon Providence Hospital amounting to $150,000.

Another time we paid for the reconstruction and completion of the old Providence Hospital building, $100,000; for reimbursement for expenses in the reconstruction of buildings, $130,000; erection and equipment of power house and nurses'

$50,000; erection and furnishing of nurses' home, $50,000; heating and lighting and power plant, machinery, and so forth, $34,950. We also paid $500 for screening of doors and windows of that institution. This is another institution in which the Government does not own one dollar.

We find that for the Garfield Memorial Hospital, another one in which the Government has no interest, in 10 years we paid We purchased land and gave it to for maintenance $295,000. them to the amount of $50,000, and for another purchase of land we paid $25,000. We erected some buildings for them, for heating, cooking, and laundry, and furnishing same, $100,000; erection of retaining wall around the hospital grounds, $24,430; improvement of ground, $13,300; for building another retaining wall, $14,000; additional repairs and furniture, and covered connecting main building and children's new ward, $10,000; making a total in the 10 years of $539,000.

Mr. GARNER. Have we any interest in that?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. None whatever. We do not own a dollar's interest in this institution.

We find that during these same 10 years the Columbia Hospital for Women, a building in which the Government owns every dollar, paid for maintenance $240,000; for repairs during these 10 years, $26,000; for erection of fire escapes, electric wiring, and so forth, $2,500; new boiler, $1,500; reimbursement for expenditure for indigent patients in excess of appropriation, $2,475.80; making a total in the 10 years of $272,825.80.

What I desire to call attention to is this: That here is a Government property, owned and controlled by the Government. The Government appoints the trustees. We have conment. The Government appoints the trustees. trol of this institution, and yet in all these years since 1866 down to the present time we have paid less for the maintenance and for the keeping and repair of that building than we have paid in 10 years for one other hospital in the city of Washington. More than that, that building has been patched each time a little appropriation has been given to it until it is simply a patchwork, and it ought to be condemned. If we propose to maintain a hospital of this character in the city of Washington, we ought to spend a sufficient amount of money upon it to make it fireproof, so that the patients there may not be subject to the dangers of fire and to burning up whenever such a thing may happen. Now, I have information which I think is reliable, and which I will say in all fairness the committee know something about. That is that we are in danger of fire in that institution at this time; and being connected with that institution as I have been for some time as a trustee, and taking upon myself the responsibility in connection with the Committee on Appropriations, or some members of it, of looking up this matter very carefully, I will say that I would not care longer to connect myself with an institution which the Government refuses to put in proper repair, so as to protect the lives of those who are compelled to be in it.

I have this information, which I think the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations have also—that is, that for the amount of $30,000 this institution can be put in such repair that it will be fireproof and be in condition to receive patients with some degree of safety. If the Government does not care longer to maintain this institution as a Government institution, then we ought to close it up now and forever; or, if we do care to maintain it, we ought to appropriate sufficient money to put that institution in proper shape, so that these patients may be placed there with safety.

I appeal to this committee, and I appeal to the members of the Appropriation Committee that they may permit this amount of $30,000 to go into this bill that this institution may be properly cared for, an institution which belongs to the Government and in which the Government owns every dollar.

It has been shown to you by the figures I have read that the Government has expended more in 10 years for the support of other institutions in which it does not own a dollar than they have in the whole time from 1866 to the present time for this institution.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FONTER of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. It strikes me that the gentleman from Illinois, by his own statement, shows that he has not done his duty with the Committee on Appropriations-

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I can say that the gentleman from Illinois has been very vigorous in his demands for that institu-

Mr. GARNER. He does not seem to have had much success in getting the appropriation; somebody, it seems, has a greater influence with the committee than has the gentleman from

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I will say that I think the committee has been perfectly fair so far as this item is concerned, and the items in connection with other hospitals. I am only reciting to you the conditions that exist now. Year after year I have gone to the Committee on Appropriations and asked that sufficient money might be given for the proper repair of this institution. Last year we were given $2,350, which goes but a little way in repairing an institution of this kind.

[The time of Mr. Foster of Illinois having expired, his time was extended five minutes.]

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that this institution is an old institution. I am reliably informed by a gentleman in whose ability I have every confidence as an architect and a man that this amount of money will put this institution in proper shape, so that there will be no danger of fire.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. What would be done if the gentleman's amendment becomes a law?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. All the partitions that are made of wood, with the electric wiring which is in bad shape, in danger of fire, would be torn out, and iron stairways would be put in to replace wooden ones, and such changes would be made as to make it fireproof.

Mr. MANN. How much would it cost to construct a proper building?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I should say $300,000. That is the estimate. I would much prefer a new institution placed upon this ground, which is one of the most beautiful sites in the city of Washington. The gentleman from Illinois, I have no doubt, has seen it and knows where it is located, and that it is one of the most beautiful places in the city.

Mr. MANN. Ought there not to be a new building there?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I should like to see one.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman care to offer an amendment providing plans for a new building, to be appropriated for hereafter?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I would be glad to see it. I think something ought to be done.

Mr. GARNER. Would it not be money thrown away, comparatively, to spend this $30,000, if in the near future you are going to build a new building?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I think $30,000 at this time would place the institution in pretty good shape. The outside walls are all in very good condition. They have been gone over and examined, and it has been determined that they are pretty good.

The gentleman from Illinois knows about it, but the information that has come to me is that there ought to be a new building there. This building which has been there, I do not know how many years, has been repaired and repaired and repaired again, and it is out of date. Of course, if we are going to build a new building in a short time, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] remarks, it would not be economical to spend much more in repairing this. If we are not going to build a new building soon, then we must repair this or abandon it.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I did not broach the subject of a new building at that time, because I thought it would be a hard matter to get it through; but I thought that by appealing to the committee they might grant $30,000 to put this institution in good repair, so that for a number of years it would be in a proper condition to receive patients of this character.

Mr. MANN. I thought that possibly the committee would be willing to provide a small appropriation for the purpose of preparing plans for a new building, the cost of which they could provide for in a subsequent year or not as they pleased.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Does the gentleman contend that the walls in this building are not fireproof?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The partition walls? Some are of brick, some are wood and plaster.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Would it not be a waste of money to put in fireproof partitions when you have inflammable floors all through the institution?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I think with this amount of money we could tear out all the material in there that is now so dangerous from fire and replace it with material that is fireproof.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.
Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Why remove the partitions and leave the old floors that are inflammable?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Part of the old floors would have to be taken out.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Does not the gentleman know that it is practically impossible to make that old building fireproof?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that he knows as much about the report that I have reference to as I do. The gentleman whom I consulted and whom the chairman of the committee has consulted states that The gentleman whom I consulted and with $30,000 it could be placed in such condition that it would be safe, though he does not recommend it, and thinks it more desirable to have a new building, but that the $30,000 would put the building in a condition where there would be safety. If we are not going to have a new building—and it seems to be out of the question at this time to secure anything of that kind—I thought it better for this Government to expend $30,000 for the purpose indicated than to have it go on in the present condition.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, and I ask unanimous consent to return to the two sections immediately preceding that one, in order that they may be reconsidered and the amendment be applied to them as well.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to the two paragraphs?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the proposed amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Board of Charities, by contract or agreement, to provide care and treatment for indigent patients, $17,500: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used to establish or maintain any hospital not now existing in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer that as a substitute for the amendment which the gentleman from Illinois has offered to the two items immediately preceding the item he reasons for offering them.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. It strikes out the hospital.

Mr. BURLESON. It is offered as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. I would like to hear the gentleman's reason.

Mr. MANN. The amendment has not been offered yet Mr. BURLESON. I offered the amendment as a substitute for the amendment which the gentleman from Illinois has offered to the two items immediately preceding, and ask that the Clerk report it.

Unanimous consent has not yet been granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to return to and reconsider the two paragraphs beginning on line 16, page 82, and extending down to an including line 22, page 82. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman ask unanimous consent that he may offer his amendment in lieu of the language in the bill, from line 16 to 22, inclusive, and that there may be reserved to that a point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. That is what I will do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman submit that?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment as a substitute for that part of the bill from line 16 to line 22, inclusive, page 82, and that it be offered subject to a point of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will involve considerable discussion, and I do not think it is the desire of the committee to go into it at this late hour.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported so that we will get it a little clearer

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Page 82, strike out lines 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22 and insert the following:

"To enable the Board of Charitles, by contract or agreement, to provide care and treatment for indigent patients, $17,500: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used to establish or maintain any hospital not now existing in the District of Columbia."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now arise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Garret, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17681, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following resignation.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby respectfully tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Very truly, yours,

J. HAMPTON MOORE.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC EXPENDITURES.

Mr. BURTON. I submit a Senate resolution, which I ask may be read and that it then lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 194) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be added to the standing committees of the Senate a committee to be known as the Committee on Public Expenditures, to consist of the chairman Committee on Appropriations, acting chairman; chairman Committee on Finance, chairman Committee on Military Affairs, chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, chairman Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, and 13 other members to be designated in the same manner as members of other standing committees.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand that this resolution is to lie upon the table

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the request of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to express my great gratification that the resolution has been introduced by the Senator from Ohio, for it means practically the revival of the old Committee on Public Expenditures, which came to an untimely end through nonaction.

I believe that a budget committee, such as this committee is intended to be, will be of great service in cooperating with the executive department in the work covered by the new Division of Economy and Efficiency, a report of whose operations was recently transmitted to Congress by the President with recommendations that are entitled to our serious consideration. believe that, in addition to economy and efficiency of administration, Congress should take up the practical question of applying a certain portion of the revenue of the Government specifically to constructive work upon capital account, as distinguished from mere expense of administration and operation, and that this committee will be an important factor in marshaling the annual revenue of the country, in advising how much of our annual revenue of $1,000,000,000 shall be set aside for the internal development of the country, and then apportioning the balance in logical proportions to the expenses of administration and of operation. The time has come, in my judgment, for setting aside at least $150,000,000 annually for internal development and constructive work, as distinguished from military expenses, expenses of pensions, and expense of administration of the Post Office and other departments.

The time has come when we should set apart a certain sum, at least $50,000,000 annually, for the full development of our rivers under comprehensive plans involving team work upon the part of our scientific services and the cooperation of the States in matters affecting their jurisdiction. The time has come when we should set aside a certain sum, at least $30,000,-000 annually, for the construction of public buildings; when we should set aside a certain sum, at least $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 annually, for the development of good roads in cooperation with States and municipalities; when a certain sum, at least $20,000,-000 annually, should be set aside for the development of our auxiliary Navy, to be used in aid of the fighting ships in case of war and in times of peace, through lease to shipping companies, in the service of the Panama Canal and in opening up new routes of foreign commerce.

believe, also, that a considerable sum should be applied annually to the conservation of our forests, particularly on the headwaters of our navigable rivers.

Part of these matters have been heretofore covered by appropriations, but in a lame, accidental, and ineffective fashion. trust that in the future this work will be covered in a definite, consecutive, and logical way, through a budget committee, whose action will be persuasive with the various appropriation committees and with Congress and will in a measure guide their action.

In providing for this constructive work it will be necessary either to increase our revenue or to diminish our expenses of administration. It is to be hoped that such economies may be effected. particularly in our military expense, now aggregating, including pensions, nearly one-half our entire revenue, as to make it possible to provide for the greater part of this constructive work without an increase in revenue; but I wish to emphasize the fact that this work is of such preeminent importance as to warrant an increase in our taxes. Obviously, this increase should be accomplished, not through additional tariff and revenue duties the burthen of which falls upon the consuming masses, but by laying some tax upon the wealth of the country, now almost exempt from national taxation. Such increased revenue can be derived from inheritance taxes, from a graduated increase in the corporation tax affecting mainly the larger corporations, or, if the constitutional amendment is adopted, from incomes.

At the time the committee on committees made its report I protested against its action in dropping the Committee on Public Expenditures from the standing committees of the Senate. The message of the President has shown the great importance of such a committee, and I trust that the Senate will speedily act upon the resolution of the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and, without objection, will lie on the table.

PAYMENT OF MONEY IN POLITICAL CAMPAIGNS.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a brief time to make a statement with reference to a resolution which has been pending in one of the committees of the Senate since June 22, 1911. That resolution is No. 79, and I ask that it be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. Culberson June 22, 1911. as follows:

Resolved, First. That the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire and report to the Senate as early as practicable the amount of money subscribed and paid to every committee of any political party or to any member of such committee, or to any person acting under the authority of or on behalf of such committee as treasurer or otherwise, by any person, firm, association, corporation, or committee to influence the result or attempt to influence the result of the election November 8, 1904, and November 3, 1908, at which Representatives in the Congress of the United States were elected, giving the names of such persons, firms, associations, corporations, or committees, and the respective amounts subscribed and paid by each of them as aforesaid.

Second. That said committee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of the Congress; to hold sessions at such place or places as it may deem most convenient for the purposes of this inquiry; to employ stenographers and such other clerical force as may be deemed necessary; to send for persons, books, records, and papers; to administer oaths; and that the expenses of the inquiry be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

Third. That said committee shall also report to the Senate what measures, if any, are necessary to further prohibit or curtail such subscriptions and payments so as to lessen and confine them to proper and legitimate objects in relation to such elections and prevent the undue or corrupt use of money in such elections.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it will be observed that

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it will be observed that the important features of this resolution are, first, authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to inquire into the campaign funds of 1904 and 1908; and, second, for that committee, Privileges and Elections, to report to the Senate by bill or otherwise what legislation, if any, may be thought necessary to further prohibit and curtail the undue or corrupt use of money in Federal elections.

The provision in the resolution that the expenses of the investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate made it necessary, under the rules of the Senate, to refer the resolution in the first instance to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. Accordingly, Mr. President, on my motion on the day the resolution was introduced, June 22, 1911, it was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and the resolution, so far as I know, is still with that committee. The only question to be determined by this committee or to be recommended by that committee, either affirmatively or adversely, is whether or not the money for the proposed investigation ought to be expended out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The Senate was in session from June 22, 1911, to August 22, 1911, when it finally adjourned; it has been in session since the first Monday in December, and still this resolution is before the committee upon this preliminary question, with the information given to the public, through the press, in the past few days that it would probably be reported adversely by that committee.

Mr. President, without going further into the matter of the committee action, I want to say that, notwithstanding the inaction of the committee with reference to the expenditure of funds in elections, thanks to the public spirit of some of the great metropolitan journals of the United States, notably the New York Times and the New York World, we are in possession of some facts which bear upon the question as to whether there ought to be further legislation on the subject. I intend to submit to the Senate for its consideration some of these facts, in order that it may have them to determine the question whether this resolution shall pass, even if reported adversely by the committee having it in charge for the present.

In April, 1906, the New York Times, one of the great journals of the Union, a journal whose information is said to be peculiar concerning the moneyed interests of the country, received a communication estimating the expenses of the Democratic and Republican Parties in 1896, in 1900, and in 1904, and that paper editorially, on the 14th of April, 1906, commended that communication as one dependable and upon which reliance could be placed.

Now let us see, without reading the entire editorial, what is estimated to have been expended by the Democratic Party and the Republican Party in 1896, 1900, and 1904. From it I have made a table and want to call the attention of the Senate

We are advised, Mr. President, by the public press that of the funds contributed to the Republican campaign of 1904, E. H. Harriman raised a fund of $260,000, distributed as fol-lows: Edward H. Harriman, $50,000; H. McK. Twombly (representing the Vanderbilt interests), $25,000; Chauncey M. Depew (personal), $25,000; James Hazen Hyde (of the Equitable Life Assurance Society), $25,000; the Equitable Life Assurance Society, $10.000; J. Pierpont Morgan, $10,000; George W. Perkins (New York Life Insurance Co.), $10,000; H. H. Rogers, John A. Archbold, William Rockefeller (Standard Oil Co.), $30,000; Speyer and banking interests, $10,000; Cornelius N. Bliss (personal), $10.000; seven friends of Senator Depew, $5.000 each, $35.000; sent to E. H. Harriman in smaller donations, $20,000, aggregating $260,000.

That was in 1904. Partly on account of that and partly on account of the exposures in connection with the insurance companies in the examination which occurred in the State of New York, Congress, in 1907, passed an act prohibiting corporations from making campaign contributions in money, which I will take the liberty of reading to the Senate myself, as it is quite

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any laws of Congress, to make a money contribution in connection with any election to any political office. It shall also be unlawful for any corporation whatever to make a money contribution in connection with any election at which-presidential and vice presidential electors or a Representative in Congress is to be voted for or any election by any State legislature of a United States Senator. Every corporation which shall make any contribution in violation of the foregoing provisions shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $5,000, and every officer or director of any corporation who shall consent to any contribution by the corporation in violation of the foregoing provisions shall upon conviction be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000 and not less than $250, or by imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

That was approved January 26, 1907.

Mr. President, it will be observed with reference to the act of 1907 that it only prohibits "a money contribution." It does not prohibit a corporation from making any other character of contribution, nor, of course, is there any prohibition against individuals subscribing to campaign funds; but, particularly, there is no limitation in this act upon the amount which may be contributed by individuals to campaign funds.

It is well known by all persons conversant with the subject that this act of Congress has done much good, has accomplished much, Mr. President, in the way of curtailing the undue and corrupt expenditure of money in elections. It has perhaps, most probably, cut off all campaign contributions by corporations so far as money contributions are concerned and so far as they may be contributed directly.

Next, I invite the attention of the Senate and of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as well as the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to the campaign contributions of 1908, to which we are indebted wholly to the laws of the State of New York, and, as I have said, the great journals that have published the list and the names of the contributors.

I have taken pains to collect this information because I had some question in my mind whether or not we would get affirmative action by either of the committees to which this resolution in due time will go, and I intended then, and I intend now, if the report is adverse, to appeal from the committees to the body of the Senate itself, as to whether we will have this investiga-tion of campaign contributions of 1904 and 1908.

In the presidential campaign of 1908 the Democratic national committee on October 15 issued a bulletin, giving the names of all contributors and the amount subscribed by each to its campaign fund. The New York World, October 16, 1908, says in regard to this bulletin:

Treasurer Ridder, of the Democratic national committee, made public yesterday the list of contributors to the Democratic national campaign up to October 9. It shows that nearly 50,000 persons contributed in the aggregate $248.567.55 in sums ranging from 25 cents up to $5,000. No corporations are represented in the list.

As reported in the World, the largest subscription was $5,000, from Charles J. Hughes, of Colorado. Other considerable subscriptions were $2,000 from W. A. Clark, of Montana; $4,046 from the Commoner, a newspaper published at Lincoln, Nebr.; $2.500 from Nathan Stranss; $2,000 from Chairman Norman E. Mack; and, among others, $1,000 each from Samuel Untermyer, Jacob Rupert, De Lancy Nicol, James K. McGuire, Edwin M. Shepard, John W. Cox, and William F. Sheehan, of New York; Roger C. Sullivan, M. F. Dunlap, and John P. Hopkins, of Illinois; E. O. Woods, of Michigan; E. F. Goltra, David R. Francis and M. C. Wetmore of Missouri: James F. Osborne of Prepaigs and M. C. Wetmore of Missouri: James F. Osborne of Strangis and M. C. Wetmore of Missouri: James F. Osborne of Strangis and M. C. Wetmore of Missouri: James F. Osborne of Schome of Strangis and M. C. Wetmore of Missouri: James F. Osborne of Schome of Missouri: James F. Osborne of Miss Francis, and M. C. Wetmore, of Missouri; James E. Osborne, of Wyoming; and $1,500 from Gordon Bromley, of Pittsburgh.

Thereafter and up to election day the committee, through its treasurer, issued bulletins periodically, giving names of sub-scribers and amounts subscribed. The New York World of October 29 published a summary of the bulletin of the preceding day, giving additional names of contributors amounts, and especially the largest subscription of the campaign—$37,000, from Herman Ridder and his three sons. Those acquainted with the situation will recall that that contribution consisted not of money contributions in toto, but of receipted printing bills and the like.

During the campaign no information of this character was made public by the Republican national committee; but on November 23, 20 days after the election, both the Republican and Democratic national committees filed certificates of receipts and disbursements with the secretary of state at Albany, in compliance with the New York statute.

The New York Herald of November 24, 1908, says, with regard to the statement of the Republican national committee:

As the amounts received by the Democratic committees have already been made known in periodical bulletins issued during the campaign, interest to-day centered largely in the receipts and expenditures of Mr. George R. Sheldon, treasurer of the Republican national committee. Mr. Sheldon's list of receipts totals $1,685,518.27. Of this amount $1,035,368.27 was received and disbursed at the New York and Chicago-headquarters, and $620.150 was collected by the national committee's finance committee in the several States and turned over to the Republican State committees for use in their own States.

The total number of Republican contributors were 12,330, and the list is headed by Charles P. Taft, of Cincinnati, brother of the Republican candidate, who contributed $110,000. Twenty-four men sent $5,000, 8 men $4,000, there were 2 contributions of $3,500, 11 of $3,000, 13 of $2,500, 20 of $2,000, 23 of $1,500, 119 of $1,000, 9 of $750, and 250 of $500 each. The money came largely from the East.

The New York World of November 24, 1908, treats the statements in a more detailed manner, and shows that while the Republican campaign fund aggregated $1,685,518.27, contributed by 12,330 persons, the Democratic fund aggregated $620,644.27, by 12,550 persons, the Democratic find aggregated $020,044.24, contributed by 74,000 persons. As given by the World, the largest contributors to the Republican fund were: $110,000 by Charles P. Taft; $34,777 by the Union League Club of New York, with Cornelius N. Bliss, president, and J. Pierpont Morgan, one of the vice presidents; $25,000 by the Union League Club of Philadelphia with a presidents. Club, of Philadelphia, with a membership made up largely of high protectionists; $25,000 each from Larz Anderson, now minister to Belgium, and G. A. Garrettson, a Cleveland banker; $20,000 each from Andrew Carnegie and J. Pierpont Morgan; $15,000 each by Alexander S. Cochran, president of a large carpet company, William Nelson Cromwell, Panama Canal negotiator, and M. N. Bagley, banker, of Detroit; $10,000 each by Whitelaw Reid, of New York, now ambassador to Great Britain, M. C. D. Borden, of New York, largely interested in Fall River cotton mills, Frank A. Munsey, Jacob H. Schiff, of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., bankers; $9,000 by Stephen Vall, of Washington; $7,500 by M. T. Cox, of New York, director and stockholder in 45 corporations; $7,000 by Richard C. Kerens, of St. Louis, now ambassador to Austria-Hungary; $6,000 by William Barbour, of Paterson, N. J., president of a linen thread company; $5,000 each by D. O. Mills, of New York, Kountze Bros., pany; $5,000 each by D. O. Mills, of New York, Kountze Bros., bankers, J. & W. Seligman & Co., bankers, A. D. Julliard & Co., bankers, Norman B. Ream, A. M. Huntington, James Speyer, George F. Baker, E. C. Converse, C. S. Shepard, of Buffalo, Daniel R. Hanna, of Cleveland, Robert Bacon, ambassador to France, formerly partner of J. P. Morgan, Adolphus Busch, of St. Louis, George Lauder, of New York, nephew of Andrew Carnegie, and Francis Sulzberger, of Kansas City; $4,000 each by Cornelius N. Bliss, of New York, George Blumenthal, of New York, James B. Brady, of New York, and W. D. Snyder, of Pittsburgh; $3,000 by E. V. Morgan, of New York, minister to Brazil, W. B. Cutting, Otto H. Kuhn, Mortimer L. Schiff, all of New York; $2,500 each by Charles M. Schwab and John Jacob Astor. Schwab and John Jacob Astor.

Several important facts are apparent from reading the contributions to the Democratic and Republican Parties in 1908:

1. The Republican fund is $1,665,518.27; the Democratic fund, $620,644.27; the former more than a million greater.

2. The number who contributed to the Republican fund was 12,330; that to the Democratic fund, 74,000; the former six times smaller.

3. The contributors to the Republican fund, as a rule, were interested in legislation, while those contributing to the Democratic fund were not.

4. Individuals contributed larger amounts to the Republican fund, ranging from $110,000 downward, while contributions to the Democratic fund ranged from $5,000 downward.

I have thus, Mr. President, as I have indicated, anticipating possibly these committees would not report this resolution favorably, but, on the contrary, might report it adversely, laid before the Senate such information as I could gather with reference to the contributions of 1904 and 1908.

While it has not been thought necessary in this resolution to extend the inquiry beyond 1904, yet we know, in addition to what I have said, from well-authenticated instances, that prior to that time money was used unduly and corruptly in Federal Men high in party council, one of them afterwards elections. attaining the Vice Presidency and then the Presidency, laughed and rejoiced in 1880 around the banquet board that "soap was potential in elections then.

It is well remembered how James P. Foster, president of the Republican League in 1888, would have "fried the fat" out of special and protected interests to force campaign contributions. Honest and patriotic men will never cease to recall with shame and mortification that with the crisp $2 notes of Dudley floaters were organized into blocks of five in the presidential election in Indiana that year. The bold and flagrant and widespread corruption of 1896 is known of most men now living—that period in our history when traffic in manhood suffrage first advanced from petty theft to grand larceny, when the successful leader-ship of the year sought to make political bribery general and Nor have foreign ambassadorships been only rerespectable. cently measured by fat campaign contributions, for the public revolt against the scandals of Van Alen and Hyde is fresh in the memory of the well informed.

The limit of the inquiry in this resolution was fixed at 1904, partly for convenience, because we must stop somewhere, but particularly because, scandalous as have been some other elec-tions in this respect, that year was the most audacious and indecent of all.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am interested to know the Senator's opinion as to why we should start. He has stated that there is a point at which we must stop. Why should we start?

Mr. CULBERSON. I am proceeding to tell the Senator, if he will be patient.

Mr. HEYBURN.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will.

Mr. CULBERSON. I repeat, Mr. President, that the limit was fixed at 1904 particularly, because, scandalous as were other elections in this respect, that year surpassed all others in the audacity and indecency with which campaign funds were demanded and exacted. The chairman of the national Republication of the continual republication. lican committee that year held, in his official capacity as Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the secrets of corporations whose affairs could be investigated under a Federal law, a vantage ground of power which apparently was not neglected. It has been estimated, as has been shown, that the enormous and unconscionable sum of $11,000,000 was raised and probably expended that year by the committee of which he was chairman. The very size and obesity of this fund, sir, if approximately correct, smacks of extortion, profligacy, and corruption. Who contributed it and where did it come from? We know something in answer to such an inquiry, but not all, and not enough upon which to base legislation to prevent its repetition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CULPERSON - Leicht

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield.
Mr. GALLINGER. I have not had the privilege of hearing all the Senator's speech, but I want to ask the Senator in all seriousness precisely where he got his figures, that $11,000,000 was contributed to the fund in 1904?

Mr. CULBERSON. While the Senator was out of the Chamber or not listening, Mr. President, I stated that these figures were published, first, so far as I know, in the New York Times in April, 1906, and they have since been reproduced and commended as probably trustworthy by the New York World.
Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator any information that

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator any information that would lead him to believe that those great newspapers got accurate information upon that point? The Senator knows that the newspapers of this country are in the habit of magnifying pretty much everything that is printed in their columns.

Mr. CULBERSON. I stated that the New York Times, according to my information, had special means of knowing whereof it spoke with reference to campaign contributions contributed by the moneyed interests of the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think—

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not know whether the estimate is correct, approximately even; but I have this information: An estimate by a reputable newspaper of the United States, vouched for by another great journal; and, Mr. President, the purpose of this resolution is to secure information to determine what other laws ought to be passed and to determine how much money was in fact contributed in 1904 and who did it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not the Senator-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes. Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, the Senator does not claim that those newspapers had access to the books of the Republican national committee, I take it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I know nothing of the immediate sources of the information of these newspapers, Mr. President. I want to get the resolution adopted by the Senate to find out how much money was contributed, who did it, and inferentially why they did it, and what interest they had in legislation, if they contributed this amount.

I have stated, Mr. President, that we know something in answer to these inquiries, but not all and not enough. We know, for instance, that the Republican contributions have been largely made by the beneficiaries of privilege and protection. We have reason to believe that corporations engaged in interstate commerce have been intimidated and blackmailed by the Republican national committee. We know that the Republican national committee has levied upon and profaned sacred funds held by at least three great insurance companies for women and children.

Mr. President, the New York World for seven years has asked these 10 questions, which I may be permitted to read:

1. How much has the Beef Trust contributed to Mr. Cortelyou?
2. How much has the Paper Trust contributed to Mr. Cortelyou?
3. How much has the Coal Trust contributed to Mr. Cortelyou?
4. How much has the Sugar Trust contributed to Mr. Cortelyou?
5. How much has the Oil Trust contributed to Mr. Cortelyou?

6. How much has the Tobacco Trust contributed to Mr. Cortelyou?
7. How much has the Steel Trust contributed to Mr. Cortelyou?
8. How much has the Insurance Trust contributed to Mr. Cortelyou?
9. How much have the national banks contributed to Mr. Cortelyou?
10. How much have the six great railroads contributed to Mr. Cortelyou?

There has been no authentic and satisfactory answer to these inquiries, and only within the past few weeks, after principals and material witnesses have died, an effort has been made to and material witnesses have died, an effort has been made to impair or destroy testimony on the subject of the Harriman contribution of $260,000, which was given the public through the instrumentality and enterprise of great newspapers. This attempt to unload the obloquy of this disgraceful transaction upon the dead, a transaction which is said to have changed 50,000 votes in the city of New York alone, may be significant in several views. It may be the common and ordinary case of malefactors waiting for the absconding or death of witnesses, or it may presage a political movement of national consequence and magnitude. and magnitude.

I am now only concerned, Mr. President, with the fact that it emphasizes the propriety and necessity of a full, prompt, and official inquiry into the expenditures of 1904, that remedial legislation may be adopted to further curtail and prohibit the undue and corrupt use of money in Federal elections.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar is in order under Rule VIII.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (8, 4239) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.
Mr. REED. I understand that the motion is that we proceed to the consideration of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the motion.

Mr. KERN. There is an amendment to it that I wish to offer. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question for the Senate first to determine is whether it will proceed to the consideration of the bill. The Chair has announced that the ayes have it. Does the Senator from Missouri desire a division or anything?

Mr. REED. I desire to make a statement before the motion is passed upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not a debatable one. A motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill is not debatable or amendable.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it may not be debatable, but I desire to make this statement to the Senator from Utah.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can only make it by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. REED. I have been very earnestly requested to do what I could do to have a further hearing upon this bill and to permit certain interested parties to appear before the committee. If the purpose is merely to debate the bill, I have no objection. If the purpose is to put the bill on its passage, then I do want to object

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator that the bill is quite a lengthy one, and it has been under consideration by the Printing Investigation Commission, the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses, and the Senate Committee on Printing for nearly three years. I will state frankly to the Senator that I do not intend to press its passage to-day, but I would like very much to have the formal reading of the bill to-day, and then there are some committee amendments to be considered and whatever amendments may be offered afterwards of course will be considered. I will say to the Senator that I have no desire whatever to ask for a vote on the bill to-day.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the yield to the Senator from Nebraska? Does the Senator from Missouri

Mr. REED. Certainly. Mr. BROWN. I understand that the committee itself is not through with its investigation of the bill. I am informed that a hearing is to be had to-morrow on some phases of the bill. It is very obvious that the bill is an important one. I was out of the Chamber at the time it was called up, and I am not advised of the parliamentary situation, but the bill can not be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not asked that it should be so considered.

Mr. BROWN. It is a bill—
The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is up under a motion that it be considered.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Utah to let the bill go over. No hearing on the bill has been printed-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hardly thinks that this proceeding is regular. The motion is not debatable. It has been declared carried, and no Senator has questioned it.

Mr. BROWN. I question now whether the motion has been carried.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair asked the Senator from Missouri if he questioned it; the Chair understood that he simply asked to make a statement; and the Chair asked if unanimous consent would be given therefor.

Mr. REED. The President is in error in regard to my

The VICE PRESIDENT. If that is so, the Chair will again put the motion. The Chair did not mean to foreclose anybody's right to vote on the proposition.

Mr. REED. I ask for a vote. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asked permission to make a statement, and that was given. General debate is not in order, but the statement of the Senator from Missouri is in order, by unanimous consent.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, unless the Senator from Utah will withdraw his motion, if we are to be forced to vote on it, I shall demand a roll call.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to interpose a motion, with the permission of the Chair. It is that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion is hardly in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to proceed to the consideration of a particular bill is neither amendable nor debatable, but the Senate can vote on it and vote it down, or dispose of it in any way it chooses.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the bill should be recommitted, and

I merely submit a motion to recommit.

Mr. SMOOT. That motion is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending motion is that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. My motion will be in order after the bill is taken up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I ask for a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks for the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not quite understand what the Senator from Missouri meant by the statement that if the Senator from Utah would not withdraw his motion he would demand a roll

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order. Evidently a sufficient number have demanded the yeas and nays, and the yeas and nays are ordered. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. THORNTON. Will the Chair please state what it is we are going to vote on?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4239) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator from Nebraska to say that the hearings are still going on?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. In the absence of that Senator I withhold my vote.

voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. BRIGGS. I withdraw my vote. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws his vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the negative). moment ago I made the announcement of the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Shively]. I find that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Shively] is present. I therefore want to withdraw my vote and let the pair between the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] and myself stand.

So Mr. Smoot's motion was not agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to say to the Senator from Idaho, in reference to his motion to recommit, that the Chair was in error in not entertaining the motion at the time. The Chair was thinking of it as an amendment to the motion made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], which was not an amendable motion; but the motion of the Senator from Idaho, as he put it, was a separate motion and had precedence of the motion of the Senator from Utah, and the Chair should have put it and did not. Shall he now put the motion?

Mr. HEYBURN. No, Mr. President, the purpose I had in view can be served just as well now in a moment. I made the motion for the purpose of avoiding the present consideration of this measure, not because I have any intention whatever to delay or prevent its enactment; but I have it in mind in a number of particulars to amend the bill, and I have been working on it for days with a view of preparing the amendments. The bill has only been eight days in the Senate. The bill was introduced on January 8 and reported on the 16th. So it has been here about a week. It is an extensive measure. It proposes the creation of new offices, carrying important sums as salaries, which should not be in a measure of this kind. That is no part of the codification of the laws regulating the public printing.

Then I desire to propose amendments to several provisions, noticeably those providing for the distribution of the Statutes at Large and for the distribution of the Congressional Record. There is a general lack of authority and provision for an adequate distribution of the Statutes at Large. Many persons required to deal with the statutes responsibly are not now receiving them under any law. I think this provision is inefficient.

Then, again-and I will finish-I think this bill should be reprinted, so that existing provisions of law would appear in one type and the amendments in another; and where a statute is rewritten-that is, containing a part of existing law and made up in part of proposed legislation-it should be indicated. so that when you glance at the act you will know whether you are dealing with existing law or not.

I have gone several times carefully through the report in this case. The report is a very careful one, and is organized upon a very proper and convenient plan, but it is not reflected in the text of the bill. I have had some experience in the revision of the laws-the penal and the judiciary codes. There we did what this committee has done. We stated definitely the changes that had been made or were proposed to be made in every section, but we reflected that in the printed bill, so that when you looked at the text of the bill you were referred to the notes in You can go to the report here, but you have got to read diligently and scrutinize carefully a bill printed in uniform type to find out just what language the report deals with.

I now ask that this bill be reprinted. The chairman may have it done, of course, under general authority, I assume, but it ought to be reprinted, and it ought to be printed in such type as will distinguish the nature and character of the changes

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order for such reprinting will be entered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that we now have printed a comparison of this bill with the existing printing laws, and that to-morrow morning it will be upon the desk of each Senator. The only reason it was not available this morning was because of a few changes made in the bill at the request of some of the departments after this comparison had been printed.

Mr. President, I have no desire whatever to press the passage of the bill at this time. All I desired to do to-day was to bring the bill before the Senate, have it read, and then have it laid aside. I desired to make a statement as to what the bill really intended and what was expected to be accomplished by it, but the Senate decided otherwise, so I have nothing more to say in the matter to-day.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to say that, had the comparative table referred to by the Senator been available this morning, I probably would have interposed no objection whatever to proceeding to the consideration of the bill, although I think we should have time to make such an examination of it as would enable us to deal with each question without delay as it should be presented.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 193, Senate

bill 3813

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me a moment before he does that?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wanted to ask the Senator from Utah a question. The statement has been made here that the hearings have not been concluded and that testimony is still being taken before the committee. I want to ascertain whether or not that is a fact. If it is, it seems to me that a motion to recommit this bill would be proper.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator, I will state that we have had hearing after hearing. Representatives of the plate printers' union have been before the committee time and again. A committee from the Washington Chamber of Commerce, with representatives from the plate printers' union, have been before the committee. I wish to say to the Senator that there is no disposition, nor has there been any disposition upon the part of the committee, to restrict the hearings, but there had to come a time when we should report the bill. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] telephoned to me on Monday night that there were some persons in Michigan who desired to be heard upon one of the provisions of the bill, and asked if it could be arranged. I told the Senator that the bill would not be passed before that time, to telegraph to the parties interested, and when they arrived in Washington they would be granted a hearing. I also told the Senator that all I desired was to have the formal reading of the bill to-day, and then I intended to make a brief statement regarding it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I have no impressions, hostile or otherwise, about this bill; I have not taken time to examine it; but I think it is only fair to the Senate, when a bill of its length and of its importance comes before the Senate, that we should feel that no new phase connected with it is going to be developed by hearings before the committee. ought to have this much security, that, so far as the committee is concerned, it is through with its investigation and that its report here is the final impression of its deliberations; but if testimony is being taken by the committee, how can we feel that some new phase may not be developed that may change the situation in the Senate in regard to the bill?

Mr. President, I think I know what the parties desire. I think they desire in this bill some provision in regard to the loose-leaf ledgers, and I am perfectly willing, as I have stated to the Senator from Michigan, that they shall be heard upon that proposition.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield briefly to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah if any of the testimony at the hearings that have been had has been reduced to writing?

Mr. SMOOT. There has been no printed testimony upon

Mr. BROWN. That is the trouble with the situation. Here is a voluminous report and no testimony upon which it is based, except in the mind of the committee. It is a fact that Congress has elaborately and exhaustively investigated this question in years gone by before any action was asked, but here to-day we are asked to take up this bill in the absence of the statement prepared by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator is mistaken. Mr. BROWN. What there is about this bill that it should be pushed along at this rate and with this speed I do not It is the first time a bill on the calendar under Rule VIII has been pushed over the objections of Senators, and in the absence of testimony, when witnesses are on the way to be heard, according to the statement of the Senator himself. I hope the bill will have the consideration that it deserves. It changes the entire system of the printing business of this Government.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. GALLINGER. I must decline to yield further to debate, but I will yield to the Senator from Michigan for a statement.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I only rise for the purpose of saying that there was no possible misunderstanding between the Senator from Utah and myself regarding the hearings asked for. I do not know what the hearings may develop, but the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], the chairman of the committee, has been very courteous about the matter and very willing to hear those who desired to appear before the committee. He accorded the Michigan people who are interested in this matter a formal hearing for that purpose. He said, however, that while the bill would go to the Senate, the hearings, if they developed anything, might develop some necessary amendment to the bill not affecting the bill as a whole. Not desiring to forestall what I may be called upon to do after the hearings, I do want to accord to the Senator from Utah a very kindly and liberal purpose to hear the citizens of my own State who are interested in this matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Pres

Mr. President, I move-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. Just for a short statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. For a statement, but I hope that the debate will not be prolonged.

I merely desire to say in reference to the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Brown] that there was no report from the committee, that the Senator from Nebraska has had on his desk a report on this bill covering 55 pages, explaining every section of the bill, noting the changes from the present law and the reasons for the changes.

Mr. BROWN. I did not say there was no report. I said there was no testimony on which the report was based. That is what I am complaining about.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator said there was no

Mr. BROWN. There is nothing here but the report. Mr. SMOOT subsequently said: The senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn], I understood, had an order made by the Senate for a reprint of the bill, showing the present law and the proposed bill. I will advise the Senator that that has already been done, and the print will be upon the desks of Senators to-morrow morning. That being the case, there is no need of having the order entered as proposed by the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. My request was that the bill be printed so that on the face of the bill it would appear in italics or other type whether the substance was new or existing law. was my request-not that they be printed in parallel columns. This is an excellent method that the Senator now presents. It is not all that I asked for, but I think we will get along with it. I will try to. The ability to determine by an inspection of the face of the bill what portion of it is existing law and what portion is not is of very great convenience and value.

However, if the Senator from Utah thinks we can get along with these parallel columns, let us try it, and if we find it inconvenient an order can be made to print overnight.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order heretofore made will be rescinded.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Idaho wants that special print I have not the least objection to its being made. had in mind was the saving of an extra order to print. I am perfectly willing to have it printed that way.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not a question of anybody being will-The question is what the Senate shall do about it. think I indicated my satisfaction with the existing condition. If the Senator thinks something more should be done, that is up to the Senator. I withdraw the request for the order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order has been rescinded.

BILLS PASSED OVER ON THE CALENDAR

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] makes the motion to take up the bill which he has in mind, with his permission I want to ask that in the event bills on the calendar should be considered to-day, Calendar No. 141, Calendar No. 186, and Calendar No. 187 be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the calendar shall be taken up the request of the Senator from North Dakota will be noted.

STREET RAILWAY TRANSFERS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3813) to require all street railroad companies in the District of Columbia to issue free transfers, interchangeable from the lines of one company to those of another, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the first formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with and the bill will be read for committee amendments.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bin.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, on page 2, line 2, after the words "continuation of," to strike out "the" and insert "a"; in line 3, after the word "trip," to strike out "on the line for which they are issued" and insert "in one general direction within the District of Columbia"; and in line 6, after the word "fare," to insert an additional proviso, as follows:

Provided further, That the existing system of transfers on the lines, respectively, of the Capital Traction Co. and the Washington Railway & Electric Co. shall be continued and made permanent.

So as to read:

So as to read:

That 30 days after the passage of this act all street railroad companies now or hereafter operating their systems or part of their systems within the District of Columbia shall at all times issue to all passengers applying for the same free reciprocal, continuous, universal transfers, interchangeable from the line or lines of one company to the line or lines of another, good and receivable at all junctions, intersections, or connections, or wherever the tracks of any line approach within 200 feet the tracks of any other line: Provided, That said companies shall have the right to stipulate that such transfers shall be used only in continuation of a trip in one general direction within the District of Columbia to prevent passengers from traveling from one point to another and return on one fare: Provided further, That the existing system of transfers on the lines, respectively, of the Capital Traction Co. and the Washington Railway & Electric Co. shall be continued and made permanent.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM O. MALLAHAN.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DIXON. Will the Senator from Illinois withhold that motion for a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. I will.

Mr. DIXON. I should like to call up the bill (S. 69) for the relief of William O. Mallahan.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 3, after the word "to," to strike out "by reason so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, William O. Mallahan, who was a private in Company A, Eighteenth Reglment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered in as a member of said company or regiment on May 12, 1862, and honorably discharged therefrom on July 20, 1865: Provided, That, other than as above set forth, no bounty, pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

"He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." Draw us close to Thee by Thy holy influence, O God, our heavenly Father. Take away from our hearts all guile and remove far from us all selfish and petty desires that we may indeed dwell in the secret place of the Most High and ever abide under the shadow of the Almighty; that we may have the broadest conceptions of right and truth and justice; live for ideas and do things worth while, and thus prove ourselves worthy of the intellectual, moral, and spiritual gifts Thou hast bestowed upon us, to the honor and glory of Thy holy name. JANUARY 22, 1912.

Dear Mr. Johnson: I acknowledge receipt at the hands of your secretary the clipping from the Times, and advise you my resignation from the District Committee has long been contemplated. I had no desire to go on the committee at all, as I advised you early in the session. My resignation is not due to any disagreement with, you, for you have uniformly treated me with courtesy. I have resigned because I can not give the attention I ought to give to the measures you have in hand, and which, as the ranking member of the minority, would require so much of my time as to prejudice other work I have to do for my constituents. eonstituents. ATLANTIC COASTAL SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution and ask its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 374.

Resolved, That there be printed in paper cover, for the use of the document room of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies of House Document No. 391, Sixty-second Congress, second session.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

That on line 3 the words "two thousand" be stricken out and the words "one thousand seven hundred" be inserted in lieu thereof.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report No. 253 to accompany House resolution 374.

The Committee on Printing having had under consideration the House resolution (H. Res. 374) providing for the printing of 2,000 copies of House Document No. 391, Sixty-second Congress, second session, reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to with the following amendment: That on line 3 the words "two thousand" be stricken out and the words "one thousand seven hundred" be inserted in lieu thereof.

The estimated cost will be $500.

Mr. FINLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania

[Mr. MOORE]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was introduced by my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] in response to a very large demand on the part of Members and others for copies of the Atlantic Coastal Survey Report. At the document room we have been unable to obtain more than one copy per Member so far as the House is concerned, and this work having engaged the attention of the engineers now for nearly three years and being looked forward to with great expectancy and interest by the people all along the coast from Maine to Florida, and there being a very heavy demand for the report, it was thought advisable to introduce this measure with a view to having a few more copies of the report printed. The number fixed by the resolution—1,700—will bring the cost of the publication within $500, the limit of the provision for a House resolution.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is this a report from the Engineer Department of the Wey Department?

ment of the War Department?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is the report of the United States engineers on the project of a continuous waterway from New England to Florida; and, of course, there is a very widespread interest in it. I think many Members of the House will substantiate the statement that there is a heavy demand on the part of their constituents for it. This present report pertains to that part of the project which extends from Boston to Beaufort, N. C.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to. The resolution as amended was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 17681, a bill making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. GARRETT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday there was under consideration an amendment proposed by the gentle-man from Texas [Mr. Burleson] by way of substitute for an amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] to the preceding section.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, some 13 years ago, by reason of the chaotic condition existing at that time in the administration of the funds being appropriated by the General Government for charitable purposes in the District of Columbia, the Congress of the United States created a joint committee to which was referred the entire question relating to charities, with the request that it report to Congress a policy which should be adopted regulating the charities of the District of Columbia

Mr. MANN. How long ago was that?

Mr. BURLESON. About 13 years ago. As the result of most careful consideration given the whole subject by that joint committee a report was made, recommending the creation of a Board of Charities chargeable with the duty of reporting to Congress year by year and advising Congress as to the amounts of money needed for charitable purposes and how they should be expended, and recommending also that the board should advise Congress with reference to any general policy that the Board of Charities should deem advisable in relation to the administration of charity funds.

After 10 years of thoughtful, painstaking, serious consideration given this matter the Board of Charities, at this session of Congress, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and earnestly recommended that there be brought about a complete divorcement between public and private charities. members of the board directed the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that, over their protest, during the past 10 years $750,000, in round numbers, had been appropriated in lump sums to private hospital institutions for the erection of buildings and for improvements upon lands owned by those private institutions. The board brought to the attention of the committee the further fact that, notwithstanding this vast expenditure, the beds in these private institutions subject to the orders of the Board of Charities for indigent patients had been increased only to a very limited degree.

So earnest were the members of the Board of Charities in their recommendations upon the proposition submitted to us, and so anxious were they that something be done, that they urged that the Board of Charities be abolished and that the reform be adopted at once; that the office of a director of charities be created; and that the nearly million dollars now annually appropriated for charitable and corrective purposes, which is at present administered under the direction of the Board of Charities, be disbursed under the direction of this new officer whose creation they recommended.

Mr. Chairman, the present Board of Charities is composed of most excellent men of high character, appointed by the President of the United States from all classes and professions. On it they have a lawyer, who stands in the forefront of his profession; a banker, conservative and of sound judgment; a retired physician, than whom none stands higher; and other callings are worthily represented. All religious denominations are represented on the board-Roman Catholics, Protestants, Jews; it even has a negro member. It is as representative a body as could possibly be selected, and this board, notwithstanding that in the inception of its service its members were much divided in their opinions with reference to how charities should be administered in the District of Columbia, has finally reached one conclusion-they are unanimous in the opinion that there should be a complete divorcement between public and private charity. They go to the extent of asserting in the most emphatic way that under the present system of attempting public charity in their private institutions that dependency is encouraged and increased rather than discouraged and diminished.

For reasons that were satisfactory, your committee at this session of Congress refrained from acting upon this recommendation of the Board of Charities, and considered again in detail the various items carried in the bill appropriating to different institutions sums of money for charitable purposes

[The time of Mr. Burleson having expired, by unanimous consent he was granted an extension of 10 minutes.]

There were two Members on the subcommittee who had been acting in that capacity for a number of years, and when we reached the item relating to the Columbia Hospital they were aware of the fact that its buildings were nearly 100 years old, having been erected originally as a private residence and added to from time to time by the erection of wooden structures, and was not at all suitable for hospital purposes. Repeatedly the attention of the subcommittee had been directed to the fact that this old building was a dangerous fire trap; and inasmuch as the Board of Charities had unanimously recommended that it be abandoned for hospital purposes, and inasmuch as the Board of Commissioners had unanimously concurred in the recommendation, we seriously considered the wisdom of embodying in lieu of the provisions relating to the Columbia Hospital the item which I offered yesterday afternoon as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] and the two items preceding the one to which the gentleman offered his amendment.

The subcommittee would undoubtedly have acted favorably upon the recommendation of the Board of Charities, concurred in by the Commissioners of the District, but for certain information which was brought to us by a gentleman connected with the Columbia Hospital, who assured us that the hospital was not a fire trap; that it was not a menace to life; and that by the expenditure of a few thousand dollars it could be made comparatively safe and suitable for hospital purposes Influenced by these representations, the items relating to Columbia Hospital were continued in this bill as presented to this committee; but now we are surprised by having a proposition brought forward to increase one of these items to the extent of $28,000 for the declared purpose of making the building safe. Mr. Chairman, if that amendment should be adopted this bill will then carry for Columbia Hospital $20,000 for general purposes, $4,500 for the repair of buildings injured by storm, and $30,000 for general repairs, aggregating $54,500, and for what purpose? To perform a certain function which should be performed by the General Government and the District of Columbia in the care of certain dependents who have heretofore been cared for and are now being cared for in that institution.

Now, gentlemen, I submit to you this proposition: The money with which we are dealing is not our individual money. It is the money of the General Government and of the District of Columbia, raised by taxation, but I insist that we ought to deal with this money just as carefully and conscientiously as if it were our own. The District Commissioners and the Board of Charities assert, and no man will dispute the proposition, that for $17,500 a greater service can be rendered for the dependents we seek to care for than for the $54,500 which is sought now to be carried in this bill for this institution. Is it not our duty to observe economy in the action we are about to take?

The question also presents itself, Are we willing to continue this institution as a hospital? The report alluded to by the gentleman from Illinois was made by Elliott Woods, the able Superintendent of our Capitol Building. I want to read one part of that report:

The hospital as it stands, particularly the old building, is a standing menace to human life on account of its inferior and nonfireproof construction. Nevertheless the efforts of persons in charge in providing fire escapes, fire hose, and other appliances are commendable; but the interior partitions are so complicated that if ever a fire got a start it is doubtful if patients could be rescued through the complicated passage-

Speaking now of the expenditure of $30,000 for repairs, to be made of the character indicated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] yesterday afternoon, Mr. Woods uses this language:

The general shape of the building is not suitable for a first-class hospital. Remodeling the interior would, of course, benefit, because rearrangements could be made; but if much money—

Note the words "if much money "- is to be spent for this purpose I would prefer to tear the entire structure down and build a new hospital.

So in the very report upon which you are asked to increase this item by $28,000 comes the declaration that the building can not be remodeled, and that it is the part of wisdom to abandon it completely or destroy it and build anew. But I have some data I wish to submit on this same subject. Yesterday afternoon I asked the engineer commissioner to consult with the municipal architect and secure for me a report upon the condition of this building. I send that report to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have read first the letter of the engineer commissioner.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENGINEER COMMISSIONER DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, Washington, January 23, 1912.

A. S. Burleson,
Chairman Subcommittee on District of Columbia,
House Appropriations Committee, House of Representatives.

Chairman Subcommittee on District of Columbia,
House Appropriations Committee, House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Burleson: In response to your request I went over the Columbia Hospital this morning and had the municipal architect accompany me. The latter has been in touch with the physical condition of that hospital for many years.

I inclose herewith a report just submitted to me by the municipal architect.

I also inclose copy of a letter from the superintendent of the Columbia Hospital, who has been there a number of years, and who is not only familiar with its physical condition, but with the opinion expressed thereon by many different persons competent to judge.

In my opinion if the policy toward medical charities adopted unanimously by the Board of Charities and unanimously approved by the Board of Commissioners is not to be followed, and if, on the contrary, the present expensive and vicious dual system of medical charities is to obtain in the future, then doubtless Columbia Hospital should be rebuilt at a cost of about $300,000. If for financial reasons Congress would desire to defer undertaking the construction of the new building for Columbia Hospital, then it should be with the thought that next year, unless the policy advocated as above described be adopted, Columbia Hospital will be rebuilt. If this action is determined upon, it would seem that at the present time no larger an appropriation than from two to three thousand dollars should be made for Columbia Hospital, just enough to carry current repairs through the year.

The principal building at Columbia Hospital was constructed in 1812 as a private residence. Most of the rest of it consists of oue-story wooden shacks. The whole plant is without ventilation system and subject to an enormous fire risk. The plant, in its structural features, is absolutely without conveniences for hospital purposes. I know of no theory upon which could be based the opinion that any sum intermediate between $2,000 or $3,000 and $300,000 could be wisely appropriated for this institution.

A further reason for proceeding with the smaller appropriation above mentioned at this time to carry the building through another year is in order that the Board of Charities and the commissioners may have further opportunity to impress upon Congress the desirability of a less expensive and more efficient system of medical charities, which the Board of Charities so urgently presents.

Yours, very respectfully,

W. V. Judson,

W. V. Judson,

What I have hastily written above expresses, I am sure, the unanimous opinion of the Board of Charities and the District Commissioners. I concur in the above.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, I ask that the Clerk read the letter of the municipal architect.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read as requested.

Engineer Commissioner District of Columbia, Washington, January 23, 1912.

Maj. William V. Judson.

Corps of Engineers, United States Army,

Engineer Commissioner District of Columbia.

Major: For the past eight years I have been interested in the repairs at the Columbia Hospital.

This is a very old building, constructed, as I believe, for residential purposes nearly 100 years ago.

The building is entirely unsuited for hospital purposes, deficient in light, ventilation, and structural stability. The means of communication are circuitous, indirect, and inconvenient, and as the building is not constructed of fire-resisting material, but, on the contrary, contains a large amount of highly combustible material, these narrow and badly constructed stairways and passages add greatly to the danger in case of fire.

constructed stairways and passages add greatly to the uanger in confire.

The floor spans are excessive, and the shrinking material affords lodgment for dust and dirt, which renders it almost impossible to keep the building in sanitary condition.

After the inspection this morning with you I can not estimate a sum sufficient to repair this building without such extensive alterations as to amount to rebuilding.

I would therefore recommend that no attempt be made to reconstruct the present building, as after such reconstruction the building would still be a makeshift, and I would recommend that no money be expended except the usual amount for minor repairs, due to wear and tear, with a view to the construction of a modern fireproof hospital.

Respectfully,

Snowden Ashford,

Snowden Ashford, Municipal Architect, District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. I now ask that the letter from the superintendent of the hospital be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

COLUMBIA HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN,
PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE AND TWENTY-FIFTH STREET,
Washington, D. C., January 23, 1912.

Maj. W. V. Judson, Engineer Commissioner District of Columbia.

Engineer Commissioner District of Columbia.

My Dear Sir: Replying to your inquiry this morning concerning my opinion relative to the necessity of a new building for the purpose for which it is now used and was originally intended to be used, i. e., a special hospital for the care and treatment of diseases peculiar to women, I desire to say that this building can not be repaired, in my judgment, in a suitable way, and should be replaced by a modern structure as soon as possible, if it is decided that we are to continue hospital work here.

Very respectfully,

J. O. Skinner, M. D.,

Superintendent.

J. O. SKINNER, M. D., Superintendent.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have heard the opinion expressed by the engineer commissioner, by the municipal architect, and by the superintendent of the hospital, all confirming the statement made by Elliott Woods, the Superintendent of the Capitol, in his report, in effect that any expenditure in excess of a few thousand on this building will be a waste of money.

Furthermore, in view of the statements contained in these letters, I want to say that I am unwilling to longer be responsible for maintaining a hospital at the Columbia Hospital Building. For years the fact has been forced on our attention that it is a fire trap; that it is extremely dangerous; and, after we have had a unanimous recommendation from the Board of Charities that it be abandoned, after we have had this recommendation unanimously concurred in by the board of commissioners, after we have had this statement from the municipal architect and the superintendent of the hospital, I insist that the sub-stitute I have offered should be adopted, and that $17,500 be appropriated as indicated, and I assert that such appropriation will accomplish more than can be accomplished by the $54,500, now insisted on by those who support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster]. This hospital should be abandoned, and I earnestly hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois will be voted down and the substitute I have offered be adopted. If this is done this hospital will be closed, and this is what shoula be done.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the proposition offered by the gentleman from Texas as a substitute for my motion of yesterday to increase the appropriation for repairs of this building to $30,000 means the closing of this hospital. As I told you on yesterday, for a number of years we have been expending hundreds of thousands of dollars for the purpose of erecting buildings and buying grounds for private hospitals of which this Government does not own one cent's worth. The Board of Charities, to which the gentleman from Texas has referred, has been for years opposed to this institution. Why? Because that same Board of Charities, whose opinion you are now expected to take, has been against any hospital of this character, and for a great municipal hospital to be erected in the District of Columbia.

We are now taking care of the indigent poor in the city of Washington for less than would be required if we had a municipal hospital. And, more than that, Mr. Chairman, if you erect a great municipal hospital in the city of Washington it becomes necessary for you to erect in certain parts of the city emergency hospitals, or you must depend upon hospitals now private in character to take care of emergency cases, which is unfair to them.

I submit that this amendment is in line and keeping with the rule of the Government which has existed for more than 40 years, to spend money on private institutions and abandon Government property. The gentleman from Texas has offered Government property. The gentleman from Texas has offered no argument here this morning why a hospital of this kind should not be maintained in the city of Washington. I submit to you that in every city in the land you will find a hospital of this character maintained where patients of the character which are taken in here are properly cared for.

I should very much regret to see this hospital closed, because it means, in the end, as this Board of Charities is an enemy to hospitals of this kind, in forever closing it to the people of Washington.

I will state that not a long time ago the fire chief examined this hospital and said that it was true that there was a great deal of inflammable material there, but he commended the institution in what they had done to prevent fires. The fire marshal has gone there again, and his recommendation is, or his finding is, that the hospital is equipped with all the modern appliances of fighting fire, and is much better equipped to fight fire than it was 10 years ago.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas did not read all the report of Mr. Elliott Woods, Superintendent of the Capitol Grounds, to which I referred yesterday. The Superintendent of the Capitol Buildings and Grounds says:

A sum not less than $30,000 will be required to remodel the interior within the outstanding walls, which are fairly good, and make that interior fireproof. To do anything less than this will be of little avail. Of course, $10,000 might repair some of the plastering, put in iron stairways, and reinstall the electric wires, which are in very bad shape, but that would still leave the building proper in a nonfireproof state.

So I submit that the report of Mr. Woods says that the $30,000 would place the building in a condition where it would be fireproof and would be safe for patients of this character.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAY). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to continue for 10 minutes. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I agree that it would be useless to spend this $10,000 as suggested by the Superintendent of Capitol Building and Grounds, but believe, as he has said here, because I have a faith in his ability as an architect, that for $30,000 he can place this institution in such condition that it will be a proper place in which to care for patients of this kind. Mr. Chairman, as a medical man who has had something to do with the practice of medicine for several years and with this class of patients, I submit to you that they ought not to be taken away to institutions where they can not be cared for as they can in an institution of this kind. It is true that charity patients may be put in any sort of an institution or any sort of a place, but I submit, Mr. Chairman, that when we commence charity we should not consider that we must provide only as little as is possible. We should feel it our duty as men to stand up and do for a class of patients who are indigent and unable to take care of themselves, though it may be true in some cases that this condition was brought about through vice or some other cause. I submit that it is humanity to take care of this class of patients and treat them as human beings. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this city should have an institution of the kind that this is where we may properly care for patients who are placed in that kind of a hospital.

This institution has done good work. There is no question as to that. There is not a physician in the city of Washington who would come to you and say one word against this institution, but the remarkable thing has been in all these years with so little attention paid to the interior of this building in order to place it in proper condition that the results have been as There is not an institution in the city of good as they have. Washington where better results are obtained than in the Columbia Hospital. So, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment which the gentleman from Texas offers as a substitute will not prevail, but that this Congress will go ahead and improve its own property, keep its own property in a proper condition to take care of this class of patients, and when the proper time does come that we may erect upon this site, the most beautiful site in the city, an institution where we can treat patients properly, as they ought to be treated, in a better condition than can be done in the old building.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I have read the report and recommendation of Mr. Woods covering this building. no personal knowledge of the amount of work carried on in hospital, but I strongly oppose, Mr. Chairman, the appropriation of any considerable amount of money for improving It is all right to appropriate a limited amount this institution. to make necessary repairs. For my part I would refuse to appropriate any money for it, stop using it, and build a new institution. I believe this city ought to have a hospital for this purpose entirely fireproof, and I know from my personal experience as a builder, and having had the enforcement of the building laws in the city of New York for a period of two years some time ago, that it is impossible to make these old buildings fire-You might build fire escapes or fireproof stairways and make temporary improvements in the building, but it is out of the question to make an old building absolutely fireproof, and so I think it is better either simply to make the absolutely necessary appropriations to tide over some temporary occasion or else abandon the institution and give us a fireproof building.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Texas in charge of the bill for a little information? The bill now carries, as I understand, $26,500 altogether for this hospital.

Mr. BURLESON. With the amendment it carries $54,500.

Mr. MANN. I say the bill now carries $26,500. Mr. BURLESON. Twenty-six thousand five hundred.

Mr. MANN. Of which $20,000 is for care and treatment.

Mr. BURLESON. Of dependents.

Mr. MANN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas proposes to substitute the sum of $17,500 for the entire amount, I take it, on the theory that the maintenance of the hospital for the fiscal year is to be abandoned.

Mr. BURLESON. That is the theory upon which it is offered. Mr. MANN. In the gentleman's opinion if we should appropriate the $30,000 as proposed by my colleague for repairs, would that be a practical waste of money?

Mr. BURLESON. That is the opinion of the engineer commissioner, the municipal architect, the superintendent of the building, and a careful reading of Mr. Woods's report will indicate the same thing, and it is also my opinion, which is very

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's opinion is very valuable to me, If it should be decided to maintain this hospital as a governmental hospital, is it the gentleman's opinion that in the future or within a near period of time it will be necessary to construct a new building?

Mr. BURLESON. Absolutely; if we intend to continue this as a hospital we ought to appropriate $300,000 for a permanent building.

Now, the gentleman's amendment proposes . The bill already carries $20,000 for care and treat-Would not the gentleman be willing to make his amend-$17,500. ment so read that that sum is not cut down in the amount for the care and treatment of patients?

Mr. BURLESON. I would, and I will state to the gentleman that these figures are not my figures. They are the figures of the Board of Charities, confirmed by the commissioners, and they stated to us they could care for a greater number for the $17,500 than would be cared for by the expenditure of the $20,000; but I am perfectly willing to cover the $20,000, and will accept an amendment to that effect.

Mr. MANN. It is problematical what the cost will be, and I think we should not appropriate less money for care and treatment when our doubt is, perhaps, the other way-

Mr. BURLESON. I will accept an amendment to increase the amount to $20,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute as proposed by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there was a point of order reserved on the substitute. I am not sure whether it is supposed to be reserved by my colleague [Mr. Foster of Illinois] or myself. If it was proposed to be reserved by myself, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws

the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, just one word, with the indulgence of the committee. I reserved the point of order upon this, but I do not desire to insist upon the point of order for this reason: I agree we have passed that item in the bill appropriating this amount of money, but I feel this, that if we are not to appropriate a sufficient sum to put this building in proper condition, which is Government property, and we want to throw away that much Government property, then I do not desire to appropriate anything. The little amount of $2,500 would only be a little patchwork, which has been done in the last 40 years upon property owned by this Government. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman care to change his substitute?

Mr. BURLESON. The amendment to read $20,000 instead of $17,500. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson].

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the amendment. There is only one question to be considered by the committee in connection with the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster], and that is this: Is it a prudent expenditure to appropriate $30,000 for the presumed remodeling of the old Columbia Hospital? Now, the truth of the matter is that this old building was constructed in 1812 for residential purposes. There is not one feature or phase of the construction nor of the arrangement of the main building or the auxiliary building which is adapted to hospital purposes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. COX of Ohio. With pleasure.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. What does the gentleman think we ought to do with the property out there? Do you want to abandon a hospital of this kind altogether and permit this property to be used for some other purposes?

Mr. COX of Ohio. I will endeavor to reply to the gentleman's question at the proper juncture. The gentleman admitted yesterday that with the $30,000 we would tear out the old partitions. They would, perchance, also change the stairways. He was not prepared, however, to say to the committee that there would be sufficient funds to tear out the floors.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I submit to the gentleman you could go to any hospital in the city and find wooden floors. You do not mean to say there are any of them that have not wooden floors?

Mr. COX of Ohio. I want to say to my colleague that he will not find any floors in any hospital on earth, I think, which are anything like the old floors in this building. They are filled with old-style timbers; and I submit that it is the height of folly to put $30,000 into this building for partitions and leave the old combustible floors. Now, is there an emergency here requiring the expenditure of $30,000 on this building? Are there conditions requiring the use at all of the Columbia Hospital? The facts negative that suggestion. The truth is that there are abundant facilities now in the other hospitals in this city to take care of the indigent sick, and, as a matter of fact, the Board of Charities, without reserve, report that with the closing up of the Columbia Hospital entirely they can promote both efficiency and economy in the service.

Now, I want to reply to my colleague's question with respect to what shall be done with this property. Your committee was confronted with two propositions. One was submitted by the Board of Charities, and it carried with it the recommendation of the District Commissioners, that the contract system for caring for the indigent sick in the District be done away with and that a project be put under way in behalf of a large municipal hospital. The committee was not prepared at this time to accept the recommendation. We find, in going into the history of charities in the District of Columbia, that a good many years ago it was the practice of these hospitals to come up to the Committee on Appropriations and procure lump-sum appropriations, which were given over to the several institutions by specific items. In the opinion of the Board of Charities this custom threatened the absolute undoing of a workable system for charitable work in the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX of Ohio. The plan was then changed and the indi-gent poor were located in the different hospitals under the direction of the Board of Charities, and these institutions were paid so much per day per head. And that plan and system has worked very well. We had useful information on this subject before the subcommittee, presented by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. FITZGERALD] himself. He made the statement that in the great city of New York experience had taught the organizations there having to do with these charitable works the expediency of maintaining the contract system in taking care of the indigent poor, and that the building and maintaining of municipal and county hospitals were not a prudent thing. So the committee determined that for the time, at least, the old system would be continued and the Board of Charities would be given an appropriation sufficient to take care of the indigent poor in this District. It was the purpose of the committee to make no appropriation whatsoever for the Columbia Hospital, but owing to the persuasive eloquence of my friend from Illinois [Mr. Foster] we receded from that position. We asked him whether or not the Columbia Hospital was, as a matter of fact, a fire trap. He said he believed not, and it was upon his recommendation that the committee receded from the position which it had tentatively assumed.

When the gentleman from Illinois saw that the responsibility rested largely with him, he made a trip to Columbia Hospital, and as a result of his suggestion, I believe, Mr. Woods, the Superintendent of the Capitol Buildings and Grounds, made his statement. We have his statement here that this is an old and combustible building. We have the report also of the municipal architect that it is a mere act of folly to consider the appropriation of this sum of money.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois should, in his statement to the committee, remind us that there is only a mere shadow of sentiment clustering around the old Columbia Hospital, and that the mere circumstance of the Government owning the ground does not justify the contention that we should continue to make appropriations for the maintenance of the place.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman be allowed two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] be extended two minutes more. Is there ob-

There was no objection.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Now, Columbia Hospital came into being under these circumstances: During the Civil War, when the wives of soldiers were here, to be as near as possible to their husbands, it was desirable to establish that sort of an institution for the care of the wives at the time of confinement. The institution was built in connection with an emergency at that time, and it should have been discontinued when the emergency passed. There is no emergency at this moment calling for the continued appropriation of money for the Columbia Hospital. The Board of Charities reported that there are ample facilities in the other institutions, and I insist that it is nothing short of a crime to continue to appropriate money and keep this institution running. The architects report that the wiring of the place is immodern, and that as a result of short circuits it is apt to take fire at any time. Any Member of this House who votes to continue that institution under its present conditions is taking a great responsibility on his shoul-

I earnestly hope that this amendment providing for the expenditure of $30,000 on the old building that was put up as a residence 100 years ago will be voted down. [Cries of " Vote!

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, an apparently simple amendment offered on the part of a Member from the floor to an appropriation bill, or for that matter to any other bill, often imposes on the committee having the bill in charge, the necessity for a somewhat elaborate explanation. The details carried in an appropriation bill, are frequently merely parts of one large and comprehensive scheme. When one of these details is assailed, in order that the committee may justify its action in that regard it must often submit, as I have said, an extensive explanatory statement.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] says that the Board of Charities have been opposed to this particular hospital, its maintenance, and continuance. May it not be fairly assumed that the members of this Board of Charities, charged with a distinct public function in respect to this hospital, are opposed to its continuance merely because they conceive that such continuance is unwise, and not in the interest of the very people with respect to whose care the board is charged with a specific duty

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Does not the gentleman also recognize the fact that one member of the Board of Charities seeks each year to secure a little more appropriation for the hospital with which he is connected?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I am not aware that such is the fact. So far as the Board of Charities are concerned, I understand that they desire to be abolished. So far from seeking aggrandizement for themselves, or for the board, the members of that board desire the same to be discontinued by law. The discharge of their present functions merely serves to bring to them harassment, and not approbation, or support in any form.

The proposition of the gentleman from Illinois means simply this, that we shall tie ourselves to the perpetuation of a build-ing which is in no respect suitable, or fitted for a modern hos-

I am free to say that so far as the committee is concerned, from all the information that we could secure from persons charged with the duty of affording us information of value, we are practically a unit in holding that this hospital as such, ought to go out of existence. The Commissioners of the District, and the Board of Charities, are agreed that with a less amount than is now appropriated for the care of patients at this particular hospital, such patients may be cared for fully as well, and possibly better, by contract with other institutions. The patients in this particular institution are at present cared for by virtue of a contract. If the House will look at the report of Superintendent Woods, it will be noted that his distinct recommendation is to the effect that in lieu of appropriating $30,000 for the repair of an old building, erected in 1812 and long since out of date for the uses of a modern hospital, he advises that the whole structure ought to be razed to the ground, and a new and appropriate modern structure erected on the site. This would cost something like $300,000. As a part of the entire scheme for the care of patients in the District of Columbia, the commissioners hold that we ought to abandon this hospital, rather than undertake to keep it on its tottering legs by additional appropriations for repairs, and construction work. In pursuance of the recommendations of all the persons charged with looking after hospital service in the District of Columbia, we ought to provide for the care, support and attention of the particular patients who are now sent to this hospital by contract with other institutions. I hope that the House in its action on this matter will bear in mind the facts that have been submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have practically finished what I set out to say, and so do not care to weary the Committee of the Whole. But if the committee will consider all the facts, it will see that the Committee on Appropriations have not acted in this matter in a spirit of hostility to this particular institution. They have not been unmindful of the interests of the patients who are now cared for there, but have acted deliberately and with knowledge, and with full assurance on their part that as a part of the entire scheme for the care of indigent patients of this character in Washington, we will be able to provide for them more satisfactorily and economically by contract with other hospitals, than with Columbia. Still from some measure of sentimental regard for this hospital, and from the representations that have been made to us, we have been willing to report a certain amount for the care of patients for another year. This simply tides it along, as it were. It is against our judgment, and against the information that has come to us. It is contrary to the best interests of this city. It is contrary to the best interests of these particular patients. We have taken this step as the result of the almost pathetic and pleading representations that have been made to us. Now we are asked to do something that we submit is directly contrary to the course that wisdom, experience, knowledge, and prudence would sug-We are asked, against the recommendation of the superintendent, against the recommendation of the commissioners, against the recommendation of the Board of Charities, and against the full effect of the testimony before us, to appropriate $30,000 in the vain effort to make of this building something that we can never make of it, that is an adequate modern We all know what it is to overhaul old buildings. We have seen the effort made time and again with respect to an old hotel, to seek by reconstruction and overhauling to make it a modern hostelry. The effort always fails, because these old buildings, that were constructed under different theories of service, under different plans, and different conditions, can not be reequipped, rearranged and remodeled so as to make modern buildings out of them. What is true with respect to a hotel, is a fortiori true with respect to a hospital, the theory and conception of which has so radically changed with advancing

Mr. Speaker, that the committee will pause before I ask, it commits itself to a policy to which the committee is so strongly opposed. To appropriate for the reconstruction of Columbia Hospital, is a policy which the Committee on Appropriations can not approve. It is a policy at variance with the general scheme of hospital service approved by the commissioners and the Board of Charities.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if this were a question of appropriating sufficient funds to put this building in a condi-tion to be utilized for the purposes for which it is maintained, a different question might be presented. But the overwhelming evidence before the committee is that the expenditure of $30,000 in repairs upon this building will then give a building that will be inadequate and unfit for the purposes for which it is to be used and still leave it a dangerous place in which to give medical attendance to the patients to be provided for therein.

If this institution is not to be maintained, a new building should be built. If the new building is not to be erected, in my opinion, from the information laid before the committee, which I have examined carefully, the institution should be closed.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Is there an amendment pending by way of substitute to appropriate any sum-say $300,000-for the erection of a new building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is not. The pending substitute is an amendment appropriating $17,500 to enable the Board of Charities to care for cases, which will otherwise be sent to the Columbia Hospital, in other hospitals under contract.

Mr. CANNON. I quite agree to that as an amendment; but perhaps the best test as to whether this institution should be continued or not would be, in the event that amendment is voted down, to offer another substitute to do what ought to be done if this institution is to be continued as a hospital, and that is to appropriate at least $300,000 for a new building. I think I shall offer such an amendment. Of course, if there is a substitute pending now it would not be in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If such a substitute be offered, there will be time then for discussion. There is no information before the committee to justify an appropriation of $300,000, or any other sum, for a new building for this institution. There is no information whatever, even if Members favored such a building, upon which an estimate could be based as to what it would cost: but, Mr. Chairman, there is no question whatever that either a new building should be constructed for the purposes of this institution or the present building should be abandoned. The committee recommend in this bill $6,450 for repairs; $4,500 of that amount is to replace a roof upon the nurses' home, which was blown off in a storm, and $2,000 for current repairs.

At my suggestion the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster], trustee of that institution, requested Mr. Elliott Woods to visit the institution with him and make an investigation. After Mr. Woods had made his own investigation he sent two of his experts to go over the building, and he reports that $10,000 will be thrown away absolutely in attempting to repair it.

He reports that at least $30,000 would be required for repairs, but that it would be much more profitable to tear the building down. The reason is that the main part of the building was 1812 for a private residence. It is impossible by the expenditure of any amount of money to so reconstruct it as to make a modern hospital that would be satisfactory for the purposes designed.

Mr. Chairman, we have in the District what seems to me an admirable system of caring for the indigent cases of the District. Prior to 1902 a lump appropriation was made to the various institutions regardless of the service rendered. At that time the work was placed under the Board of Charities, which contracts with various institutions for the services rendered. It fixes the cost per capita and passes on the cases which are supposed to be indigent and a public charge.

From my investigation I believe it to be the best system devised for the care of indigent cases in the municipality. There is some difference of opinion as to what is the better system, but until the present year the position of the Board of Charities in this District was strongly favorable to the existing system. I believe that system should be continued. It is not essential to change that system for Congress to assume a responsibility of maintaining an institution which is a menace to persons who are placed in it.

It seems to me, realizing the responsibilities that come to Members of Congress, that it would be most unfair to make an appropriation under the guise of placing this institution in condition to properly discharge its functions, when the information is that after the money has been expended Members would still have the responsibility placed upon them of maintaining an institution inadequate for the uses to which it was put. Under the conditions disclosed, and in view of all the information in possession of the committee, I shall support the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson], believing that the Board of Charities will be able to care for the cases which properly are charges upon the District of Columbia, by entering into contracts with existing institutions and having the services performed in the most satisfactory manner possible under the supervision and control of Government officials.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr.

FOSTER of Illinois), there were—ayes 3, noes 27.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson].
Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, may we not have that amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOSTER of Illinois), there were—ayes 32, noes 11.

So the amendment to the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas, as amended.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to. Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph to follow the amendment of the gentleman from Texas just agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To procure plans and specifications for the erection of a women's hospital and lying-in asylum, to be erected on the present site of Columbia Hospital, $5,006.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, upon that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the House has declded by an overwhelming majority not to repair the present building on the site of Columbia Hospital. years Congress has each year tightened its grasp upon the throat of Columbia Hospital, until now it seems that a Democratic Congress is about to squeeze it a little tighter and choke it off entirely, when, with a little nourishment, the patient would be restored to health and would go along and do useful work in the world. This amendment I am now offering asks only that plans and specifications shall be secured for the building of a new hospital upon the present site. I submit the amendment in order to test this House, to see whether it desires to abandon this institution, which for so many years has done such good work, as is attested by the physicians of the District of Columbia, to see if it is to be thrown out entirely, and this board of charity to be permitted to come in and establish a municipal hospital which they have recommended year after year. In 1907 or 1908, I think it was, they said they recommended nothing for this hospital, but that they would come in in a couple of years and ask Congress to appropriate for a municipal hospital. In view of these facts, if Congress desires to abandon the idea of having a hospital of this kind in the District of Columbia it ought to be known, and it ought to say so at this time.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment. I will simply state this, that a few years ago an appropriation was agreed to for the purchase of a site for a municipal hospital. The site has been purchased, and there is no recommendation upon the part of the District Com-missioners or the Board of Charities or anybody else for the erection of a new hospital, except those who are immediately conected with this institution. I make the point of order that it is legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, one minute. 1907 the Board of Charities said that in two years they would expect to ask Congress to appropriate for a municipal hospital.

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; but they abandoned that, and now earnestly recommend that a hospital be erected at another place. make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill and therefore sustains the point of

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Tuberculosis Hospital: Superintendent, $1,800; resident physician, $480; 1 pharmacist and clerk, 1 superintendent of nurses, and 1 engineer, at $720 each; pathologist, $300; 1 matron, 1 chief cook, 1 assistant copineer, 1 laundryman, and 7 graduate nurses, at $600 each; assistant cook, $360; 2 assistant cooks, at $180 each; assistant engineer, $480; elevator conductor, $300; 3 laundresses, at $240 each; 1 farmer, 1 laborer, 1 night watchman, 3 orderlies, and 1 assistant laundryman, at $360 each; 2 ward maids and 4 servants, at $180 each; in all, $17,160.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We have established in the city of Washington a tuberculosis hospital. I have had occasion in the past to visit this institution, and I have observed in the hearings of the Board of Charities that they have commended most highly this institution. I wish that every Member of this House could go and visit that institution. I wish that they could visit it at a time when they might observe some of the things extolled so highly by this Board of Charities. During the last summer I had occasion to visit an old friend who was located in that institution because he was afflicted with this horrible disease; and I want to say, Mr. Chairman, to this House, notwithstanding the great recommendation of this Board of Charities, that this institution, to my mind, is conducted in a bad way; and I want to say that of all the institutions I have visited in the city of Washington not one of them that I have ever seen was conducted in such a horrible manner as this tuberculosis hospital. I mention this fact that the attention of the Board of Charities may be called to this matter, and that if possible they may remedy the conditions that exist there. I found men there who were Christian men-men who were not accustomed in their lifetime to be associated with men of the character which no Christian wants to associate with, but there they were compelled to stay in wards with that class of men. Are men to put up with that kind of treatment under conditions which we call charity? Has there come in this country a time when charity means that people who are unfortunate must put up with anything that the public sees fit to give them, or ought we as American citizens here, standing in this Congress as the Representatives of our people, demand that when people are compelled to be placed in such institutions that they may there have some of the rights of an American citizen and of a human being? So, Mr. Chairman, I only call attention to these matters that the Board of Charities and this superintendent may take some action in these matters.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I hold no brief for the defense of the Board of Charities, but there has been great hostility aroused on the part of those institutions in this city which have heretofore been the beneficiaries of the appropriations that we make in this bill for charity because the Board of Charities has recommended the abandonment of that system. The Board of Charities has control of this tuberculosis hospital. It was erected under their direction and management. The plans for the institution were prepared by one of the greatest experts in this country, possessing a knowledge of the character of the institution that should be erected for the care of tubercular patients. It has been conducted upon a very high state of efficiency. They have cared for a larger number of tubercular patients since the erection of that hospital than have ever been cared for in the history of this city. There has been a material decrease in the percentage of those afflicted with disease since this hospital has been erected. been a marked diminution in the percentage of the persons afflicted with that disease annually, or contracting that disease, since this hospital was erected. I have never made a visit to the hospital. I am not a physician. I would not know probably or have as much information as the gentleman from Illinois if I did make a visit there, but I think it is only due to these men who are gentlemen of as high character as can be found in this town, who are doing a gratuitous service, who devote hours, days, and weeks of their time, without any compensation whatever, to the discharge of a public duty—I think it is only due to them to say that, as far as those with whom they have been brought into contact are concerned, they have their confidence in every particular.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance of feeble-minded children (white and colored), $16,000.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I observe in this item that it has been reduced from $20,000 to $16,000.

Mr. BURLESON. For the information of the gentleman I will state that in 1909 $16,000 was appropriated for that purpose and $13,352.57 was expended. In 1910, $16,000 was appropriated and $12,921.62 was expended. In 1911, $20,000 was appropriated and an unexpended balance of nearly $5,000 remains, and we had information that it would not be needed, and consequently in the interest of good administration reduced that item by $4,000.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Temporary Home for ex-Union Soldiers and Sailors, Grand Army of the Republic, namely: Superintendent, $1,200; janitor, $360; cook, $360; maintenance, $4,000; in all, $5,920, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, lines 5 and 6, page 89, by striking out the words "one thousand two" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifteen."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman should make a point of order on the amendment. wanted to say, Mr. Chairman, in connection with this matter is that this is one of the best institutions of its kind in the country in the way of temporary good that it does to the ex soldiers and sailors who are here, perhaps, temporarily. They come from every State in the Union. I have before me a copy of the report of the board that has the management of this insti-The board consists of Grand Army men, and they have submitted a report, as they do from year to year. And I want to call the attention of the committee a minute to what this home is doing.

During the year ending June 30, 1911, they took care of 536 ex soldiers and sailors of different wars. The daily average of inmates at that home was 26. The highest number at any one time was 40. The least number at any one time was 10. Those who were sent to soldiers' homes from this institution numbered 90, and the number of positions secured for immates

My amendment is to increase the allowance for the superintendent in order that a small sum may be paid for the matron's services. I recognize that, perhaps, to introduce an amendment to create an allowance to the matron would be subject to a point of order. Therefore I made the amendment to increase the salary of the superintendent, in order that the superintendent's wife, who gives all of her time to nursing sick men who come to this institution from time to time, might receive something in the way of compensation for her services. I the sick old soldiers who come there from time to time.

This board in its report upon this institution for the time I mentioned says, speaking of the superintendent of the home:

He has been in the employ of the board of management for 14 years, and he is known for his kindness, his executive ability, and his firmness in the management of the home. His wife has acted as matron for the home without pay for a number of years, and has been an angel in disguise in nursing and in the care of the sick ones in the home.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that we could, without crippling the finances of the Government, allow the small sum of $300 a year for this coming fiscal year to be paid to the wife of this super-I have been to this home and have examined it. I have been in every nook and corner of it and know the way that they care for ex-soldiers.

Mr. BURLESON. What assurance have we that the wife will get this money if we increase the superintendent's salary?

Mr. DYER. I have talked to the board of management, will say to the gentleman from Texas, and I told them I doubted if an allowance could be had here for her by introducing a special provision providing for a matron. I know the aptness of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] in making points of order on this bill, and therefore I took the matter up of increasing the superintendent's salary, with the understanding that the matron would receive $25 a month. There are no womenfolks in this institution, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, except the wife of this superintendent; and those of us who have had any experience in hospitals or in illness during army life understand that the good and kind ministrations of a woman nurse are much more beneficial than those of men nurses; and when, for such a small pittance, we can have the continued services and help and assistance of this good woman to look after these old soldiers and to make soldiers who come here from the State of Texas and from Virginia and from Missouri-

Mr. BURLESON. I am satisfied that no Texas soldier ever availed himself of this privilege.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is not acquainted with the home. I am satisfied if he will go there he will find that during the past year, from the record, that there have been men there during the year from practically every State of the Union.

Mr. BURLESON. They may have said so, but they were not from Texas.

Mr. DYER. Texas is a pretty big State and has produced some very good soldiers in its time.

Mr. BURLESON. Not of this kind.

Mr. DYER. They come to Washington looking up their Congressmen, trying to find out why they have not secured pensions, and so on, and they get stranded here. This home is for the purpose of taking care of them for a short period until they can communicate with their folks at home and get money to get home on, and during the time they are trying to find their Congressmen and borrow enough from them to enable them to get home.

This home has done a great deal of good. It has been literally a house of refuge. The board that has had charge of the home all these years is composed of splendid men, old veterans of the Civil War and members of the Grand Army of the Republic. They recommended that this home be maintained, and it has been verificined now for 22 years. In fact, the home it has been maintained now for 22 years. In fact, the home was established about 24 years ago, and the Government has been helping it for the past 22 years.

Now, the amount that is allowed under this item of the bill is distributed, Mr. Chairman, as follows: Rent, $1,200; superintendent, $1,200; janitor, $360.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARRETT). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Cook, $360, leaving $2,800 for maintenance, for coal, wood, bedding, stationery, food, and all of those articles.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the superintendent, who has been in this home for 14 years past, is an old veteran of the Civil War. He is the manager of this home. His wife, to whom I would have this allowance go, and to whom I assure you it will go if the committee will agree to it, deserves this recognition. money will be well spent, most deservingly spent; and I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] will not oppose this amendment, because it will become an established fact that he is agreeable to having in this home a matron to help look after

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Will the gentleman say how many ex-soldiers Mr. MANN. of the Civil War, ex-soldiers of the Spanish War, and ex-soldiers of the Mexican War were in the home during the last year, or within any specified time?

Mr. DYER. The total number who were there during the past year from time to time is 557.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not get my question. How many soldiers of the Spanish War were there, how many of the Mexican War were there, and how many of the Civil War were there:

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that this statement that I have, furnished by the management, does not give the number of Civil War seldiers or the number of Spanish War soldiers. But the home does take in any honorably discharged soldier of either the Civil War or the War with Mexico or the Spanish War for a limited number of days. Ten days is the usual time they allow anyone to stay there, unless he becomes sick in the meantime and can not be taken away.

Mr. MANN. Then I call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the fact that during this fiscal year they can take in soldiers of the Spanish-American War and the Mexican War, but that it has not been the custom in the past and is not provided for in the bill under discussion.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the reason for that is that they have never applied, and therefore we do not want the bill to be encumbered by the additional language.

Mr. DYER. I did not catch the gentleman's answer.

Mr. BURLESON. I say the reason for that is that the soldiers of the Mexican War have not applied, and therefore we did not want to encumber the bill with unnecessary language.

Mr. DYER. I would state to the gentleman from Texas that during the past year they told me that at least as many soldiers of the Spanish War and soldiers of the Philippine insurrection have been taken care of at that home as veteran soldiers of the Civil War.

Mr. BURLESON. There is no authority of law to take care of soldiers of the Philippine insurrection there, and there never has been any such authority.

Mr. DYER. They take care of the soldiers of the Spanish War, and the report I have here from the board of management shows that they have heretofore been doing that. I think, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to pass-this amendment. Then, I will offer another amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, there was no recommendation submitted for the increase of the salary of the superintendent. On the contrary, our information is that the salary of the superintendent is ample. I am afraid his wife will not get it if it is allowed, and I insist upon my point of order against it.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I have stated all I care to. should be glad to have the gentleman from Texas elaborate upon his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BURLESON. That there is no authority of law for the increase of this salary.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Missouri point out the authority of law?

Mr. DYER. There is no authority of law. I quite agree with the gentleman from Texas on that point. This man has never been paid any more than what is being appropriated for in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a second amendment, to strike out the words "Grand Army of the Republic" and insert "of the Civil War and of the Spanish War," so that it will Temporary home for ex-Union soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and of the Spanish War.

Mr. BURLESON. Upon that I reserve a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 5, page 89, the words "Grand Army of the Repub-lic" and insert the words "of the Civil War and of the Spanish War."

The CHAIRMAN. On that amendment the gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that it is a change of existing law.

sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the same provision at the end of the section as was in it last year-

And ex soldiers and sailors of the Spanish War and the War with Mexico shall also be admitted to the home.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BURLESON. I reserve a point of order upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois kindly send his amendment to the desk in writing?

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "Columbia," in line 10, page 89:
"And ex soldiers and sailors of the Spanish War and the War with Mexico shall also be admitted to the home."

Mr. BURLESON. I make the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. Upon that the gentleman from Texas makes the point of order.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman from Texas permit a ques-

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly, Mr. DYER. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to a quotation from the report of the board of managers of this home, submitted for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, in which they say:

As provided by law this home is open not only to the veterans of the Civil War, but to those of the Mexican War and of the Spanish-American War. Indeed, one-half of the inmates of the home are veterans of the War with Spain.

Mr. BURLESON. That does not make it law.

Mr. DYER. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas if he objects to soldiers of the Spanish War or of the Mexican War being admitted to this home?

Mr. BURLESON. I have never had any communication on the subject from soldiers of the Spanish-American War, but I have had a communication from a soldier of the Mexican War, in which he says he has information that no soldier of the Mexican War has ever been carried there, and that he did not want it in the bill; and my opinion is that no Spanish-American soldier has ever gone there.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. If there should be one old Mexican War veteran there, do you not think that is a reason for including that provision?

Mr. BURLESON. I make the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] on the point of order. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that it is not authorized by existing law, and that the amendment would change existing law.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. This being in the bill last year, Mr. Chairman, I take it that makes it current law, and for that reason the same provision would be in order in the bill this year, as it was there last year.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, being in the bill of last year makes it current law, but it does not make it permanent law, does it?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois, It makes it in order to propose the same thing on the bill for this year that was in it last year. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that to be the rule.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania wish to make some observations on the point of order?

Mr. BOWMAN. I want to say that the point was raised that no Spanish War veteran had been there. One came through from my district on his way to one of the soldiers' homes. When here he lost his ticket, and he was kept in this institution for several days, until a ticket was furnished him.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I think that is a good reason why this should be in order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. Mr. DYER. I will ask the gentleman from Texas to with-

Mr. BURLESON. I will reserve it for one minute. Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Texas, who I am satisfied wants to do the proper thing in this matter, that in addition to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, one night I, in company with some Grand Army officers from the District, went through this home. It was cold weather, and we went through it thoroughly. The kitchen and every part of it was crowded, as many as they could take in, and 60 per cent were ex-soldiers of the Spanish War. There were more ex-soldiers of the Spanish War there for relief, for the privilege of staying there a few days, a week, or two weeks, than there were of the Civil War, and the reason is very apparent. The old veterans in the Civil War, those not able to take care of themselves, are nearly all settled in some place or in the soldiers' homes. The Spanish War veterans are of a later date and they are more apt to be here or some other place than are those of the Civil War.

The gentleman from Texas in making this point of order is doing a great injustice to these soldiers who served their country faithfully and honestly in the Spanish War when he denies them the privilege of going to this temporary home. It compels those who happen to be without funds, if the gentle-man's point of order is sustained, to go to the municipal lodging houses or to sleep on the streets, or wherever it may be possible to get in.

Mr. FOWLER. And it does not cost any more.

Mr. DYER. And, as the gentleman from Illinois says, it does not cost the Government any more. The Grand Army board of management are glad and willing to give the benefit of this home to those who served in the Spanish War. the gentleman from Texas will withdraw his point of order in the name of these young men who served their country faithfully and honestly.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the Spanish-American soldier wishes to avail himself of the privileges of this home, and I therefore insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hospital for the Insane: For support of the indigent insane of the District of Columbia in the Government Hospital for the Insane in said District, as provided by law, $310,000.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that this item has been reduced $13,000. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee in reference to the matter.

Mr. BURLESON. It is reduced $13,400. This estimate was submitted through the proper channels and a calculation made The estiof the amount necessary to maintain the patients. mate was made for $310,000, and we allowed $310,000, every dollar asked.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to just one matter. It has been demonstrated this morning that Congress is not in favor of appropriating for an old building used for hospital purposes. I desire in this connection to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that if he will visit the Hospital for the Insane over at St. Elizabeth he will observe one large brick building, and I hope that when the matter of the maintenance of that hospital is taken up he will be vigilant in securing the opinion of an expert builder, an architect, fire marshal, members of the District Committee, superintendent of the hospital, District Commissioners, Board of Charities, and all others that may be connected in some way with these matters, and get a report submitted to Congress upon the condition of that building and how it would be if it should get afire with all these patients located in the building as it is now.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, in response to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, I will state that we have a superintendent of the St. Elizabeth Asylum, one of the most efficient officers in the Government service, and I am quite sure that if there is any building over there that needs improvement or any building that is dangerous or any building that needs repairs or any building that should be removed he will be prompt and vigilant in his efforts to bring it to the attention of the proper authorities to see that the proper remedy is applied.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will be willing to take the word of the superintendent and give him the new building, although he refused to do it in the case of the Columbia Hospital.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITIA OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

MILITIA OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

For the following, to be expended under the authority and direction of the commanding general, who is hereby authorized and empowered to make necessary contracts and leases, namely:

For expenses of camps, including hire of horses for officers required to be mounted, and such hire not to be deducted from their mounted pay, instruction, practice marches and practice cruises, drills, and parades, fuel, light, heat, care and repair of armories, offices, and storehouses, practice ships, boats, machinery, and dock, dredging alongside of dock, telephone service, and for general incidental expenses of the service, $25,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order to the entire paragraph?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; for the reason that there are so many unauthorized items in it to which no particular amount is set. It is necessary to make the point of order to the entire section for that reason. Besides that, the amount | point of order as to that.

of money fixed covers those things which are authorized and those things which are not authorized. It is necessary to make the point of order against the whole paragraph for the reason, as I have just said, that there are a number of items in there not authorized, and the amount of money set apart is to cover the unauthorized as well as the authorized items.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I have before me the United States Statutes at Large, volume 25. I read from page 780, section 55:

Sec. 55. That there shall be allowed for the general expenses of the militia such sums as may be necessary for the rental and furnishing of offices for headquarters, stationery, postage, printing and issuing orders, advertising orders, providing necessary blanks for the use of the militia, the cost of storing, caring for, and issuing all public property, and such other contingent apenses not herein specially provided for as may be estimated and appropriated for, the accounts for which shall be certified to by the officer receiving the service or property charged for, approved by the commanding general, and paid in the manner provided in section 60.

That is the general authorization for the establishment of the militia force, and it also provides for defraying the annual expenses of the militia. There is another section which, in terms, provides for the rent of armories, and so forth. I read from section 39, on page 777:

Sec. 39. That the quartermaster general of the militla shall provide, by rental or otherwise, such armories for the National Guard as may be allowed and directed by the commanding general. He shall also provide each organization with such lockers, closets, gun racks, and cases or desks as may be necessary for the care, preservation, and safe-keeping of the arms, equipments, uniforms, records, and other military property in their possession. He shall also provide suitable rooms for the offices of the commanding general and staff, for the keeping of books, the transaction of business, and the instruction of officers, and also suitable places for the storage and safe-keeping of public property.

The Naval Militia is also involved in the particular paragraph to which the point of order is directed. I direct the attention of the Chair to volume 30, United States Statutes at Large, page 404. I will hand that to the Chair. It is an act to provide for the organization of a naval battalion in the District of Columbia, and in terms covers all of the other items embodied in the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Kentucky on the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, as the Chair well knows, this act covers very many pages, and I have not seen it for probably a year. I will ask just a little indulgence to look and find just what I want. I would, however, in the meantime, invite the attention of the Chair to the fact that in this bill there is provision for the purchase of boats, docks, and for dredging, which I am sure is not authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky heard the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas that there was included the Naval Militia as well as the other militia in this appropriation bill, and the Chair was cited to volume 30, page 404, and has that before him.

The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed temporarily, with the point of order pending. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of armories, offices, storehouses, and quarters for noncom-missioned officers of the Army detailed for duty with the militia,

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order as to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order as to the paragraph just read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And I submit the same request, that I may have time to look the matter up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed with the point of order pending. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For cleaning and repairing uniforms, arms, and equipments, and contingent expenses, $2,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order as to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order as to the paragraph just rend.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. With the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. And asks that the paragraph may be passed temporarily, with the point of order pending. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows: For pay of troops, other than Government employees, to be disbursed under the authority and direction of the commanding general, $24,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order as to the paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, as to this particular point of order I direct the attention of the Chair to the act of 1889, under which the militia was organized, which I have sent forward to the Chair. The pay for the District Militia was first provided in an appropriation act passed in 1900 and has been annually continued since that date, and in 1905 the following item was carried in the appropriation bill:

Provided, That hereafter members of the National Guard of the District of Columbia, who receive compensation for their services as such, shall not be held or construed to be officers of the United States or persons holding any place of trust or profit or discharging any official functions under or in connection with any executive department of the United States within the provisions of section 5498 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

That is the additional law bearing on the point raised by the gentleman, and I know of no law other than I have cited to support this item in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair heard it read—
Mr. BURLESON. I will send it to the Chair so the Chair can have it before him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the statute to which the gentleman from Texas has just referred is repealed on page 781 of the act in volume 25, which the Chair now has before him.

The CHAIRMAN. On what page?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Page 781. The act to which the gentleman has just referred is repealed by that.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will submit the same request in connection with this point that has been submitted, so that the Chair may pass on all of the points of order at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the item will be temporarily passed over, with the point of order pending.
There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXTENSION OF WATER MAINS.

EXTENSION OF WATER MAINS.

One half of the following sums appropriated in the District of Columbia appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1911 and 1912, chargeable one half to the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half to any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as may be expended, for the purposes of extending water mains, shall be refunded to the Treasury of the United States out of the revenues of the water department in four equal annual installments, at the rate of $20,000 per annum, namely, $50,000 toward the installation of water trunk mains to Congress Heights, D. C., contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1911, and $56,000 for the completion of said water trunk mains contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1912; $24,000 for the extension of 12-inch water main from Elliott Place along the Conduit Road to Weaver Terrace, and for laying 8-inch water mains in Forty-seventh Place, Ashby Street, Edmund Street, and Sherrier Place, contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1911, and $45,100 for the extension of water trunk main to Benning, D. C., contained in the District appropriation act for the fiscal year 1912; in all, $175,100.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman J. make the point

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order as to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order made by the gentleman ?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That it is legislation, and then there is one thing in it to which I particularly object, and that is that it proposes to return $175,000 to the United States. Now, if the United States is to get half of it and the District half of it, then I think they have made the figures wrong. This provides that there shall be refunded to the Treasury of the United States, the District of Columbia paying her half, $175,000, in four equal installments of $20,000 each. That is $80,000. Eighty thousand dollars, according to my arithmetic, is not half of $175,000, and then it makes no provision for interest

Mr. BURLESON. I can easily explain that to the gentleman from Kentucky. The appropriations for these extensions of water mains in last year's bill aggregated $175,100, but the full amount was not required to make the extension-only $160,000 being expended in making same—consequently only one-half of $160,000 is sought to be charged against the District government. The purpose of this item is to reimburse the Federal Government for one-half the cost of making certain extensions of water mains. It was clearly the intention of Contract that the Contract of the state of th gress that the Government should be reimbursed, but through an oversight the provision for the purpose was not carried in last year's bill. Instead of casting a burden on the Government, the effect of the item is to pay to the Government $80,000 justly due it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman deny that there is not due to the Government $75,000 more than this?

Mr. BURLESON. I have said to the gentleman that the ap propriation aggregated $175,100, but the work of extension did not cost that much; it cost only $160,000, and consequently the Government ought not to be reimbursed for more than one-half of that sum. The gentleman knows that there is, on an average, about 2 per cent of the amounts of every appropriation bill that passes through the Congress that remains unexpended. was a very close estimate of what would be required. It cost $160,000 to do the work. One hundred and sixty thousand dollars was expended, and we are seeking to return to the Federal Government one-half the amount actual expended. The remaining portion of the $175,100 was not drawn from the Do I make myself understood by the gentleman Treasury. from Kentucky?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Hardly.
Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that for these extensions Congress authorized an expenditure of $175,100, but when the engineer commissioner had performed the service he found that it cost only $160,000 to do the work. When he had completed these extensions he had expended $160,000 of money, leaving in the Treasury $15,100. Now, we seek to reimburse the General Government for the one-half of the money that was taken out of the Treasury, which we think now should be re-turned, inasmuch as this was a service that was to be jointly paid for by the District government and the General Govern-

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Do I understand the gentleman, or do I misunderstand him, that $175,000 of this was unexpended?

Mr. BURLESON. There was $15,100 which remained unexpended after the work was completed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] that if I understand the situation correctly, $175,000 was appropriated and $160,000 was expended. Now, of that amount, $80,000 should be chargeable to the District. Fifteen thousand dollars above the $160,000 has never been expended, and never will be expended, and so that can not be charged to the District.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And is cared for by a different

Mr. MANN. And at the end of the time fixed by law that is covered into the Treasury as an unexpended balance and never will be expended.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. This is an attempt to do away with the covering-in act?

Mr. MANN. No. This is an attempt to make the District pay the $80,000 that the Government has expended, and it ought to have been charged to the District in the first instance, according to law, but was not.
Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I withdraw the point of order,

Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The provision contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1911, that all assessments on account of water trunk mains to Congress Heights, and for the extension of 12-inch water main from Elliott Place along the Conduit Road to Weaver Terrace, and for laying 8-inch water mains in Forty-seventh Place, Ashby Street, Edmund Street, and Sherrier Place, when collected shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the revenues of the United States in equal parts, is hereby repealed, and such assessments heretofore and hereafter collected shall be credited to the revenues of the Water department.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph, so that the gentleman may explain it.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that it is really a part of the preceding item. As the provision for these extensions was carried in the law last year it did not contain the usual provision to reimburse the Federal Government. Now, we want to repeal that part of the act which failed to require that that should be done.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think the gentleman is slightly in error about the purpose of this paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. No; I am not. It is a part of the same item to which the gentleman from Kentucky objected.

Mr. MANN. This is a proposition to repeal a provision that requires one-half to be credited to the Government, when collected, and one-half to the District of Columbia and to turn it over to the water department.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that the practice has been to charge the whole expense of these extensions to the revenues of the water system of the District.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but that does not contain this item. It is a question of fact here. Here was a water extension made. Afterwards there was a provision of law that when the money should be collected—I suppose by special assessment—one-half was to be paid to the credit of the Government and one-half to the District of Columbia. Who paid the original amount, and out of what fund?

Mr. BURLESON. There was an appropriation carried in the bill for the amount required to do this work. It ought to have been imposed upon the current revenues of the water system.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. Certain benefits are going to be assessed against the properties and lands through which the extensions were made, and when these amounts are collected they will be credited to the water system. That is what we are endeavoring to accomplish.

Mr. MANN. I know; and that is what I am endeavoring to find out about. The gentleman now says—and I am not sure that he is correct about that—that these mains were laid in consequence of an appropriation one-half of which was contributed by the General Government and one-half contributed out of the District revenues. If that be the case—

Mr. BURLESON. I will read to the gentleman the explanation, which was carefully prepared, and will show exactly what we are trying to accomplish.

we are trying to accomplish:

tion, which was carefully prepared, and will show exactly what we are trying to accomplish:

The District appropriation act for the fiscal year 1911 appropriated $50,000 toward the extension of water trunk mains to Congress Heights and $24,000 for the extension of 12-inch water main from Elliott Place along the Conduit Road to Weaver Terrace, and for laying 8-inch water mains in Forty-seventh Place, Ashby Street, Edmund Street, and Sherier Place. These appropriations were payable one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The act further provided as follows:

"Provided, That assessments for water mains hereinbefore provided for shall be levied in accordance with the provisions of an act approved April 22, 1904, entitled 'An act authorizing the laying of water mains and service sewers in the District of Columbia, the levying of assessments therefor, and for other purposes': And provided further, That all such assessments when collected shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the revenues of the United States in equal parts."

It was apparently the intention of Congress that the amounts appropriated should be relimbursed by assessments against abutting property for laying these mains.

The law referred to in the proviso above quoted states that for laying water mains assessments shall be levied at the rate of $1.25 per linear foot against all lots or land abutting upon the highway in which the water main shall be laid, but further provides that where water service has already been furnished and assessments levied along a frontage no further assessment shall be levied until it is subdivided, or until connection is made with the main.

The water main to Congress Heights was a trunk main, which was laid from the intersection of Pennsylvania Avenue and Potomac Avenue SE., on the city side, and thence along Pennsylvania Avenue across the Pridge and the other

The District appropriation act for the fiscal year 1912 appropriated $56,000 for the completion of this main, but contained no provision about assessment.

The total amount therefore appropriated for this main was $106,000. The cost of the work, which has been completed to Congress Heights, was $95,068.83. For the reasons above stated, there will be no assessment for this main.

The main along Conduit Road and the other streets named in the appropriation, for which $24,000 was appropriated, has been completed at a cost of $19,928.48, and the total assessment levied on account of this main was $7,799.65. The cost of laying the main was, for the 12-inch main, $2 per foot, and for the 8-inch main, $1.30 per foot, so that the assessment under the law at the rate of $1.25 per front foot did not cover the cost of the mains, and therefore the total cost could not be reimbursed by assessments.

The District appropriation act for the fiscal year 1912 also appropriated—one-half from the revenues of the United States and one-half from the revenues of the United States and one-half from the revenues of the United States and one-half from the revenues of the United States and one-half from the revenues of the United States and one-half from the revenues of the United States and one-half from the revenues of the United States and one-half from the revenues of the United States and one-half from the revenues of the United States and one-half from the revenues of the United States and one-half from the revenues of the United States and one-half from water department funds, for which assessments are levied under the law at the rate of $1.25 per front foot.

It was apparently the intention of Congress Heights, Conduit Road, and Benning should be reimbursed by assessments, but, as will be seen by what is stated above, this can not be accomplished in that manner.

The total amount appropriated for the Congress Heights and Conduit Road main was $130,000, and the total amount spen $114,997.31. For the main to Benning, which has not

Mr. MANN. Then I understand from the gentleman's statement that the money having been expended, partly at the expense of the General Treasury, it is now proposed to reimburse the Government out of the water fund, and thereupon, when money collected by special assessment, that money would go back to the water department?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; it will be credited to the water funds.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw my point of order, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his point of order. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

ANACOSTIA RIVER FLATS.

For continuing the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats, from the Anacostia Bridge northeast to the District line, to be expended under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, upon plans to be prepared under the direction of and to be approved by a board of engineers to consist of the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, and the engineer officer in charge of the improvement of the Potomac River; said sum to be available for the preparation of plans, the prosecution of the work, the employment of personal service, and for such other purposes as may in the judgment of said board be necessary to carry out the purposes of this appropriation, $100,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph. Have these plans been prepared for the Anacostia River Flats?

Mr. BURLESON. They have been. They were prepared under the direction of the Chief of Engineers in the War Department, and $100,000 is being expended during the current year for the purpose of reclaiming the flats.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. This item here is for next year.
Mr. MANN. Then I suggest that instead of reading "upon plans to be prepared," and so forth, it should read "plans that have been prepared."

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I think the plans are prepared from time to time as the extension is made. That is the point.

Mr. MANN. Apparently we commit the Government to any plans that the War Department may hereafter prepare, and I do not think that is the intention of Congress.

Mr. BURLESON. No. It may be necessary, however, to prepare further plans as the work progresses or is extended to different sections of the flats.

Mr. MANN. I will withdraw my point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraws his point of order. The Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the extension of and maintaining the high-service system of water distribution, laying necessary service and trunk mains for low service, and purchasing, installing, and maintaining water meters on services to such private residences and to such business places as may not be required to install meters under existing regulations as may be directed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, said meters at all times to remain the property of the District of Columbia, to include all necessary land, machinery, buildings, mains, and appurtenances, and labor, and the purchase and maintenance of horses, wagons, carts, and harness necessary for the proper execution of this work, so much as may be available in the water fund during the fiscal year 1913, after providing for the expenditures hereinbefore authorized, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. CIMS. Mr. Chalinnen, L reserves a point of order.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Mr. BURLESON. What part of the bill is that? Mr. SIMS. On page 100, beginning with line 14. I a point of order on so much of the section and paragraph as provides for installing meters in private residences and makes appropriations for it. That is new legislation.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that this policy of installing meters was inaugurated about three years ago. It is a work now in progress, and we have been continuing the installation of water meters since that date. I want to assure the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] that there is absolutely no hardship imposed on anyone by the installation of these water meters. The purpose of installing the meters is to prevent leakage and wastage of water, and it is very rare indeed that any increase in the annual water charge is made against any person as a result of installing a water meter.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, no doubt the statement of the gentleman is correct when he says there is no increase in the charge, but that is not the question-

Mr. BURLESON. I say there is very rarely an increase in the water charge

Mr. SIMS. Because after the installation of water meters they will not use the same amount of water that they would use without them. The trouble with me has always been on this very question of installing water meters in the houses of the poorer people, that the very fear of increasing the charge will cause them to exercise economy in the use of water when they ought to use it more lavishly. I think it is not in the they ought to use it more lavishly. I think it is not in the interest of good sanitation of this District to put water meters in private residences, especially those of the poorer tenants or renters

Mr. BURLESON. That is not being done on any general scale. I want to direct the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the per capita consumption of water in this District is 178 gallons a day. Does not the gentleman think that is entirely too much, indicating waste?

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman does not mean to say that there is a consumption of 178 gallons per person per day among the class of people I am talking about.

Mr. BURLESON. They constitute a part of the total popu-

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman means that all the water used by everybody amounts to that, but surely the water consumption by families does not approach anything like that. Besides that, the gentleman has begun legislation which I heartily approve, by which we are going to increase this water supply by the work to be carried out at Great Falls. Now, I have been noticing this discussion from time to time. The water supply at present is abundantly sufficient, even without these meters; but the commissioners think that the time may perhaps come within the next 10 years when it will not be sufficient, and we may require a new aqueduct or an additional supply of water.

Mr. BURLESON. That is true.

Mr. SIMS. The additional supply of water is much nearer than 10 years, and will be abundant, and it costs a great deal of money to buy these meters, and they have to be paid for out of the water revenues.

Mr. BURLESON. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. I believe the meters cost not to exceed $13.

Mr. SIMS. To each family? Each meter costs $13?

Mr. BURLESON. I think so.

Mr. SIMS. It would take a long time for the excess of water that the families would use to pay that much money, and it is certainly against the best sanitation and against cleanliness, and against the amount which I think ought to be used in sprinkling small yards and lawns.

Mr. BURLESON. I am in thorough accord with the views expressed by the gentleman from Tennessee with reference to the desirability of proper sanitation and the proper use of water, and I want to say to him that the officers in charge of this service have no disposition to oppress anybody. They have no purpose to fix an extortionate charge for water. They have no desire to lessen the quantity of water within reason being used by the people of the District of Columbia. This installation of water meters has served a useful purpose, and it is a work in progress and should be carried further. We have installed, I think, probably 30,000 meters, and the installation ought to continue.

Mr. SIMS. I have no objection to it anywhere except in private families, and do not object to the installation of meters in many private houses; but the poorer tenant class who can barely pay rent, must economize in every direction. I am sincerely afraid it will have a tendency to cause them to use less water than they ought to use. I know there is an occasional abuse in the use of water. have seen a sprinkler turned on in one of these fine yards, when the owner of the house was away in the summer, and that sprinkler would run all that afternoon and all night and all the next morning, to sprinkle a front yard, simply because they did not turn it off. I think such waste as that ought to be prevented, if there is any way to do it.

Mr. BURLESON. And meters are being installed in establishments of that character.

Mr. SIMS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BURLESON. We can not attempt to place a limitation upon the discretion of those in charge of this service. I am quite sure these gentlemen are not going to abuse the discretion vested in them, and I think the gentleman is unnecessarily alarmed.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not the policy of the commissioners to install meters for all buildings?

Mr. BURLESON. I do not remember the number of meters we have, but I do not think it is the purpose of the commissioners to establish meters in all buildings. They have only a limited number of meters installed at the present time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The gentleman will pardon me; I think 24 per cent of the city is metered.

Mr. SIMS. Well, we are going to have an abundant supply of water. Some families are abundantly able to pay for it, and, no doubt, they waste it. Had we not better suffer a little than to curtail the use of a copious supply of water by people who ought to have it and who suffer for the lack of it?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly. Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee follows the progress of things in the District quite closely. I do not know that it has been asserted, but it has been insinuated that the District Commissioners propose to increase the water rates, so as to have more money with which to install meters.

Mr. SIMS. I have no such assertion to make myself. Mr. MANN. It is true that if they did increase the It is true that if they did increase the water rates they would have more money to install meters.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly; and I am not in favor of increasing the water rates, because the people who need to use most will use less. The rich people do not care anything about meters, because they can pay for it and not feel it; but the people who ought to use an abundant supply of water will be curtailed, and their use of it will be reduced because they know that every pint and every quart which they use is measured and charged for. I think it is a bad policy to meter private houses, especially of the tenement class.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there any intention of metering the class of houses the gentleman speaks of?

Mr. SIMS. I hope there is not, but rather than to have them metered I would take them out of every private house in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that if there is any intention to meter the small private houses, as a rule, it would very much decrease the water rates on the expensive and large houses to put in a meter?

Mr. SIMS. That may be true; I do not know.
Mr. MANN. That is absolutely true, ordinarily.
Mr. SIMS. I have seen great abuses of the kind that I have mentioned, and I would be very glad to see them prevented.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If a meter is put in a house, of course, the water will be paid for, but I would not say that it was a waste to keep these beautiful private yards in order. I think those who can afford to have such places can afford to pay a reasonable price for the water.

Mr. MANN. As a rule, where you put the meter in a house of some considerable size the cost of water is reduced. In my town so many have wanted meters that they have been compelled to refuse them.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have the information which I was hunting for, and will give it to the gentleman. The charge for meter service in the District is 3 cents for 100 cubic feet, with a minimum rate to all consumers of $4.50 per The average annual payment for private residences where meters were installed was $4.76.

Mr. SIMS. Per annum?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; an increase of 26 cents over the charge before the meter was put in.

Mr. SIMS. Per annum?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes. I am not surprised that the gentleman from Tennessee should be astonished.

Mr. SIMS. I have been paying some water rates, and I happen to know that that is not true as to the payments I have made.

Mr. BURLESON. The annual rate against a two-story house, 19 feet front, is $4.50.

Mr. SIMS. I paid $8 or $9 for one that I had.
Mr. BURLESON. Oh, well, probably the gentleman from Tennessee lived in a palatial residence.

Mr. SIMS. I did not; it was 1410 Massachusetts Avenue, where I paid $8 or $10 water rate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman did not pay enough for the water in that house.

Mr. SIMS. I paid the bills that were sent to me. But, Mr. Chairman, I would rather vote taxes to have free water for the poor people of this District than to have meters in a single

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, in my deliberate judgment, the people in the District of Columbia come as near receiving free water as any people in the world. I know they come nearer receiving free water than any people within the confines of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think we get freer water in Chicago.

Mr. BURLESON. I am satisfied that a careful investigation by the gentleman will convince him that he is not supported in that statement. Mr. SIMS. Well, I am in favor of pure water and free water, especially for the poor people of the District.

Mr. BURLESON. I will read what the commissioners say: Water-rent bills are delivered to householders annually at the minimum rate of $4.50 per annum, which allows the use of 15,000 cubic feet, or 112,200 gallons, of water.

Conscience knows that is enough water for two or three

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will see at once that I do not mean that this water rate will be high, but the trouble about it is that those who are not able to pay any rates at all will use the water sparingly; they will not use it as they would if they thought they were not being charged for it in that way-that is, by measure. You take the poor, and they are the very people who ought to use the water in their houses and on their persons all the more lavishly. They are the very people who are not able to pay for water, even if it is only 1 cent a hundred gallons.

I hope the gentleman is correct, that the commissioners will never put a meter in a house of that kind in this city

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I am in full sympathy with the solicitude of the gentleman for the class to which he refers. I have read to the gentleman from the commissioners' report that the increase in metered houses amounts to only 26 cents for the entire year, and I think that ought to convince him there is no danger of their being charged an extortionate price for water or deprived of the use of the water.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee withdraw his point of order?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to make it only to the extent of private houses, and in view of the statements that have been made to me I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. That all horses, harness, and horse-drawn vehicles necessary for use in connection with the construction and supervision of sewer, street, street lighting, road work, and street-cleaning work, including the maintenance of said horses and harness, and the maintenance and repair of said vehicles, and the purchase of all necessary articles and supplies in connection therewith, or on construction and repair of buildings and bridges, or any general or special engineering or construction work authorized by appropriations, may be purchased, hired, and maintained exclusively to carry into effect said appropriations, when specifically and in writing ordered by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; and all such expenditures necessary for the proper execution of said work, exclusive of personal services, shall be paid from and equitably charged against the sums appropriated for said work; and the Commissioners of the District in the annual estimates shall report the number of horses, vehicles, and harness purchased, and horses and vehicles hired, and the sums paid for same, and out of what appropriation; and all horses owned or maintained by the District shall, so far as may be practicable, be provided for in stables owned or operated by said District: Provided, That such horses, horse-drawn vehicles, and carts as may be temporarily needed for hauling and excavating material in connection with works authorized by appropriations may be temporarily employed for such purposes under the conditions named in section 2 of this act in relation to the employment of laborers, skilled laborers, and mechanics.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas whether the change in the phraseology of this paragraph is intended to prevent the use of motor vehicles?

Mr. BURLESON. I do not understand the query of the

Mr. MANN. In the last, the current act, the expression used a number of times was "wagons." Now you insert "horsedrawn vehicles."

Mr. BURLESON. It is to distinguish them from the motor vehicles

That is what I asked.

Mr. BURLESON. And that is the purpose of it. We thought that it was necessary to substitute these words in order to make specific and clear the meaning of the Congress.

Mr. MANN. What is the reason for not using motor vehicles, if they do not cost any more?

Mr. BURLESON. I would say to the gentleman that in this bill, wherever the District Commissioners could show an economy could be effected by the substitution of motor vehicles for horse-drawn vehicles, we have made the allowance for motor

Mr. MANN. I know the bill provides for some motor vehicles, but I really do not quite see the point of refusing permission to use motor vehicles to the sewer department, if it can be done as economically. Personally, I much prefer to have motor vehicles used in the city rather than horse-drawn vehicles, if it can be done with any sort of economy.

Mr. BURLESON. Wherever it has been shown that the service can be as economically furnished and is as efficient with the motor vehicle, we have substituted it for the horse-drawn vehicle.

Mr. MANN. In this case you have substituted horse-drawn vehicles for any other kind, without any change in the amount that may be expended. It is very difficult for the committee to determine whether it is more or less expensive to use motor

Mr. BURLESON. I tried to make clear to the gentleman the object we had in putting those words in there. It was that they should not purchase motor vehicles unless authorized to do so, as we have done in a number of cases when we have been convinced that the service could be as efficiently rendered and as economically rendered by motor vehicles as by horse-drawn shicles. We wanted to keep our hands on the situation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the committee might better have provided that only motor vehicles should be used unless it was specifically provided that horse-drawn vehicles should be used. Motor vehicles are more convenient, and at this day likely to be more economical and much more healthy, so far as the general public is concerned, than the horse-drawn vehicle. It looks like a step backward-reactionary, I believe, the term is.

Mr. BURLESON. Nonprogressive.

Mr. MANN. A nonprogressive step, to take in a great city like Washington.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The gentleman from Illinois is for progression in motor vehicles? He goes that far.

Mr. MANN. I am a progressive as far as automobiles are concerned, where anybody is good enough to give me the use

Mr. BURLESON. I hope the explanation is satisfactory.

Mr. MANN. It is not satisfactory at all; but I presume it is sufficient. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

For four-glower Nernst lamps on underground wires, $52.50 per lamp

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas whether he fully approves of the use of these very expensive and possibly ornate four-glower-whatever that means-Nernst lamps that have been scattered around Washington in various places?

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman there are only 60 of those lamps in use at this time.

Mr. MANN. How many were in use two years ago?

Mr. BURLESON. Two years ago we were paying $65 per lamp per annum, and we are paying only $52.50 at this time.

Mr. MANN. How many were in use at that time? Mr. BURLESON. My recollection does not serve me on that point. If I ever had the information, it has slipped my memory. Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know whether it is the intention to install these very expensive lamps all around?

There are some parks that have these lamps so close together that it is difficult to get in between the lamp-posts.

Mr. BURLESON. As I understand it, the lights referred to are not the 60 Nernst lights. Those are the 80-candlepower incandescent electric lights to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MANN. No; I am referring to the four lamps. I think those are what are called the four-glower.

Mr. BURLESON. What particular park has the gentleman in mind where the lamps referred to are installed?

Mr. MANN. There is one at the corner of Fourteenth Street and Vermont Avenue, where Massachusetts Avenue comes in, I believe.

Mr. BURLESON. Is not that on a circle that is under the control of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds? Mr. MANN. Yes; I apprehend so; but I guess that does not make any difference.

Mr. BURLESON. And are not the lamps a part of the general design or plan of the monument erected in the circle?

Mr. MANN. Well, I can not undertake to answer that question. I am not the designer nor responsible for the design of the monument. It strikes me it is very expensive-

Mr. BURLESON. Well, the same thought has often occurred to me. A few years ago I inquired why such an apparently extravagant system to light that circle was established, and the statement was made that it was a part of the general design of the artist whose plans were accepted at the time the monument in the center of the circle was erected.

Mr. MANN. Well, that being the case, it certainly has nothing to do with the design of the rest of the circle or the monument there; but if that be the case, it is a very good reason why these designs should be scanned closely. Here is a permanent expenditure of money at that place and, in my judgment, entirely unwarranted and no necessity for those lamps. It would be just exactly like putting four street lamps' together and then putting enother four very close to them. and then putting another four very close to them.

Mr. BURLESON. I agree with the gentleman, because the effect is to telescope the lights, and you do not get the full benefit of the illumination.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. I do not know whether those are the Nernst lamps or not.

Mr. BURLESON. That is the effect of placing two lights close together, because a part of the illumination from one lamp telescopes the illumination coming from the other lamp, and you do not get as full benefit of the illumination from the lamps if they were placed farther apart. That is the scientific objection and economic objection to the establishment of the four-glower Nernst electric lights—

Mr. MANN. I say further to the gentleman I am in favor of putting lights all over Washington, but I think it is entirely unnecessary to put on some of the streets of Washington lamps 50 or 75 feet apart.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, to what particular street does the gentleman refer?

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not like to make an invidious distinction in regard to the streets.

Mr. BURLESON. Do you mean the installation of the new lights that has been recently made?

Mr. MANN. Some of the new lights are put very close to-

Mr. BURLESON. True, but they cost less than the service that was replaced by those lights.

Mr. MANN. That may be the object, but that is no reason for putting more lamps than are necessary. I agree with the gentleman when he wishes to adopt a system which reduces the expenditures, but I can see no reason why, when you can do that, you need thereby to increase needlessly the expense by putting in supernumerary lights.

Mr. BURLESON. I am in close sympathy with that suggestion.

Mr. MANN. I know it is very convenient for persons who live on the street and sleep in the front rooms to be able to undress, and so forth, without any light in their own house. It is convenient and sometimes it is desirable, perhaps, to avoid a conspicuous view, but there is no necessity for putting lights on the street thick enough to light all the inside of the houses.

The Clerk read as follows:

The cost of each lamp-post for arc lighting furnished by any lighting company under the above rates shall not exceed $50, except as hereinafter provided, which cost shall include only the lamp-post, the street-designation frame and signs, and the arm or top from which the lamp is hung. All other fixtures, parts, fittings, lamps, cables, wires, and appurtenances necessary for the lamps maintained by said lighting company on said posts, including the cost of erection, shall not be included in said cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk called the attention of the Chair to the fact that from the word "furnished," in the eighth line, the "i" is omitted.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the letter "i" be inserted after the letter "n" in the word "furnished" in line 8.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For each gas lamp raised or lowered to new grade, $1.50.

[Mr. McHENRY addressed the committee. See Appendix.] Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 112, in line 23, after the word "States," insert the words "or of the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. The provisions of section 3679 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by section 3 of the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved February 27, 1906 (Stat. L., vol. 34, p. 49), known as the antideficiency act, are hereby extended and made applicable in all respects to appropriations made for and expenditures of and to all of the officers and employees of the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. On and after July 1, 1912, fees collected by the District of Columbia shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts, as follows, namely: Fees of superIntendent of weights, measures, and markets; fees of surveyor's office; health department fees; pound fees; fees for railing permits; fees for building permits; fees for electrical permits; bathing-beach fees; fees from public-convenience stations; fees for tax certificates; fees for motor and horse-drawn vehicle tags; fees of the municipal court; and the surplus fees of the recorder of deeds and register of wills, together with the tuition of nonresident pupils in public schools, and the tax of one-half of I cent paid by any street or other railroad company for each passenger carried across the Highway Bridge, and the annual wheel tax on all automobiles or other motor vehicles.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 113, line 13, strike out "section 11" and insert in lieu thereof "section 12."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That all laws and parts of laws to the extent that they are inconsistent with this act are repealed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order upon that paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, that paragraph has been carried in the law from time immemorial.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that all of these appropriation bills carry compensation for certain officials-not always the sum fixed by law.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason I made the point of order. I am not sure what would be the effect of this on salaries of school-teachers, but there was a controversy in the House here, which I think has been happily obviated by the action of the gentleman from Texas, as to whether the pay provided for school-teachers was sufficient to pay the teachers. been sufficient, there is a question whether under this provision they would not have a claim for the full pay allowed them by

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe this would have affected that condition at all. What this effect would be is illustrated in a case where, for instance, the compensation of an official is fixed at $3,000 in some law and the bill carries only $2,500 for the specific position. The appropriation for the school-teachers' compensation and longevity is a lump appropriation, and regardless of whether or not the bill carries a sum sufficient to meet the obligations incurred by the employment of these teachers they would still be entitled to the compensation fixed by law. They would have been paid the compensation fixed by law, and they would have a legal claim against the Government. Without examining into what the against the Government. Without examining into what the result might be of a failure to include here a provision of this kind that is carried in all the appropriation bills, I trust the gentleman will not interpose an objection at this time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about this provision being carried in all appropriation bills. It has not been carried in all appropriation bills. It is not necessary in this bill. It does not affect anything else in the bill. They used to carry in the first part of an appropriation bill a provision stating that the compensation provided for by the bill should be accepted in full by the person receiving it as salary. That is not in this bill. I do not think it makes any difference. I do not think there is anybody to apply it to in this case. I do not know what the effect would be, but certainly, as far as laws are changed by this law, they remain changed for this purpose. It does not do any good; I am not certain that it would do any harm. It would not hurt anything, however, to let it go out.

It has no business in here anyhow.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] on the point of order.

Mr. Burleson. Mr. Chairman, if there is any provision of law embodied in this bill that is inconsistent with the laws already in existence, it has been usual to carry a section to repeal them. As a matter of fact, I do not think this item has any legal effect, but it is usual to carry it in the bill. I repeat, I do not think this section has any legal effect whatever. But as a matter of curiosity I would like to know what is the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois makes against it? What is his point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in the course now of some 15 years' experience on the floor of this House I have discovered that it is very seldom that a member of an appropriating committee discerns a point of order when it is made, or understands what a point of order is, or understands whether or not a provision is subject to a point of order, whether in the bill itself or in an amendment offered to the bill.

Mr. BURLESON. That is exactly what I am trying to ascer-tain. I want to know what the point of order is, and I want the gentleman to state it. Mr. MANN. That, Mr. Chairman, is a beneficent attitude for the members of the Committee on Appropriations to take, because if they knew that a provision was subject to a point of order two-thirds of the provisions carried on their bills would not be reported to the House.

Now, here is the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson], an able lawyer and a better farmer [laughter], who does not know what a point of order is to one provision in his bill that is pure legislation, knowing that the bill can not carry legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it legislation?

Mr. MANN. It is pure legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

There are certain points of order pending to different por-tions of the bill which the Chair will now endeavor to dispose of. The first point of order is to an amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson], on page 28 of the bill. All that portion of the paragraph on page 28, beginning with the word "Provided," in line 23, and extending to the word "collected," in line 6, on page 30, having gone out of the bill on a point of order, sustained by the Chair, the gentleman from Texas offered as an amendment the following:

And provided, That this appropriation shall be available for repairing the pavements of the street railways when necessary. The amounts thus expended shall be collected from such railway companies, as provided by section 5 of an act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, approved June 11, 1878, and shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation for the fiscal year in which they are collected.

And to that amendment the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] made the point of order that it changed existing law, and in arguing it insisted that there was no authority of law for making that appropriation available.

The so-called organic act of the District provides as follows:

The cost of laying down said pavement, sewers, and other works, or of repairing the same, shall be paid for in the following proportions and manner, to wit: When any street or avenue through which a street railway runs shall be paved, such railway company shall bear all of the expense for that portion of the work lying between the exterior rails of the track of such roads, and for a distance of 2 feet from and exterior to such track or tracks on each side thereof, and of keeping the same in repair; but the said railway companies, having conformed to the grades established by the commissioners, may use such cobblestone or Belgian blocks for paving their tracks, or the space between their tracks, as the commissioners may direct; the United States shall pay one-half of the cost of all work done under the provisions of this section, except that done by the railway companies, which payment shall be credited as part of the 50 per cent which the United States contributes toward the expenses of the District of Columbia for that year; and all payments shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury on the warrant or order of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or a majority thereof, in such amounts and at such times as they may deem safe and proper in view of the progress of the work; that if any street railway company shall neglect or refuse to perform the work required by this act, said pavement shall be laid between the tracks and exterior thereto of such railway by the District of Columbia; and if such company shall fail or refuse to pay the sum due from them in respect of the work done by or under the orders of the proper officials of said District in such case of the neglect or refusal of such railway company to perform the work required as aforesaid, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall issue certificates of indebtedness against the property, real or personal, of such railway company, which certificates shall bear interest at The so-called organic act of the District provides as follows:

The Chair thinks that this provision authorizes the commissioners to have the work done where the railway company fails to do it, as required in the first paragraph read by the Chair, and in order to do that the District government must have funds with which to perform the work; and the Chair thinks that this provision is ample authority upon which the House can base an appropriation, or may make available a fund to enable the commissioners to do the work.

It was suggested in the argument that it was not contemfunds to pay for any part of the work required to be done by the railway, and that is true. Neither was it contemplated in the act that any money should come out of the District revenues with which to pay the expenses of this work that is required to be done by the railway company. It was contemplated and expressly provided by the act that that work should be done by the railway companies themselves, and after providing that the commissioners should do it in the event of the failure of the railway companies to perform the work, a method was provided whereby the District government can recover from the railway companies the amount so expended. Therefore the Chair thinks that the authority is the same, so far as the fund coming out of the Federal Treasury is concerned, as it is with reference to that coming out of the District revenues; and thinking that the section which provides that the commissioners shall have the work done furnishes a basis that is ample for the authorization of the provision making available this fund, the Chair overrules the point of order made to that paragraph. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson]

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The next amendment in point of time is the amendment on page 57. The provision beginning on page 56, line 3, and extending down and including line 20, having gone out of the bill on a point of order made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Bur-LESON] offered an amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. I offered it as a substitute for the paragraph that went out of the bill on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment is as follows:

"Provided, That no part of any money appropriated by this act for public schools shall be expended for the tutelage or otherwise of any pupils who do not reside in said District, or who, during said tutelage, do not own property in and pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the tuition charged hereunder to other nonresident pupils, or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in public duties therein, or during such tutelage pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the tuition charged hereunder to other nonresident pupils: Provided, That any other nonresident pupil may be admitted to and taught in said public schools on the payment of such amount, to be fixed by the board of education, with the approval of the Commissioners of said District, as will cover the expense of tuition and cost of textbooks and school supplies used by such pupils; and all payments hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia."

The Chair desires to hear briefly from the gentleman from Illinois on that point of order. The gentleman from Illinois reserved the point of order, and also the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin].

Mr. MANN. I reserved the point of order in the temporary absence of the gentleman from Virginia. Subsequently he came into the Charles also reserved the point of order. I do into the Chamber and also reserved the point of order. I do not care to discuss the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. The Chair will remember the circumstances under which this amendment was offered. The amendment was hastily drawn, and I ask unanimous consent that I may substitute this amendment which I send to the desk for the amendment now pending.

Mr. MANN. Has the Chair ruled on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not.

Mr. MANN. Then I take it that unanimous consent would not take away the point of order?

Mr. BURLESON. Not at all.
Mr. OLMSTED. Was the point of order made?
The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made, and by unanimous consent on Saturday the paragraph went over.

Mr. OLMSTED. I thought it was only reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. It was made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Carlin]. The Clerk will read the amendment which the gentleman from Texas proposes to substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any money appropriated in this act for public schools shall be used for tutelage or otherwise of pupils in the public schools in the District of Columbia who do not reside in said District, or who during such tutelage do not own property in or pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the estimated cost of their tuition, or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in public duties therein, or during such tutelage pay taxes levied by the District of Columbia in excess of such estimated cost of tuition, except on the payment of such amount to be fixed by the board of education, with the approval of the Commissioners of said District, as will cover the expense of tuition, cost of textbooks and school supplies used by such pupils, and all payments hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks manimous consent to withdraw the amendment and substitute another amendment, which has been read at the Clerk's desk, with a point of order pending against it.

Mr. CARTER. What was the former amendment of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BURLESON. The effect of it is the same, the phraseology is a little different.

Mr. CARTER. This is to prevent the children living outside the District going to the schools of the city at the expense of the District fund

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. And it excludes those in the employ of the Government?

Mr. BURLESON. That is the law now.
Mr. CARTER. I want to announce my opposition to this kind of restriction in education, but I will not carry it to the point of an objection to unanimous consent. I am willing that the gentleman may take the sense of the committee on that point

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas will be substituted for the pending amendment.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any gentleman who desires to be heard on the point of order?

The Chair is of opinion that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas is clearly a limitation upon the appropriation.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum] has an amendment that he desires to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. It is well understood that there may be a limitation upon an appropriation, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the words "school supplies used by such pupils" the following:

"Less such sum as shall equal the taxes, if any, paid by the said pupil or the parents of such pupil."

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have just come into the Chamber. What has become of the point of order that I raised to the amendment which related to the schools?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment came up and the Chair desired to hear from the gentleman from Virginia on the point of order, and called for the gentleman from Virginia. The gentleman was absent, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] withdrew the original amendment, to which the gentleman from Virginia had raised the point of order and substituted another. There was no argument upon the point of order. The Chair examined the second amendment and thought that it came clearly within the rule, and overruled the point of order.

Mr. CARLIN. I had not seen the second amendment, and if the Chair will bear with me a moment—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the matter had been passed upon, and, without unanimous consent, it can not

Mr. CARLIN. I had an agreement with the chairman of the committee that I would be heard upon the point of order. had just stepped outside the door for a minute to answer a card. Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand the statement of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. CARLIN. I say I thought I had an agreement with the gentleman that I was to be heard on the point of order, and it was passed for that purpose.

Mr. BURLESON. I agreed that it was to be postponed in order that the gentleman might consider the amendment, but I did not agree with the gentleman that the bill should be delayed or that he should even be heard upon the point of order.

I so understood it.

Mr. BURLESON. We agreed to postpone it for the time being in order that the gentleman might examine the amendment

Mr. CARLIN. I have been here all the time, and I certainly thought I had an agreement with the gentleman to that effect.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the amendment be vacated and the point of order left open.

Mr. MANN. But there has been no vote taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has not been voted upon.

The Chair just completed his ruling.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the ruling of the Chair be vacated and that the gentleman from Virginia and others who may desire may be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the ruling of the Chair may be vacated and the gentleman from Virginia and others who desire to be heard may be heard upon the point of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see the last amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is in effect the same language which has been declared to be as a paragraph in the original bill out of order. The only difference now between it and as it appeared when the former ruling was made is in the language which appears in pencil at the top:

That no part of any money appropriated in this act for public schools shall be used for the tutelage, etc.

Mr. Chairman, of course, as the Chair has already ruled upon this point, it would seem almost a hopeless task to present any argument to the Chair.

The Chair ruled without hearing any The CHAIRMAN. argument. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman, and would not hesitate to change his ruling if he thought proper to do so.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, this is contended to be a limitation upon an appropriation bill, and I admit that, so far as it is a limitation, it is not subject to the point of order; but I contend that all language after the word "except" is entirely new legislation, and instead of being a limitation upon the appropriation is an enlargement of the present existing statute and an enlargement of the present powers of the commissioners. How can it be contended, when you provide a new schedule other than that already provided for by statute for the tuition of children and their admission to public schools, that that is a limitation upon an appropriation? We have existing to-day a statute which provides the conditions for tutelage in the District of Columbia schools. If this can be written in an appropriation bill, that statute is in effect repealed and no longer is of any effect, and the Congress of the United States is asked under the guise of a limitation to repeal an existing statute. The first part of this paragraph is simply a reenactment of the present statutory law. The paragraph, after the word "except," is entirely new, sets up a new condition of law, and imposes new conditions upon nonresident pupils, for which there is no authority for this committee, even, to appropriate. The committee has no power to appropriate for that purpose and therefore has no power to limit an appropriation for that purpose. It has no power to appropriate a single cent or a single dollar, and if it does do it it has no power to limit that appropriation, because it is an entirely new and distinct provision of law. It is a perfectly plain proposition, and it is admitted here that where the limitation is an honest limitation upon a lawful appropriation, and an appropriation made in response to statutory law, that, of course, this point of order could not prevail; but where there is no power in the committee to appropriate there is none to limit an appropriation upon the statute it has no power to enact; it falls within the rule that it is new legislation and not a limitation. Of course, this is no place for an argument about the persistency with which this Democratic committee insists upon this limitation which only affects the citizens of two Democratic States, Maryland and Virginia. is a cheeseparing policy which comes from a committee that can find no money for public parks, no money for additional schools, but proposes to accomplish a policy of economy by striking the nonresident pupils from the schools; the nonresi-dents, not the children of Members of Congress. Here we solemnly say we will preserve the schools for ourselves; we will not charge our children for tutelage; we will preserve them for the Senators and Members of Congress and Cabinet officers; and what is more we will preserve them for the paid officeholders in the District of Columbia.

If you hold an office here you may live in Virginia or Maryland and the schools are preserved and kept open for you without this additional tax. If you occupy a seat upon this floor the schools are preserved and kept open for you without any additional tax, and so if you hold a position in the Cabinet; but if you happen to be the child of some poor citizen of Maryland or Virginia, seeking an education, and whose parents under the law have to pay taxes here, then you are excluded. The present law provides, and this is in reference to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that any parent paying taxes in the District of Columbia may enter his children at the schools in the District of Columbia. The amendment seeks to limit that and say he shall of Columbia. The amendment seeks to limit that and say he shall own at least $2,500 or $3,000 worth of property, because it fixes the tuition at about the tax upon that sum. In other words, a rich nonresident, the rich man living in Maryland or Virginia, has the schools still left open to his children, while the poor man, who only pays a few dollars' worth of taxes in the District of Columbia, is to have his children excluded by the language used in this amendment, after the word "except."

This may be good policy; gentlemen may think they are representing the great Democratic Party when they undertake to place their seal of approval upon this policy in the National Capital. God forbid that the party should ever approve of any such course as this. It will never get my approval, nor do I believe that it will get the approval of many Democrats upon this floor. I contend now, however, we are left nothing but the simply naked construction of the rule; and the idea that you can limit an unlawful appropriation, an appropriation which you have no right to make, is a novel one to me.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. CARLIN. Certainly, sir.

Mr. MANN. Am I correct in thinking that the schools are supported one-half out of the revenues collected in the District of Columbia and one-half out of the revenues taken from the General Treasury?

Mr. CARLIN. Absolutely correct.

Mr. MANN. So that, as I understand, the proposition now is that the one-half of the revenues collected in the District entitles the people in the District to the entire benefit of the schools, but the one-half contributed by the people at large in the country does not entitle them to a single pupil in the country?

Mr. CARLIN. That is right; to no consideration whatever, unless they happen to be Members of Congress, or United States Senators, Cabinet officers, or other officeholders.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it the gentleman's contention that the one-half that is paid by the country at large will be for the exclusive benefit of the counties of Maryland and Virginia and of his own district?

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman knows I have made no such contention as that. But I do contend that Maryland is still a part of the United States, and I have a reasonable assurance that Virginia is still a part. I am confident of one thing, that if Kentucky was affected by this proposition the gentleman would have given it further consideration than he seems to have given it.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's own position would be, if he had an opportunity, to exclude children of officeholders, Representatives, and Senators from the benefit of it.

Mr. CARLIN. You will have an apportunity here, because I may offer that amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will vote for it with great pleasure.

If these poor little urchins, only about 50 or Mr. CARLIN. 100 of them, whose parents pay small sums of taxes in the District of Columbia, are to be deprived of the schools in order to carry out a policy of economy, then let us deprive our own children, the children of officeholders, and of men who are Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. CARLIN. Yes, sir. drawing large salaries of that privilege

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman believe that if this policy is to be pursued the logical end of it would be to provide that no one should be entitled to school facilities unless they paid a proportionate cost of the school expenses?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes, sir. That is the logical conclusion.

Mr. MANN. Why should rich people be charged to send poor children to school on this theory?

Mr. CARLIN. I would agree with you about that, except that I am in favor of taxing the rich reasonably and just for schools as well as for everything else. But, Mr. Chairman, getting back to the subject matter, when we come to the analysis of the limitation upon an appropriation bill, I think you will agree with me that the appropriation must first be a lawful appropriation and not itself subject to a point of order. If they made the appropriation for the purpose which is set forth in the limitation, it would be subject to a point of order. There is no statutory authority to make such an appropriation, and they have no right to make such a limitation. To limit an unlawful thing in this way is to practically condone and give effect to the unlawful thing.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I do not desire to trespass on the time of the gentleman, however.

Mr. CARLIN. There is nobody to whom I would rather

Mr. MANN. There is no authority to make the appropriation. Does the gentleman contend that the appropriation in this bill for school positions is without warrant of law?

Mr. CARLIN. I contend that to make an appropriation for school purposes other than that provided in the statute is without authority. They have changed the statute which authorized the appropriation. They have enlarged it.

Mr. MANN. In what respect have they enlarged it so that they now provide for schools for purposes not provided by law?

The bill does not say what the purposes are.

Mr. CARLIN. Yes, sir; this bill does. They have provided for the admission of nonresident pupils to schools on the payment of tuition fees and books and other sums of money for which there is no statute in existence.

Mr. MANN. There is no provision in the bill for nonresident pupils.

Mr. CARLIN. None whatever.
Mr. MANN. There is nothing in the bill on the subject.
Mr. CARLIN. This amendment—

Mr. MANN. This amendment is no appropriation. Does the entleman contend in having the right to make an appropriation for school purposes we have no right to provide it shall not be used for something that is illegal or legal-either one?

Mr. CARLIN. I think you have; but I think you have no right to extend the present statute and make your provision in a way other than the statute at present allows without being subject to a point of order. In other words, this amendment is enacting into law conditions for nonresident education different from the present existing statute. In a case where that limitation was not placed upon it the present occupant of the chair has held that the Committee on Appropriations had no right to put that in the bill, because it was new legislation. The Chair is bound under that ruling.

Now, if they had no lawful right to make an appropriation because it was new legislation, they have no right to limit it. The limitation is in violation of the rule. When I say it was unlawful I mean it was in violation of the rule, because the statute itself would be in violation of the rule.

What condition will be brought about if this construction is allowed to stand? The Chair will have succeeded in reversing a former ruling. The Chair will have succeeded in accomplishing a parliamentary somersault. The present occupant of the chair has held that, under the Holman rule, they could not place this provision in their bill as an original paragraph because of the fact that it was plainly and simply new legislation and did not come within the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will permit, it was the temporary chairman of the committee, Mr. Hughes of New Jersey, who held that; but the present occupant of the chair would have held that same way if he had been in the chair.

Mr. CARLIN. I was speaking of the construction laid down by the present occupant of the chair when he was construing the Holman rule a few days ago.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you are asked to say that because this is a limitation upon an appropriation they can enact this new legislation into law. The test of the rule, in my judgment—the very essence of it—is contained in the answer to this question: Is it new legislation? When the reason for the rule ceases, the rule itself must cease.

Now, what is the rule upon which this is based, both as to the limitation and as to the rule itself? I refer to the Holman rule. It proceeds on the theory that there shall be no legislation unless it accomplishes an economy—a saving of money. That is the language of the rule. That same language must apply to the limitation. Where is there any saving here? It is not pretended that there is any.

When we come to the exception, its very language is a repeal of the present existing statute and the writing of a new one. That is all. And I say that if that law were not upon the statute books the Committee on Appropriations could not even appropriate money for that purpose. They would not have power to do it, and therefore they have not the power to limit appropriation for that purpose. You must have the power to appropriate before you can make a lawful limitation upon it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that seems to me to be the reasonable construction, and any other construction will return to plague the Chair and return to plague the House. There will be the greatest of confusion. Indeed, I anticipate nothing but confusion if the Chair permits a new statute to be enacted repealing an existing statute. If the Chair permits the Committee on Appropriations to refuse to appropriate under and for existing laws and allows them to enact new laws for the purpose of appropriations, then will be experienced the beginning of the trouble which we now foresee. Other committees making appropriations in this House will write the words in front of their new legislation, "Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used," and so forth, and then they will write the old statute in the appropriation bill and say that no part of the appropriation shall be used for it. That is what this committee has done.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask your further attention for just a moment. This committee has offered to the Chair the present statutory law, which makes it their duty to make an appropriation for these schools, and has said, "We shall not appropriate one dollar for that purpose." Has this committee the power to do that? The first paragraph of this amendment is the present existing statute of the land, and although it is the solemn duty of that Committee on Appropriations to appropriate the status in the solemn duty of that committee on Appropriations to appropriations. priate to carry that statute into effect, yet they come in not to appropriate according to statutory law, but they take the very statute itself and say that no part of the appropriation shall be used for that lawful purpose unless such and such a thing is They have no such power. The committee would have a done. right, perhaps, to limit its appropriations to new subject matters. It might have that right, maybe; that is, if it were germane. But when they take an existing statute which requires the appropriation for the schools to be made and write it into the appropriation bill and say that "no part of this appropria-tion shall be used for that purpose," it may be the District authorities will have no power to expend one cent of this entire appropriation for the public schools of the city, because there will be no statute in existence upon which we could base an appropriation if this language is permitted to remain.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that Congress may refuse to appropriate at all, and it has been held over and over again that as it may refuse to appropriate at all it may refuse to appropriate except for a certain purpose or subject to certain limitations, but those limitations must be limitations pure and simple upon the purpose for which the money may be expended. No one knows better than the distinguished Chairman himself, who is doing excellent work in the chair, that we have a provision in the rule against changing existing law in a general appropriation bill. A limitation, to be a limitation within the rulings, must be purely negative and not attempt any affirmative legislation.

Now, this amendment provides that no part of any money appropriated by the bill shall be used for the tutelage of pupils without certain qualifications. Thus far that is a limitation pure and simple upon the appropritaion, and is within the rulings; but in the concluding portion of the amendment we find what seems to be positive, affirmative legislation. It says:

Except on the payment of such amount, to be fixed by the board of education with the approval of the commissioners of said District.

There is a provision which would be construed by those officials as imposing positive duties upon them. And then:

All payments hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia.

These are positive, affirmative directions of law. They change existing law by making law where none at present exists.

I will only take up the time of the Chair to call attention to the precedents referred to in section 825 of the Manual, near the bottom of the page, on the subject of limitations:

The limitation may not be applied directly to the official functions of executive officers, but it may restrict executive discretion, so far as this may be done by a simple negative on the use of the appropriation, which does not give affirmative directions.

That is the very last line on the page, and there are numerous recedents cited. "Which does not give affirmative directions." precedents cited.

This amendment appears to me to give affirmative directions. I am rather in favor of the purpose of the amendment, and my object in rising is merely because of the interest I have in keeping the parliamentary situation straight and because I wish to call these matters to the attention of the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Will the Chair hear me for one moment? really in reiteration of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted] has said. I regard it as very important that the Chair shall not hold in order the provision in the amendment with reference to the payment one-half to the United States and one-half to the revenues of the District of Columbia. I regard that proposition as serious legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that upon hearing the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], and upon making for himself a closer examination of the precedents than he had made at the time of the former ruling, he is convinced that the sounder reasoning and the safer rule of parliamentary law lies upon the side of the contention of the gentleman from Virginia. The Chair is inclined to sustain the point of order made by him, but if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] has anything to suggest in regard to the question the Chair will be glad to hear it.

Mr. BURLESON. I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order ade by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN]. The genmade by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN]. tleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any money appropriated in this act for public schools shall be used for the tutelage or otherwise of pupils in the public schools of the District of Columbia who do not reside in said District, or who during such tutelage do not own property in and pay taxes levied by the government of the District of Columbia in excess of the estimated cost of their tuition, or whose parents do not reside or are not engaged in public duties therein.

Mr. CARLIN. To that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. CARLIN. I have not yielded the floor; the gentleman can not make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from Texas has the floor. The gentleman from Texas offered an amendment and was entitled to the floor. Of course the Chair recognized the gentleman from Virginia to reserve the point of order, as is customary and proper under the rules, but that being done, he thinks he should recognize the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. BURLESON. I will reserve the motion and hear the gentleman,

Mr. CARLIN. What is the necessity for adjourning now at this early hour?

Mr. BURLESON. I think there is a very urgent necessity for it at this time.

Mr. MANN. The Republicans wish to absent themselves from the Hall. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARLIN. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's reason has convinced me. [Laughter.].
Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I renew my motion.

The motion of Mr. Burleson was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17681, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

(No. 239) thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1416) for the relief of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 241) thereon.

Mr. DIXON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2453) for the relief of Benjamin F. Martz, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 242) thereon.

HENRY C. HART.

Mr. BRYAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4178) for the relief of Henry C. Hart, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Henry C. Hart, last surviving partner of Clark, Hart & Co., reported the following resolution (S. Res. 195), and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 4178) entitled "A bill for the relief of Henry C. Hart, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Henry C. Hart, at surviving partner of Clark, Hart & Co.," now pending in the Senate, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

OREGON AVENUE, CITY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. GALLINGER. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (8. 4109) to restore the name of Oregon Avenue, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 240) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the name of the highway leading from North Capitol Street to Rock Creek Park, now known as Oregon Avenue, shall hereafter be known and designated as Concord Avenue.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the name of Oregon Avenue be restored to the street lying between New Hampshire Avenue and Eighteenth Street NW., in the District of Columbia, and said avenue shall be extended so as to include Cedar Place, and shall hereafter be known and designated as Oregon Avenue: Provided, That the name of the highway leading from North Capitol Street to Rock Creek Park, now known as Oregon Avenue, shall hereafter be known and designated as Concord Avenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. A day or two ago, as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I made a report on a resolution submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] in reference to the change of name of this avenue. I ask unanimous consent that that report may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Report No. 222.

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred Senate resolution 165, to wit:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate what authority of law, if any, exists under which the Commissioners of the District have undertaken to change the name of the street in the city of Washington heretofore known as Oregon Avenue, and to make in said report such recommendation as may be deemed proper in regard thereto," having considered the same, beg leave to submit the following report:

The resolution was referred, in due course, to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and they reported, through the president of the board, as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, Washington, December 15, 1911.

Hon. J. H. Gallinger,
Chairman of Committee on District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

Chairman of Committee on District of Columbia,

United States Senate.

Sin: The Commissioner of the District of Columbia have the honor to make the following reply to your request of the 14th instant for their report upon Senate resolution 165, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate what authority of law, if any, exists under which the Commissioners of the District have undertaken to change the name of the street in the city of Washington heretofore known as Oregon Avenue, and to make in said report such recommendations as may be deemed proper in regard thereto."

There is a minor street passing through squares 132, 152, 177, 191, and 206, which lie between S and T Streets and Fourteenth and Nineteenth Streets NW., which was known by four names, namely: Cedar Place, Oregon Avenue, Swann Street, and Pierce Place. Many protests have been received as to the confusion these various names caused in that locality. In August, 1911, a request was made by one of the residents of Cedar Place that the name be changed to Oregon Avenue, and this request was also supplemented by a request of a real estate firm representing other houses on the street. This firm stated:

"We have several pieces of property on this street, and the fact of this street being known as Oregon Avenue on one side of Eighteenth Street and Cedar Place on the other side of Eighteenth Street is very confusing. Several of the property owners on this street have joined with us to ask that you make this change as soon as possible."

The matter was given careful consideration, and it was recommended by the surveyor that this minor street with the various names be given the name of Swann Street instead of Oregon Avenue.

The reasons for selecting the name of "Swann" for this street were as follows:

1. Under the system adopted by the commissioners for naming minor streets, an east and west minor street lying between S and T Streets as follows:

1. Under the system adopted by the commissioners for naming minor streets, an east and west minor street lying between S and T Streets, would receive a name of one syllable beginning with the letter S, thus indicating that the street lies between S and T Streets.

2. The name "Swann" was already applied to a portion of this minor street. It had been the name of a portion of this street since 1878. The commissioners understand that this portion of the street was named after Thomas Swann, who was elected governor of Maryland in 1864.

2. The name "Swann" was already applied to a portion of this street since 1878. The commissioners understand that this portion of the street was named after Thomas Swann, who was elected governor of Maryland in 1884.

3. It was not called an avenue because the street did not run in a diagonal direction, as other avenues of the city, and was too unimportant to be given such a designation. It was not named "Oregon." as another highway provided for in the highway plans, running from North Capitol Street to Rock Creek Park, via Shepherd and Military Roads, a distance of more than a mile and a half, had already been given the designation "Oregon Avenue," in keeping with other diagonal highways named after the States of the Union.

The authority of the commissioners to change the name is contained in Thirtieth Statutes at Large, page 532, and provides that the commissioners are authorized to change the name of any street where two appear with the same name.

In addition to there being two Oregon Avenues, there were also duplicate highways designated Cedar and Pierce, which made the elimination of one name desirable.

In addition to the law above referred to authorizing the commissioners to change the name of streets, there was another law passed February 16, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 14), authorizing them to adopt a system of naming streets for that part of the District of Columbia outside of the city of Washington.

The commissioners decided then that the best system to be adopted was one which would extend the numbered north and south streets of the city into the county from the present city boundary to the District line, and to extend the alphabetical system on east and west streets prevailing within the city to the District line outside of the city by using the following method:

Streets runing east and west which stopped at the old boundary line, Florida Avenue, were continued to the letter W: beginning at that point the alphabetical system is used, with names of two syllables which system is continued northwardly u

Desiring to ascertain by whom the authority has heretofore been exercised in the matter of naming streets, the commissioners were asked for the desired information, which was communicated in the following letter:

WASHINGTON, January 4, 1912.

Hon. J. H. Gallinger,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: In response to your oral request for information as to the naming of streets in the District of Columbia, I have to inform you as

Dear Sir: In response to your oral request for information as to the naming of streets in the District of Columbia, I have to inform you as follows:

When the plan of the city of Washington was adopted by President Washington the streets and avenues were named. Streets running north and south were numbered and streets running east and west lettered, and the avenues were named after the States of the Union. Subsequently property owners in subdividing their land created minor streets, running through the original squares, and the person subdividing was permitted to select the name of the street. No system was applied to this method of naming.

Outside the old city limits, the northern and western boundary of which was Florida Avenue, the streets were laid out by subdivision and dedication, and the property owners were permitted to select the names of the streets. This condition existed until the adoption of the plan for the permanent system of highways, March 2, 1893. Under this law a plan was adopted for extending and opening streets over the entire District of Columbia. This law provided, in section 5, "That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to name all streets, avenues, alleys, and reservations laid out or adopted under the provisions of this act."

The act was amended June 28, 1898, so as to provide that no plan adopted under its provisions should affect any existing subdivisions in the portion of the District of Columbia lying north of the city, and known as section 1. By an act of Congress approved February 16, 1904, the commissioners were authorized to name streets, avenues, alleys, highways, and reservations in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of the city of Washington. The act read as follows: "An act to name streets, avenues, alleys, highways, and reservations in that part of the District of Columbia outside of the city of Washington, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congres that part of the District of Columbia outside of the city of Washington, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to name or rename streets, avenues, alleys, highways, and reservations in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of the city of Washington, under such system of naming as they shall see fit to adopt, and such names when recorded in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia shall thereafter be the official names of such streets, avenues, alleys, highways, and reservations.

"Sec. 2. That upon the abandonment of any street, avenue, road, or highway, or part thereof, under the provisions of 'An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of citles,' approved March 2, 1893, and the amendment thereto, approved June 28, 1898, the title to the land contained in such abandoned portion shall revert to the owners of the land abutting thereon.

"Sec. 3. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions hereof are hereby repealed.

"Approved, February 16, 1904."

Prior thereto, namely, by an item contained in the District appropriation act approved June 30, 1898, the following authority was given to the commissioners:

"That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall hereafter have the power and authority to change the name of any street, road, avenue, or other highway whenever any two of such highways have the same name."

The question as to the extent of this authority was referred to the corporation counsel in 1901, who gave his opinion as follows:

"That power and authority respecting the change of duplicate names is general in its terms and seems to be applicable to any part of the District where that situation may exist."

The laws quoted are all the legislation that the commissioners know of on the subject

W. V. Judson, Major, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, Engineer Commissioner District of Columbia.

It will be seen from this letter that prior to February 16, 1904, the naming of streets in the District of Columbia was done without any established system, and it is to be presumed that the theory was that the matter was in the hands of Congress. This view is strengthened by the fact that on that date a law was passed authorizing the commissioners to adopt a system of naming streets for that part of the District of Columbia lying beyond the so-called boundary line, and since that time that authority has been exercised by the commissioners. As suggested by the commissioners in their letter of December 15, 1911, Congress, in 1898, granted authority to the commissioners to change the name of any street where two bore the same name. The highway extending from New Hampshire Avenue to Eighteenth Street had been known and designated as Oregon Avenue for more than 40 years, but it appears that a few years ago the name of Oregon Avenue was given to a contemplated highway running from North Capitol Street to Rock Creek Park, a distance of more than a mile and a half. Recently the commissioners took advantage of the law of 1898 and dropped the name of Oregon Avenue between New Hampshire Avenue and Eighteenth Street and consolidated it with Cedar Place, Pierce Place, and Swann Street, giving the highway the name of Swann Street.

Assuming that the commissioners had authority under the act of 1898 to change the name of Oregon Avenue, there does not seem to be any authority in law for their action in extending that street by the elimination of the names of Oregon Avenue, there does not seem to be any authority in law for their action in extending that street by the elimination of the names of Oregon Avenue, there does not seem to be any authority in law for their action in extending that street by the elimination of the names of Oregon Avenue, Cedar Place, and Pierce Place and adding them to Swann Street. It will be noted that the commissioners say that having changed the name of Oregon Avenue their power has been exhausted that it will not be exercised in the future without the consent of Congress. It is proper to say that the duplication of the name in this case was made by a former board of commissioners and not by the board.

present board.

In this view, and because of the fact that the residents on the original Oregon Avenue desire to retain the name that the highway has borne for so long a time, your committee is of opinion that the name ought to be restored. Furthermore, it seems desirable that the avenue should be extended from Eighteenth Street to Nineteenth Street by the elimination of Cedar Place, and with that end in view your committee favor the restoration of the name and the extension of the avenue as provided in the bill introduced by the chairman of this committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

The calendar is in order under Rule VIII.

VOTES ON THE TARIFF-PERSONAL EXPLANATION (S. DOC. NO. 275).

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, during the last session of Congress many newspapers and politicians asserted with wearisome iteration that I was constantly acting and voting with the Republican majority upon all tariff questions, and even after that ession adjourned those same newspapers and politicians continued to repeat that assertion. I have little patience with any argument predicated upon the fact that a Democrat voted with Republicans or that a Republican voted with Democrats, because I think it infinitely more important to inquire whether a Senator voted right or wrong than whether he voted with or against cer-tain men; but since those who have assailed me appear to consider that a sufficient argument to satisfy the intelligence of those to whom they have addressed it, I think it permissible for me to answer them with an argument reduced to their own

If I expected, or if I desired, to remain in the Senate I would allow that misrepresentation, as I have allowed many others, to pass without even a contradiction; but as I am soon to retire from the public service I feel that I owe it to those who have so long and so generously honored me with their confidence to make an official exposure of this falsehood, and I have therefore caused to be prepared a table which shows every roll call on any aspect of the tariff question during our last session, and I now ask unanimous consent to have it printed as a public document together with a recapitulation of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, that table will not only show that I voted against the Republican majority oftener than any other Democratic Senator, but it will also show that I voted with the Republican majority less than any Democratic Senator, except the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Lea], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], who were detained from the sessions of the Senate by their illness, and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Percy], who was occupied by his campaign in Mississippi.

PROPOSED CHILDREN'S BUREAU.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senate is now acting under Rule VIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so announced.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent to have taken up Senate bill 252.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 252) to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been heretofore read, considered as in Committee of the Whole, and reported to the Senate. Are there amendments to be offered to the bill in the Senate? If not, without objection and without amendment, the bill will be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

[Mr. BAILEY addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, when this question was before the Senate for consideration a few days ago I took advantage of the opportunity to express some views that I entertained upon it, and I am not now going to enlarge to any extent upon them or attempt to delay the disposition of this bill; but when the Senate of the United States is acting responsibly upon a question that I consider to be of the first importance, I want the RECORD to indicate where I stand in regard to it.

This measure is not new. It is something after the character of the arrangement of the Greeks before our era, when the State was the nursery of the children; and they carried it to very great extremes. Finally, one crank, following in the footsteps of another, conceived the idea that the children should be so mixed and so reared that it would be impossible for any particular person to claim any particular child or any particular child to recognize any particular person as its parent. We all know from reading the history of those times how utterly destructive it was of the sentiment of the household, which is the most sacred sentiment that actuates the human family and one out of which all other worthy sentiments arise.

Such a condition arose that there was no longer any home tie among that then great nation of people. No child recognized the sovereignty or the authority of the individual parent; it only knew the Government; and heroic deeds are recited that were based upon that supposed meritorious condition. It resulted in the overthrow of the Greeks; it resulted in the depreciation of the sentiment of the family among those people; and one day their eyes opened and they realized that what they lacked in Greece was the home tie, and that without it they could have no concerted patriotism. Well, I do not anticipate that we will go that far. Somebody will become sane in the near future and discover to what absurdities these fads carry the people. I would not charge in this place that Members of this body would take into consideration the effect that the support of or the opposition to this measure might have upon the minds of those who have to estimate them. I could bring in here this morning a sheaf of letters and telegrams from people of consequence, people who do things in this country, in opposition to this measure and in approval of the poor part which I took the other day in respect to it. I was almost tempted to do it. I have them at hand. They are available. If you think for a moment that the people of this country who think and think intelligently and responsibly are in favor of this legislation, you never made a greater mistake in your life.

Now, of course I assume from the votes the other day that you are going to yield to that impulse which has been appealed to and vote for this measure, and that you are going to lay the foundation for the establishment of new machinery in the Government that will not only cost millions of dollars every year, but will cause heartburnings and oppression and wrong to the people who are placed under the enforced guardianship and control of self-constituted guardians and self-seeking people.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. KERN. Will the Senator state in what way this bill would cause anybody any hardship? Does it not simply provide for the gathering of statistics? Is there anything further than that in the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. There is no piece of legislation proposed that does not contain some innocent clause or provision, even though it be a mere recital of the fact "Be it enacted,"

Mr. KERN. But I was inquiring as to the vicious character of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment. I am not now taking into consideration the purposes of this proposed legislation. Senator will see during his service in this body an annual appropriation to support this bureau running into the millions of dollars. What for? To pay an army of representatives of this bureau, probably to be selected under the civil service or under some method conceived in this bureau. What will their duties be?

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Idaho permit me?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to interpose simply with this suggestion, that unless the Federal Government has some jurisdiction over the question, then it has no right even to collect the information; and the very fact that the Federal Government is required to collect the information assumes that it has some power to legislate on the subject.

Mr. HEYBURN. That suggestion is in exact keeping with the spirit of this measure.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. KERN. I rose awhile ago to request the Senator to point out any vicious features of this particular bill, and I am asking for information.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will digress from the plan I had in mind when I rose and suggest, in the light of what is being done under the laws of some of the States that give authority, or undertake to, to committees or boards or organizations to pass upon the quality of the relations between the parent and the child, whether or not the parent is properly rearing and bringing up the child-

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT, Does the Senator from Idaho yield to his colleague?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. This bill does not purport, in my judgment, what either my colleague or the Senator from Texas seems to think it purports to do. It does not interfere with the domestic relation which has been spoken of so earnestly and effectively. Neither does it interfere with the part the parent may have in the education of the child or in caring for it.

There is a condition in this country, however, relating to the welfare of children, over which neither parents nor anyone else has influence or jurisdiction of this kind, and it is for the purpose of covering that situation and of gathering the facts that the bill was introduced. It does not purport to deal with the matters about which my colleague is speaking. Mr. HEYBURN. The position stated by my colleague reminds me of a proposition to construct a vast piece of machinery, place it upon a highway, and start it in motion, for the sole purpose, on the part of the one starting it, of seeing whether it would work or not, without considering what damage it would do if it did work.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to his colleague?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. There are only a few persons in this world who can tell, until they try. Those who have power to look into the future and know are confined to the very few.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think probably one of the most charming attributes in the character—I was going to say of some, but I will say of many—is that of sarcasm. It is a most delightful quality, and it will always bring a spirit of cheerfulness over the people who are not affected by it.

If I am not right in my conclusion, then this bill is a mere waste of time. If it were introduced merely for the purpose of creating an organization to draw salaries, I do not think it would receive any support, even that of my colleague. It recites that a bureau shall be created and certain officers shall be created and certain salaries be paid them, and that they may collect certain information.

What is to be done with the information? Is it merely for the education of the persons collecting it, to swell the cost of printing each year, by telling how many children are defective and how many children are ignorant and how many children are unprovided for? No; that is not the purpose.

I have a large correspondence in regard to this matter which tells the purpose of it, because those who favor it tell in their letters what they expect to do under it. I have had time since the former discussion of this measure to correspond with some of them. They are intelligent people. I asked them specifically what their object was in supporting this measure which they insisted I should vote for. I asked them what they hoped to accomplish. Their answer, if not in uniform speech, in spirit is that they hoped to be in a position to exercise jurisdiction over children who in their judgment are not being properly cared for. They want to become substitutes for the parents. Perhaps some of them may be parents. Many of them to my knowledge are not. But they are anxious to secure an opportunity, which they have not improved on their own part, of becoming the parents in fact of other people's children.

I realize it is one of those popular fads, a catching title, a musical title, and one of those that seems to appeal like the spirit of eloquence generally does, to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau. It is not written in bated breath, but it is spoken so to recommend it. It sounds well. A children's bureau may provide for or may result in harsh treatment for children as well as in kind treatment. There is nothing in this bill, in my judgment, to recommend it to anyone who has due regard-and I say this without being invidious at all-for the purpose and scope of our Government.

Of course, as I have said, from the votes which have been taken on the preliminary consideration of this bill, I presume it will pass, and I will be relieved of responsibility by anyone who takes the pains to inquire whether or not I was a party to a measure which, in my judgment, is so unworthy of considera-

Mr. WORKS. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to amendment. The Senator from California offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. Insert, at the end of section 2, the following proviso:

Provided, That such published matter shall be furnished only to legislative bodies and boards of health and health officers, on request only, and not to the general public.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should be very sorry to stand in the way of any legislation that would tend to benefit the dependent children of this country, but I am unalterably opposed to the indiscriminate distribution of the details of disease and of the unfortunate condition of this class of children. It can not be beneficial, and, in my judgment, it would be extremely detrimental For that reason I have offered this amendment. confining the distribution of the details that may be published and issued by this bureau to such bodies as may desire to receive that sort of information and to whom it will carry information that may be used for the benefit of the children, and to prevent its indiscriminate publication and distribution throughout the country.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask for the rereading of the amendment? I did not catch it exactly The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will reread the amendment.

The Secretary. It is proposed at the end of section 2 to add the following proviso:

Provided. That such published matter shall be furnished only to legislative bodies and boards of health and health officers, on request only, and not to the general public.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me that that does not quite make sense in connection with the sentence which is left here. The sentence in lines 7 and 8 reads;

The chief of said bureau may from time to time publish the results of these investigations.

Then, as I understand, the proposed proviso follows. I should think it ought to take the place of that sentence, commencing with the word "The" in line 7.

Mr. WORKS. If the amendment in that form is satisfactory to the Senator from Idaho, I will accept his suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary then will report the amendment as one to strike out and insert. The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to strike out: The chief of said bureau may from time to time publish the results of these investigations.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided, That such published matter shall be furnished only to legislative bodies and boards of health and health officers, on request only, and not to the general public.

Mr. HEYBURN. That fits on all right.
Mr. BORAH. I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment as it would read without my suggestion. Perhaps I was in error.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC 2. That the said bureau shall be under the direction of a chief, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive an annual compensation of $5,000. The said bureau shall investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories, and such other facts as have a bearing upon the welfare of children: Provided, That such published matter shall be furnished only to legislative bodies and boards of health and health officers, on request only, and not to the general public.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator wants it read as it will read.

Mr. BORAH. I withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, let us see where that puts . It is proposed now to print for private circulation, selected by statute, information obtained at the expense of the General Government of all the people. There is no citizen of the United States presumably who does not contribute to the expense of obtaining this information, and yet it is to be withheld from them. I can not reconcile my mind to that.

Of course, as I have already stated, I am opposed to the whole proposition, but if we are going to expend money out of the Public Treasury, it should be for all the public. kind of information are we supposed to gather? That which would be derogatory to the reputation of the parent? Are we to place the stamp of disapproval upon some parents, publish it in a report, and distribute it to a few? If we are going to slander the citizen, let us do it publicly and then defend it by such braggadocio as we can bring to our aid.

Mr. President, we are treading on pretty dangerous ground this morning by common consent. What is anticipated by this proposition that makes it so dangerous to send out-that some Government report is going to say that John Smith and his wife are brutal to their children or starving them or not providing for them or not educating them, and leave an indelible stamp upon the history and the records of the country that will follow the children, and their children, and so on. Is that the purpose? Are we going to start out to exploit the individual judgment and idiosyncrasies of parents at public expense?

It would become a school of slander. I suppose there is no hope of getting a little stay of execution in this case until the interested party can pray and repent.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it will no doubt be remembered that four years ago we appropriated $300,000 for the purpose of investigating child labor and the children of the country. With that $300,000 they sent agents all over our country, into the homes of our people—the poor people in the mountains. They sent in their reports, and here to-day, in the document room, there are 13 volumes, and there are 5 more volumes yet unpublished. I want to say here to-day upon this floor that some of those reports were so obscene and so scandalous and outrageous that the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor refused to print them. He had agents to revise them, to go over them. They went all over Tennessee and South and North Carolina, Georgia, and other Southern States preparing these scandalous reports.

This is only adding another regiment to the grand army of I am opposed to it, because if there is 440,000 officeholders. any work of this kind to be done it can be done by a bureau already in existence.

The President of the United States has sent a message here stating that there was a duplication of work in every department of the Government. Here we propose to duplicate the very work that is now being done in the Census Office.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. How many volumes did the Senator say had been published?

Mr. OVERMAN. Thirteen volumes have been published, and there are five more volumes to be published; and it will not be long before the committee on waste paper will come here and ask to have them destroyed, because I have no doubt that not 40 men in this country have read them.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have had a few letters, I think mostly from people who have not children, urging me to support this bill, but I never had a call for that document. Indeed I had lost track of the fact that we have such a publication.

Mr. OVERMAN. You can get 13 volumes now; and I would be glad if the Senator would read them and see the kind of reports they contain upon the children of New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is asking too much of a

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.
Mr. HEYBURN. Are they mailable? Have they been held to be mailable under the statute prohibiting the transmission of immoral and obscene literature?

Mr. OVERMAN. I say that some of the reports were so obscene that it would be indictable to send them through the mails, but that part was suppressed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor at my instigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I recall the fact, if the Senator will permit me, that under a former administration there was what I regarded as an unauthorized commission appointed, called the Homes Commission. The manuscript from that commissionchanced to drift into my hand-I have forgotten just why and I blue-penciled two chapters in that report, which certainly ought not to have been put in the hands of any child in this country, although it dealt with the diseases of children. The rest of it was published, I believe, but a protest came from all over the country against the circulation of that document. I have a copy of it somewhere.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. OVERMAN. In a moment. I well remember that citizens all over my State wrote to me to send them that document. Boys wanted to see it. I saw, and I suppose every Senator here saw, the obscene stuff that was published. It ought not to have been seen or read by any child or woman in this country.

Mr. CLAPP. Or by any man.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is well said; or by any man in this country. I do not know what this is going to result in. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator if the facts which have been gathered are true or untrue, in his judgment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Many of them are untrue, because it is stated that in certain counties in the United States there was not a virtuous woman in the county, which was a lie. My attention was called to it by a clerk in the department who said, I want you to come over and see certain reports." there, and I saw the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and called his attention to this, and he admitted it was an outrage and the reports would not be published.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina further yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. There may be things in those reports that Senators ought not to read, and I hope they will not, if they ought not to read them. But the fact remains that a vast amount of the facts were based upon real investigations and brought forth a number of things which were startling to the country. I do not know whether there are things in them that are untrue or not, but I know from investigations of my own. which have resulted since I took charge of this measure, a great many of those things reported to be true are true.

And if they are true, Mr. President, there is certainly nothing that we need to know more concerning than the condition, environment, and circumstances under which the children are growing up to manhood and womanhood.

I do not propose at this time to enter into a discussion of some of those facts and some of the conditions which have been revealed in many parts of this country. I have not tried to do that in this discussion. It is not my desire to reflect upon any community or any part of this country in the passage of this the fact remains that conditions do exist in this But country which it would be shocking for the community, indeed, to know, and the bill is pressed for the purpose of bringing to light that condition of affairs in order that those conditions may be remedied.

Mr. BAILEY. Remedied by whom? Mr. BORAH. Remedied by the State and the people who make laws.

Mr. BAILEY. Leave it to the States, then.
Mr. BORAH. We will leave it to the States to enact the law, because the Government of the United States has so arranged that it must be done by the States, and we are perfectly content that it shall be done by the States. In one State of this Union, where they have an efficient child-labor bureau, a representative of that bureau told me in this city day before yesterday that the demands they have from different parts of the Union for facts and for information it is beyond their power to furnish. That from all over the Union those who are engaged in bettering the condition of the children of this country are calling for information, and yet the Government of the United States locks its Treasury against furnishing the facts as to the actual condition of children. Is there anyone who does not really want to know as to the truth of the reported fearful conditions? Is there anyone who does not care to remedy them if they really exist as reported or rumored?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. DIXON. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if the opposition to the reports to which he refers did not come largely from the cotton-mill employers of his

Mr. OVERMAN. I never heard a word from the cotton-mill men as to these reports, because the information came to me from the department itself.

Mr. DIXON. Was there not quite an agitation in the Senator's State among the cotton-mill operatives against these reports?

Mr. OVERMAN. There was a great deal of opposition in the cotton mills not only in my State, but in other States, against an investigation by the Government into these conditions.

Mr. DIXON. I should like to ask the Senator what is the average number of hours allowed for the employment of children in the cotton mills of his State by statute?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think in my State it is 10 hours. I am

Mr. DIXON. How many hours in a week?

OVERMAN. I do not remember. They have been reduced lately. The last legislature reduced the number of hours.

Mr. DIXON. Is it not still 11 hours?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is 10 hours, I think. I am not sure.

Mr. DIXON. Is not the statutory day 11 hours for children in the cotton mills, and, as a matter of fact, was not the violent protest that has come up in certain quarters against the report that special agents had filed largely inspired by the cotton-mill operatives?

Mr. OVERMAN. There was no opposition to these reports. It was opposition to some of the agents. There was a complaint as to the agents from Florida. I remember the Senator from Florida and myself received letters from certain interests saving that these long-haired men and short-haired women were coming down there and going into their mills, and they did not like it.

Mr. DIXON. They objected to this publicity of the employment of children 66 hours a week in cotton mills.

Mr. OVERMAN. Who is going to settle that?

Mr. DIXON. I say, Was not the opposition due largely to

Mr. OVERMAN. The opposition was to the manner of these agents. According to one telegram I saw, they visited none but

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will permit me to make a

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly. Mr. BAILEY. I thought, at first, that this was a kind of whimsical philanthropy which some nice old ladies, who had nothing to do, had formulated and were trying to pass. the Senator from Montana and other Senators now make it plain that the real object is to force the hand of certain States, and thus they make it apparent that the Federal Government is attempting to do by indirection what the Senator from Idaho, in charge of the bill, concedes it has no power to do directly.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. I will not yield until I answer the Senator from Montana. The reports that I complained of were in the counties where there never have been any mills or manufacturing establishments of any kind.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina declines to yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was in the mountain country of Tennessee and North Carolina and Georgia. I did not go into the reports of Massachusetts and the other New England States, but especially into that section of my State and Tennessee where there never had been a cotton mill except, probably, in Buncombe. These reports were not from Buncombe. went into the little humble homes of the mountaineer who had his cabin on the side of the mountain, and reported the condition of those people, as to their chewing tobacco, and the clothes they wore; that they went barefooted, and the kind of furniture they had in their humble homes. We have all come from humble parentage.

How would the Senator from Montana have liked for a Government agent to have gone down into his father's humble home, or his grandfather's in the days of the Revolution, investigating the condition of his sacred home? That is what I object to. That is what was done with the appropriation of $300,000. I do not know whether this bureau would do that or not. It asks for $29,000, which is only the beginning. know when these bureaus are established they begin to increase officeholders from time to time until the sum reaches about a million. We ought to stop the establishment of these bureaus. I am willing to get reasonable kind of information by means of the census, and when you read this bill you will see that the census now is getting up a great deal of the very information that is provided for in the bill.

We duplicate the work. There is too much duplication in the departments of this Government to-day. It would be a good thing for a committee to go around and see where there is a duplication of work, and see if these officeholders are doing the same work and getting salaries where one man could do the work.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, no particular portion of this country has any monopoly over any other part of the country with reference to the conditions with which this bill proposes to deal. I do not think the conditions in the State which the Senator has the honor to represent are any worse than the conditions in some of the States of the North. The manufacturing cities are the places principally where these conditions prevail. It does not make any difference whether in the North or the South or the East or the West, where these conditions prevail it becomes necessary in the belief of a great many good people to investigate those conditions and to know what best can be done to remedy the situation. This bill deals with no other proposition than that of investigation, and if there are no facts which it would injure anyone to have revealed no one will be injured.

On the other hand, if there are conditions concerning which we ought to know, certainly there is no one so well prepared to take care of that and deal with it as the National Government. It can not legislate. No one proposes to legislate. It can not interfere with the relation of mother and child. No one proposes to do that. It can not interfere with the condition of the home, and no one proposes to do it; but if the facts are gathered and the information is at hand the representatives of the respective States being fully informed, if they see fit to enact legislation, there is where the legislation must be had. It is upon that principle that this bill is built. I venture to say that by reason of investigations which have been made by private organizations and by individuals there has been legislation in several States of the Union altogether beneficial for the people and for the children of those respective States. It is to encourage, to accentuate, and to aid in this work that this information is being gathered by the National Government, and not in any sense for the purpose of impinging upon the rights of the States to control the relationship which should exist between a parent and child or with reference to the domestic condition in the several States.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I was of the opinion that the Federal Government had authority to obtain in any reasonable way information which might enable its several departments to execute their functions, but it is a novel, and, I must be permitted to say, it is a dangerous doctrine that the Federal Government has the power or that it rests under the duty to obtain information which will enable the State governments to execute their functions.

I am of the opinion that the State of Idaho ought to know just as much, and only just as much, about its own people and their conditions as it chooses to know. I do not believe that the people of Texas, acting through their Representatives in this and the other House of Congress, have any right to force upon the people of Idaho an unwelcome knowledge of their condition. I would object to that if it were purely academic, if it were a mistaken philanthropy, and proceeded upon the false notion that it was their Christian duty to enlighten their brother; but I resent it all the more when it is made apparent by specific declaration that the very purpose of this bill, and the information which it seeks to accumulate, is to force the States of this Union to legislate in a given way.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BAILEY. I do. Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator to say, to force States to legislate?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not, of course, mean physical force. Mr. BORAH. There can be no force, Mr. President, public opinion in this matter. There can be no force other than that which arises by reason of the people being informed as to a condition which they desire to remedy, and that is the force which causes legislation and the legislation of a State.

Mr. BAILEY. The public opinion of one section of this Union once involved this country in a fratricidal war because its opinion could not be accepted by another section of the

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BAILEY. I do. Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the Senator from Texas to say that the Federal Government had no right to gather statistics to be used as a foundation for legislation or action by the States.

Mr. BAILEY. I do say that without hesitation or qualification, and a few years ago all men belonging to the party which the Senator from Nebraska honors by his membership in it taught that. We contended that matters like this lie wholly without the province of the Federal Government, and the Federal Government had no power to touch them at any point.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it not true that much of the information gathered by the periodical census taken by the Federal Government is for the benefit and use of the State legislatures?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator forgets that the decennial census is taken under a constitutional command to enumerate the inhabitants of this country for the purpose of apportioning Representatives and direct taxes among the States. They have extended that constitutional command until it embraces almost every conceivable subject. But that only illustrates—and I thank the Senator for calling my attention to it—how these matters progress. In the last bill providing for a census they were not content to authorize the agents of the Government to solicit from the people such information as the people were content to give, but they wrote it in that act that if an American citizen refused to divulge matters pertaining to his private affairs he might be drawn up before a court and punished as a criminal.

Of course, no man with sense enough to be the Attorney General would ever permit the Government to attempt to exe-cute that provision of the law, because it was absolutely null and void. Even lawyers—and I betray no secrets of the committee-even lawyers on the Census Committee, conceding that the Government had no power to inflict punishment upon a recalcitrant inhabitant in such cases, still insisted on incorporating such a provision in the law so that men would answer those questions under the fear of the law. Now, Mr. President, the Government of the United States has a right to send these enumerators to my home and ask me the number of my family; it has the power to make me tell how many tenants may occupy my land, because all that helps to establish the number of the inhabitants; but no man with knowledge enough of law to be entitled to a license to practice in our courts believes that the Federal Government, under its power to enumerate the inhabitants for the purpose of apportioning Representatives, has any authority to compel me to tell him the number of acres of land I cultivate or the number of cattle I own. Yet we have written that in the census act. Thus we go on from one point to another.

I think there is much fadism about all this, and I do not like the method of promoting measures like this. I received a letter from as good a woman as ever adorned an American home, urging me to support this bill, and when I wrote her that I was opposed on general principles to legislation of this kind she very promptly replied that she did not know anything about it and had written me because she had been asked to do so. That is the way nearly all this sentiment is created for these things.

Now, this information that we have, a great deal of it pure fadism, is right. When I was a boy in the country they went to the cow pen, milked the cows, and the children drank the milk before it was cool. Those children grew into sturdy men and lived to a ripe old age; but in these cities now they must sterilize the milk, then bottle it and seal it with great care, but the children who drink it die before they are 6 years old. [Laughter.] Mr. President, that does not appeal to me very

Again, I repeat, if the bill was merely for the purpose of gathering information that everybody might have it who wanted it, would protest because it would be an exercise of power not within the warrant of the Federal Constitution, but when we are boldly told that the purpose of it is to create a public sentiment that shall operate as a moral coercion upon the States of this Union with respect to matters which even the Senator in charge of the bill concedes to be purely State affairs, I earnestly

Mr. WORKS. I desire to modify the amendment I have offered and to reoffer it as modified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California withdraws his amendment and offers in its stead an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. At the end of section 2 it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That such published matter shall be furnished to legislative bodies and boards of health and health officers, but not to the general public except on request.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, since I offered the amendment a note has come in upon the floor of the Senate stating that if this amendment is adopted it will ruin the bill. If that be soif this amendment that restricts the publication of this matter and the distribution of it to officers and public officials whose duty is to aid in carrying out the purpose of the bill-then I think the bill should very properly be defeated.

As I said in the beginning, I do not desire to stand in the way of any measure that is going to benefit this class of children in this country, but certainly no good can result from the indiscriminate distribution of matter of the kind that will be gathered together in making these investigations. I believe that the Government has a perfect right and that it is within its power to make these investigations and secure the information that seems to be desired through the enactment of this legislation; but certainly if the information is gathered and placed in the hands of the legislative bodies and others within the States who are called upon to act with respect to these matters, then enough has been done to accomplish the results that are desired, and I am utterly opposed to the indiscriminate distribution of matter of this kind.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I move to amend section 2. The VICE PRESIDENT. As there is an amendment now pending, that will be first disposed of, unless the Senator is about to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. I was going to offer an amendment in lieu of that suggested by the Senator from California [Mr. Works].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio then offers a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from California?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes. I move to strike out the last sentence and to substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from California what I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves to Strike out and to insert what will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. It is proposed, in section 2, line 7, after the word "children," to strike out the words "The chief of said bureau may from time to time publish the results of these investigations," and in lieu thereof to insert:

The chief of said bureau shall tabulate the reports so collected and shall from time to time publish said tabulation, but the details of said reports shall not be disclosed.

Mr. POMERENE, Mr. President, it seems to me that all the public is interested in, and all that public officials would be interested in, would be the result of these investigations. No good can come from the disclosure of the detailed information as it may be collected by the agents of the department or as it may be filed in the office. For that reason it seems to me that the objections which were urged by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] would be obviated by permitting simply the publication of the general results and concealing the details.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I was struck by what the Senator from Texas [Mr. Balley] said during his first remarks, to the effect that such legislation as this would have been unthought of 50 years ago. It seems to me, Mr. President, that if we follow out that idea we will see a cause for the present movement all over the United States.

Fifty years ago we were not confronted by the problems which now confront all States in dealing with these questions; 50 years ago there was, practically speaking, no child-labor prob-lem in the United States; 50 years ago this country was not confronted by the serious evils which have grown up in the great industrial centers, in the great mining regions, in the overgrown cities of the United States; and the only reason why such legislation as this was not considered 50 years ago was that the conditions of those days were radically different from the conditions of the present day. Mr. President, it seems that the very change of conditions-

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, sir. Mr. BAILEY. Did we not have just as many children in proportion to our population then as we have now?

Mr. GALLINGER. Rather more. Mr. HITCHCOCK. We may have had more.

Mr. BAILEY. Did we not then have about the same proportion of factories that we have now?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We did not.

Mr. BAILEY. I have been saying that during those glorious Democratic days from 1846 to 1860 we increased our industrial activities more largely than in any other equal period of our history. I thought that was true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am sure the Senator must realize the facts from his own wide reading; but if he is in doubt he can refer to the statistical reports, and he will find that during the last 50 years there has been an enormous increase in the number of women and children that have been crowded into the industrial and commercial occupations of the United States, crowded into them probably by conditions which could not be defeated, and the very advent of this large number of women and children into those pursuits has created problems which government must deal with.

Mr. BAILEY. What government?

Mr. BAILEY. What government?
Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I admit that the Senator is correct in his implication that in the main the State government is the government which must deal with these problems, for the reason that they are not within the jurisdiction of Congress; but when our forefathers divided the responsibilities of governing the American people between the National Government, with its limited powers, and the State governments, with their more comprehensive powers, they certainly did not intend that any field of government should remain unoccupied; and if we have found that under the changed conditions 46 different States are confronted by new problems which have arisen, and that it is not within the possibilities for each one of those States to gather throughout the whole country the statistics which are necessary and valuable to enable legislatures to meet those problems, I am sure I feel warranted in saying that some power somewhere should step forward and gather the necessary statistics, the necessary information, the necessary intelligence, to permit the various States of the Union to grapple with the problems as they arise. I come from a Western State Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska

yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In a moment. I come from a Western State, a new State. We are beginning to have in our great cities, particularly in the city in which I live—Omaha—some of the problems which have confronted the people of the older States and of the larger cities. I think we should have in my State all the information which can be gathered, not simply in New York and in Massachusetts, but in every State of the Union which has undertaken to solve this problem. there should be some central agency to gather this information intelligently, systematically, and economically and put it at the disposal of all the States of the Union. I now yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply rose, Mr. President, to suggest that up to the 50 years ago of which I spoke we had admitted more new States to the Union than we have since then. Our popula-tion had increased much more rapidly, judged by percentage, from the beginning up to then than it has since then up to now, consequently we had all of the problems in that day that we

The only difference about it is that we left each sovereignty to deal with its own problems. If the Senator's suggestion is to be accepted, that if a power which it seems desirable to exercise is not conferred on the Federal Government and not conferred on the State governments, then the Federal Government is entitled to exercise it, it is the end at least to the Democratic theory of the Constitution. The Constitution makers-not the original makers either, but those who amended it-out of an abundant caution have provided against that. They provided that all of the powers not conferred upon the General Government should be "reserved to the States or to the people, respectively." It is entirely possible under our system that a power might neither reside in the States nor in the General Government; and if such a power must be exercised we have a machinery which provides for conferring it upon the States or upon the United States.

I think the Senator will regret hereafter having asserted in this place, and perpetuating it in the RECORD, that although, in the wisdom of our fathers, a power has not been conferred it may be exercised. He, of course, knows as well as I do that the fact that a power was not conferred upon either State or Nation did not annihilate the power, for it resides still with the people, and they can confer it as they choose.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am not yet clear in my mind whether I used the word "power" or not. The idea I intended to convey was this—that in a country where we have a divided responsibility of government, a part of it resting with the States and a part of it with the National Government, it was evidently the intention of the forefathers that the two should cooperate, and where it is impossible for the States to act, it is proper for the United States to act for the benefit of all, not by the exercise of any great power, but, as in this case, by the mere expenditure of a nominal sum of money in gathering information for the benefit of all the States. Cooperation was intended between the States and the National Government.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President-The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether he thinks it is necessary or advisable that the information gathered under this bill, if it is enacted, should be distributed to the general public?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, that would altogether depend upon the nature of the information. I am not one of those who are afraid of information, afraid of statistics. I believe if facts exist they should be ascertained, and, if ascertained, they should be brought to the proper persons, whether they be legislative officers or administrative officers, or the people who vote for them.

Mr. WORKS. I agree with the Senator that the facts should be brought to the attention of the people who have to deal with the matter; but my question was whether it would be advisable or necessary that the information should go to the general public.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not attempting here to antagonize the amendment offered by the Senator from California, which I realize is offered with the very best intentions, and probably it might bring good results, and I do not disagree in any degree with the Senator from Texas [Mr. Balley]. I am opposed, and have been opposed in my short career in Washington, to the manufacture of additional governmental machinery. I have been opposed to such measures as sought to interfere with or take away from the powers of the States; but I do not conceive that this bill has any such purpose or will have any such result. I believe it will enable the 46 States of the Union to perform their duty to their own people with more intelligence and with more efficiency than they will possibly be able to do without it, because the various States could not go abroad over the land and gather this illuminating information, which can gathered in an easy way by the National Government.

Mr. BAILEY. Why not?
Mr. HITCHCOCK. A practical difficulty is the expense of it; and if it were possible for the stronger States to do it, it would be an absurd thing to place the burden upon them when a single agency can do it.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska
yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do. Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, it is the worst curse of American politics to-day that the Federal Government has absolutely bribed the States into a surrender of so many of their powers. The States want something done, and they choose for the Federal Government to pay the expense, and thus they consent for the Federal Government to do it, strangely forgetful of the fact that the Federal Government never possessed a dollar that it did not either take from the people of the States before it was spent or else obtain it upon the credit of the people of the States, whose labor or property must discharge the debt.

If there was some necromancy by which the Federal Government could obtain money and spend it without the people of the States having first or last to pay it, that suggestion would appeal to many who look to the cost rather than to the political consequence; but, as a matter of fact, the States, or rather the people of the States, must pay every dollar that the Federal Government spends; and the Federal Government, be it remembered, in collecting it pursues a system of taxation that aggravates the burden of the tax; and yet we go on, the State avoiding the expense and encouraging the Federal Government to incur it. If the people of Nebraska want this information and the people of Texas think they know enough without it, the people of Texas ought not to be required to contribute to the education of the people of Nebraska.

Or if there comes a question about which our people are deeply concerned, and we want information on it, let our own taxpayers pay for it; and we have no right to ask the people of Nebraska, who, perhaps, are not interested in the question or may know all they want to know about it, to bear the expense of educating the people of the State of Texas.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I doubt if in the last year or two there has been a measure before Congress which has aroused more widespread interest than this particular bill, and I believe there are few measures here which have brought out so large a number of demands upon the Senators and Representatives for passage as this particular bill. I am not able to state from what associations or individuals in the State of Texas, but I have no doubt the Senator himself has received from his own people requests for the enactment of this legislation.

I believe that in every State of the Union, Texas as well as all other States, there is a strong popular demand among the progressive people, who are looking out for the welfare of the masses, for the enactment of this legislation, and I doubt whether there is a State in the Union where this sentiment does not exist to a great degree.

I agree with the Senator from Texas, as I do on many other things, that the Government of the United States should not appropriate from its Treasury for the purpose of performing those duties which the States are naturally called upon to perform. I believe that wherever a State can perform a duty efficiently it should be left to the State to do, but I am sure the Senator from Texas can hardly seriously argue that 46 separate States in this Union should go about gathering national statistics on the subjects involved in this bill, when the Federal Government can gather them for all at a mere nominal cost. Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator has been here long enough to know as much as anybody else about the cost of Federal operations. Does he not know that it costs the Federal Government more to perform any given service than it does a State?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am inclined to think so.

Mr. BAILEY. Then it will cost more in this instance.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But it will not cost the Federal Government 46 times as much as it would cost the 46 States.

Mr. BAILEY. But there might not be 46 States desiring the information.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have just stated that there are before Congress very few measures which the people so widely desire enacted as this measure. From his own State—
Mr. BAILEY. I heard the Senator's statement, and I realize the circumstances and force behind this movement. I related a few moments ago the instance of a lady who wrote me in favor of this measure. I replied, politely but firmly, that I did not believe in legislation on such subjects by the Federal Government. She replied very politely that she did not know anything about it herself; that certain people had written her, and she had written me. I venture to say that much of the demand is of that character. Yet at the risk of again being called Tory, I will have to believe it is right before I vote for it, I do not care what the demand upon me may be.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I hope neither one of the pending amendments will prevail. I have read the bill as carefully as I could, and I confess I can, under the terms of this bill, see no danger from publicity of any facts that the Government might collect which would jeopardize or hurt anybody on earth unless it be some person who has done something to which publicity should not be given.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Montana permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DIXON. Very gladly. Mr. BAILEY. The Senat

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator is a good lawyer. I will ask him to tell me upon what provision of the Constitution he rests this authority.

Mr. DIXON. I think on the same ground-Mr. BAILEY. The general-welfare clause?

I think on the same ground upon which a thousand other-measures have passed this body.

Mr. BAILEY. That is no answer at all.

Mr. DIXON. We expend five times this amount every year for the publication known as Diseases of the Horse, of which each Congressman gets a thousand copies.

Mr. BAILEY. But under what provision of the Constitution is this measure proposed?

Mr. DIXON. The general-welfare clause.

Mr. BAILEY. I knew it would come to this. This bill really undertakes to excuse itself on that ground because it is entitled "A bill to collect statistics for the 'welfare' of the

Mr. DIXON. All right.
Mr. BAILEY. The Constitution says the general welfare.
Mr. DIXON. The children are the biggest part of the general welfare of this Nation. They are the coming citizenship who are to take the place of the men and women upon the stage of action at this time.

All of the great furor about the expense of this poor, little, insignificant bureau disappears in thin air when you examine 1 the bill. It creates a director and 13 clerks. The establishment of the bureau will not cost the Government $25,000 a

Mr. BAILEY. Where does the Senator get the power to do

You must have the power if you can do it.

Mr. DIXON. All right. I will give the Senator an instance on which was based power much larger than this. six or eight years ago we passed an emergency bill appropriating $500,000 to combat the boll weevil in the States of the South, which was threatening to destroy the great cotton crop of the South. Upon what special constitutional provision did we base that?

Mr. BAILEY. That was a naked appropriation coupled with the exercise of no power. It did not create an office, and I gravely doubted its constitutionality.

The Senator will remember, of course, that perhaps the greatest veto message in the history of the Government, certainly the most elaborate, took the position that the Federal Government might possess and did possess an unlimited power of appropriation for a general purpose-not for a local, but for a general purpose-but that it possessed absolutely no independent power, except it was specifically granted to it by the Constitution. I have not always questioned appropriations that I thought were without full warrant, but I have frequently had grave misgivings, although it was a naked appropriation.

Here it is not a mere appropriation. This bill creates offices and authorizes the appointment of officers. Congress can only create offices to execute some function of the Federal Government. That is axiomatic.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DIXON. I do. Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Texas how the National Government put into operation its power to utilize the appropriation which it made for the purpose?

Mr. BAILEY. I have no doubt it did it through officers already existing.

Mr. BORAH. But would there be any difference, so far as the constitutional power is concerned, between making the appropriation and creating an office at the same time, and making an appropriation and conferring the authority upon some officer already created?

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, yes. Here is an office already created by law and filled by an officer appointed according to law. By a naked appropriation you authorize him to disburse the money I think that comes dangerously close to the line, but it is still a very different case from this.

For instance, if the Senator from Montana will permit me, we have a practice of sending agents of the Federal Government into States, where if they find live stock afflicted with certain diseases, they destroy them and pay to the owner a modest sum as compensation. I am inclined to think that the Federal Government can pay the owner of the diseased animal this money, but I am absolutely certain that the Federal Government can not authorize its officers to go into that man's barn and kill the animal. One is the mere expenditure of money and the other is coupled with the exercise of power; and I will venture to say that the Senator from Idaho never heard of an instance where a Federal inspector or Federal agent attempted to kill a diseased animal in a State over the protest of the owner.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that I ever did.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield further?

Mr. DIXON. I yield. Mr. BORAH. In what way do we carry out the practice to which the Senator from Montana has referred different from the way we do it in this instance? We did it by officers having We have representatives of a the same status as these have.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no; the Senator misconceives the power, he will permit me to say with all deference

Mr. BORAH. But the Senator from Idaho does not misconceive the question of fact.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me finish. The Senator will agree with me, and the Senator from Montana will agree with both of us, that before the Government can create an office it must have the power to create, and the Federal Government has no power to create an office except in aid of the execution of some of its

Now, of course, the Constitution itself creates certain offices. It creates the office of President and Vice President. I think it creates the office of Speaker of the House. But whether it creates it or not, it certainly recognizes it; and it creates the office of Senator and the office of Representative. It creates the Supreme Court, and it might be said to create the office of judge of the inferior courts, because it provides for their appointment. It also creates the heads of the departments, because it mentions them or recognizes them. But outside of those, all of the offices under the Federal Government are statutory, and when the Government comes to enact a statute to create one of those offices, it must do so in pursuance of some power.

Now, I ask, Where is the power upon which Senators can rest the right of Congress to create a children's bureau?

Mr. BORAH. May I ask in return, Where is the power the Government has for creating the Bureau of Animal Industry?

It is a bad habit to ask one question in answer to another. But I say to the Senator, it may have that power under the commerce clause, because the Federal Government has the power to exclude diseased animals from interstate and foreign commerce upon the theory that the introduction of diseased animals into interstate and foreign commerce is an obstruction to commerce in merchantable animals; and the Supreme Court has over and again held that we may exclude these diseased animals from the channels of interstate commerce upon the theory that they are an obstruction to general So the Congress might create a Bureau of Animal Industry to attend to that very question.

I have no doubt that bureau goes further. It sends men all over this country to inspect the horses and cattle and hogs of the people, and if it finds them diseased it perhaps slaughters them and pays the owner for them.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, if the Senators have finished their discussion, inside of my time, I will say that we continue to slaughter the children of this country.

Mr. BAILEY. There is no commerce in children, I hope. Mr. DIXON. And when any attempt is made by the Se And when any attempt is made by the Senate of the United States to place the children of this Nation on at least an equal basis with the hogs and the cattle and the sheep and the chickens Senators rise and discover great constitutional limitations and prohibitions.

Mr. BAILEY rose.

Mr. DIXON. I want to reply to the Senator from Texas, Mr. BAILEY. I will agree to waive all I have said if

I will agree to waive all I have said if the Senator from Montana thinks the children have no better tutelage than the hogs and the cattle and the horses.

Mr. DIXON. The children are owned and taken care of by the same people who take care of the hogs.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator mean to say that the men take the same care of the hogs and the sheep as they do of the children?

Mr. DIXON.

Mr. BAILEY. I have seen children that seemed to be no better taken care of.

Mr. BORAH. Those are the children we are trying to reach. Mr. DIXON. If the Senators will permit me to proceed for three or four minutes, I will yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DIXON. I had not intended to raise any constitutional question in what I had to say, but as long as the Senator from Texas has raised the constitutional feature of the matter I will say that we certainly have the power under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, which has accommodated itself to thousands of enactments by Congress. The opening clause of the Constitution certainly covers the bill under consideration.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. DIXON. I will yield in a moment. The opening clause of the Constitution says:

We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to curselves and our posterity—

Mr. BAILEY. That is not the general-welfare clause of the Constitution to which the most liberal constructionists refer. That is the preamble. The general-welfare clause to which the apostles of a broad construction refer, and upon which they plant themselves, is that included in the power to levy taxes.

I want to agree with the Senator from Montana this far. If that provision for the general welfare is a substantive grant of power, then what I have said on the constitutionality of this question falls utterly to the ground. But I have the Supreme Court on my side of the question, and it has said more than once that it is not a substantive grant of power. That really is connected with the question of levying taxes, and the most that can be said is that the Congress has the power to levy taxes to provide for the general welfare.

Mr. DIXON. Yes; that follows the general provision of the preamble which I have just read; and the Senator at my left suggested a moment ago the clause "to insure domestic tranquillity" might include a proposition of this kind.

Mr. HEYBURN. No, Mr. President; I said the Senator might find some comfort in it.

Mr. DIXON. But we are wandering away from the purpose and object of the bill. If there is one crime of which modern commercialism stands convicted in the forum of public opinion, it is the abuse of child labor.

Now, I know there are valid objections in the minds of some Senators to the constitutionality of this bill, but the overwhelming opposition to the pending bill does not arise on any ground of implied unconstitutionality. It comes from the men of this country who are employing little children in the sweatshops and factories and coal mines and in the other great centers of modern commerce and industrialism in the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. How can the National Government stop

Mr. DIXON. The Federal Government can not stop it.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. DIXON. It is a matter of legislation for the States, but the thing that will do more than anything else to bring a stop to it is to turn on full publicity, to let in light on the conditions that we know go on every day in all of the great industrial centers of this country.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DIXON. Yes.
Mr. HEYBURN. It is merely to say, referring to the statement that the protest against this bill comes from a certain element, that not a letter or telegram which I have received or referred to came from that class. That came from people who have studied domestic life and have some intelligent conception of the relation that should exist between parent and child.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Will the Senator from Montana The VICE PRESIDENT. yield to the junior Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DIXON. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator, if he has not concluded.

Mr. DIXON. I wish to say just one other thing. Here is a bill that appropriates about $25,000 a year to establish this bureau to "investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life," and "the chief of said bureau may from time to time publish the results of these investigations." Certainly no Senator will argue that any responsible chief of a bureau, from the investigations made by the special agents provided in this bill, is going to print obscene special agents provided in this bin, is going a single literature or literature of a kind to give offense to any men literature or literature or residents of this country. That or women who are citizens or residents of this country. is the most far-fetched argument I have ever heard advanced. I do not know why anything like that should be attributed to such a bureau. Certainly no other bureau of the Government is guilty of a publication of that kind reflecting on the sense of morality of men and women.

I think both the amendments offered would tend to hamper the workings of the bureau and destroy much of its efficiency. The publication of the reports based on these investigations, giving widespread publicity to the conditions that they may find, is the best thing in the whole bill. I hope the amendments will not prevail and limit the publications merely to legislative Let the people of the country know what is found.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the close of the morning hour is about to be announced, and I should like to ask for a unanimous-consent agreement in regard to this measure. It is that upon next Tuesday the measure be taken up and disposed of, together with all amendments, during that day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator please repeat his request? The Chair did not catch it.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent that upon Tuesday next, after the morning business, this bill may be taken up, and that the bill, together with all amendments, be disposed of during that legislative day.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, as far as I am concerned, I am ready, if the Senator desires, to vote on it now. Although the hour has passed, if it is the will of the Senate to pass the bill,

I have no desire to delay it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that having gone beyond the hour of 4 o'clock, it now becomes the unfinished business. Mr. BAILEY. I think at the expiration of the morning hour it fell-The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is the unfinished business. Mr. BAILEY. And did not become the unfinished business.

However, I believe there is no unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was none until three minutes ago.

Mr. BAILEY. That is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. Notwithstanding that, is it possible that a measure which has been considered in the morning hour becomes the unfinished business simply because the hour of 4 o'clock was reached?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was taken up and considered by unanimous consent, and then, not having been completed before the hour of 4 o'clock arrived, of course it seems to the Chair that it automatically becomes unfinished business.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Chair will possibly revise that opinion when he examines the matter more carefully. But I am not particular about that. I hope the request of the Senator from Idaho to consider the bill next Tuesday will be acceded to, because I want to look into the matter a little more carefully than I have done. I shall certainly not obstruct the consideration or a vote upon the measure if it goes over until next week.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 252 be taken up on Tuesday next, after the routine morning business is concluded, and that it be considered and disposed of prior to adjournment upon that Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to make an inquiry. pose something becomes unfinished business automatically between now and then?

Mr. GALLINGER. It can not.
Mr. HEYBURN. Something may become unfinished business any day automatically. We have nothing to do with it; that is, we do not control it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Surely that would be laid aside, I will say to the Senator, if we make this unanimous-consent agree-

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be laid aside for this measure.

Mr. BORAH. The agreement includes the bill and amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that that was the request.

Mr. OVERMAN. We might vote on it now and get rid of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. We are not ready.

Mr. BORAH. I should be very glad to vote now, but two Senators have asked for time to look into the matter. stand the Senator from New Hampshire desires to look into it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire a little time to look into it. Mr. THORNTON. I should like very briefly to talk on the

The VICE PRESIDENT. An agreement to the request does not dispose of the matter now. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah]? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Louisiana will proceed.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, I fully believe that the welfare of the children of this country is as close to my heart as it can possibly be to the heart of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], who has introduced this bill. I do not know how many children have been born in his family. I do know that nine have been born into my own, and certainly in the community in which I live no one would for a moment question my interest in the welfare of the children of the country. I am opposed to the passage of this bill. It is objectionable to me, not only because I am not in sympathy with the present policy of ever increasing and widening the scope of Federal power, a policy which, in my opinion, is leading us constantly toward centralization, but I object to it for another reason. I am not willing for my home to be invaded by anyone and I be required under compulsion to answer certain questions con-nected with the welfare of my children. The general proposition laid down in the bill, from which I quote, is that-

The said bureau shall investigate and report upon all matters per-taining to the welfare of children and child life.

And the scope of that is not restricted by the special matters mentioned thereafter.

For one I object, as I have said, to anyone coming into my home to ask such questions as in his opinion might pertain to the welfare of my children. It is a very different proposition from the coming of a census officer into my home and asking such questions as how many children I have had, what are their ages—questions which he is restricted by the law in asking. But here his own inclination, his own judgment, would be the William Stackpole, deceased.

only guide to the agent by which he would prosecute his inquiries about my domestic matters.

Different men, I know, have different natures, and of course a man with refinement of nature would not wish to ask questions in that connection which others destitute of refinement would not hesitate to ask, who would not be aware that they were giving offense or being even indelicate or intruding in any way upon the proprieties; and it might very often result in the head of a house being compelled, in order to preserve his own self-respect and the sanctity of his home, to kick an overzealous official out of his house.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 25, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, January 24, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, whose spirit pervades all space and enters into the hearts of those who are susceptible, to uphold, sustain, and guide them in right thinking and right living.

That man can not "live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" is demonstrated again and again by the men who go down to defeat by a false estimate of their own puny strength. Help us to eat of the bread of heaven and drink freely of the fountain of life that we may live to the larger life in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and

INDUSTRIAL AND CORPORATE PROBLEMS.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a speech made by the Hon. MARTIN W. LITTLETON, a Representative from New York, at Chattanooga, Tenn., on January 19, 1912, before the chamber of commerce on the "Industrial and corporate problems." It is an able and remarkable speech, and I am of opinion it ought to be printed in the Record. It covers the wonderful industrial development and matchless possibilities of the Southern States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print a speech delivered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTLETON] in Chattanooga, Tenn. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The speech referred to follows:

Mr. LITTLETON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I would not have you forget the old South, rich in the illustrious names and valorous deeds of those whose fame is secure in the enduring annals of her history. But I am intent on having you turn from a grateful reflection upon these tender and inspiring memories for a brief time to a cool and impartial inquiry into the industrial and business problems which confront the South of to-day. To do this and do it with a clear head and an open mind, we must disregard the geography of war and adopt the geography of development. We must lay aside the thought of section and development. We must lay aside the thought of section the think only of the whole country and the South's share in and contribution to that country. Finally, we must abandon the contribution to that country. Finally, we must abandon the lines deep cut by the fatal strife of the sixties and follow the deeper and more lasting lines written in the veins of your mountains, traced in the soil of your valleys, flowing along mountains, traced in the soil of your valleys, howing along your coast, by the margin of your oceans and bays, and outlined by your rivers as they run to the sea. In these permanent gifts of nature and their true and just development will be found the fullness of your enlightened civilization. From these must eventually come the blessings of plenty and content, and upon these it is for you to build a social, economic, and political structure which will stand against the winds and tides of time.

Society in its broader sense, and government in a more limited sense, is simply a true or false interpreter of the material welfare of the age. The silent but relentless process of material growth are, in every hour of the day, giving shape and direction to social order and political advancement. manifold hands of a tireless race of men and women are fashioning day by day the social and political issues whose wise solution calls for the exercise of the deepest knowledge and the most exalted patriotism. Deep down beneath every government are the unheard forces wielded by thrift and ambition which in the end will make of that government the medium of their final development. Constitutions are made to conform to the swelling influence of commerce. Empires take their shape from economic upheaval. Monarchies are molded by the form of material growth. Governments do not make progress. They are the manifestations of progress. They are the convenient agencies which are set up in the onward march of progress to establish justice, enforce order, and preserve the peace. If they obstruct the march of that progress, if they stand in the way of development, if they fail to interpret the demands of the age, they are altered or abolished. The old Articles of Confederation were swept aside by the growing demands of a growing commerce, and the Constitution was adopted in obedience to these demands. Political parties to even a greater extent are the mediums of material growth and the convenient instruments of progress. When they fail to interpret that growth, when they fail to promote that progress, they are thrown aside as unsuitable and unfit means to attain the end desired. Their platforms reveal little of their real usefulness. Their solemn convention protestations and demands disclose but a small part of their real elements, and the country is coming more and more to know and allow for this. They are finally accepted or rejected upon the full knowledge of the attitude of the men who lead them as that attitude is made known by the acts and utterances of these men. And almost invariably they are rejected if, after full discussion, their leaders are believed to be opposed to material progress or incapable of promoting it.

The South has suffered in its political prestige because its leaders have not always stood for progress; not because they were not able men or patriotic men, for I think no one would challenge the ability or patriotism of the South. It is because they have been content to cling to issues in their own States which have passed into history, and have been willing to follow on national issues the leadership of obstruction. No one, North or South, seriously claims that the negro as a race should at any time or place govern white people, and yet more than one campaign has been waged in recent years upon this worn-out and frayed issue. It is not too much to say that instead of taking counsel of those agencies which will cause the earth to yield up its treasures and translate its rich resources into the countless comforts of civilization, it has too often and too long taken counsel of the fears of yesterday, and converted them into the profitless protestations of a statesmanship barren of results.

What is there in this material South to engage the attention and tax the intellect of its leading men? What are its riches, which lay outstretched in its silent valleys, which uplift themselves in its noble mountains, which reveal their footprints on the sands of its endless shores? Stripped of tradition, shorn of history and freed from sentiment, each in themselves the unwearying charm of all its generations, what is the naked wealth and worth of this southern country which must be made to serve its people under the upbuilding influence of a creative statesmanship? Mr. Dawe, the managing director of the Southern Commercial Congress, at Washington, is authority for the statement that—

"The meaning of a coast line, when satisfactorily indented, is ease of access to the commerce of the world. Viewed from this point it will be seen that the Southern States possess an enormous advantage over the other two-thirds of the United States, for the coast line of the Southern States is 3,007 miles, while the coast line of the North Atlantic States is 888 miles, and of the Pacific coast 1,557 miles. When the indentations are considered the South is naturally far ahead of the North Atlantic and immeasureably ahead of the Pacific coast.

"The natural advantages of coast line are already asserting their influence, for we are able to say that a southern port still holds the second position for exports among all ports of the United States—New Orleans in 1900 and now a southern port that nine years ago was wrecked and rent by storm—the port of Galveston.

"We are able to show that the exports along the Gulf now exceed the exports of Philadelphia and Boston by 93 per cent, and they equal more than 663 per cent of the total which belongs to the overshadowing port of New York. The tables of exports for 1900 and 1908 show that 27 per cent growth in exports has taken place in New York, Philadelphia, and Boston regarded together. During the same time the exports from southern ports, handling more than $1,000,000 worth, increased 34 per cent.

"In the matter of imports—goods coming to America for distribution—we find that while the three great ports—Boston, Philadelphia, New York—have increased 27 per cent the southern ports have increased 102 per cent. This may be looked at another way. In 1898 imports along the Gulf were $13,062,729. In 1908 they had grown to $59,340,735, an increase of 354 per cent. In 1898 exports along the Gulf were $201,847,700. In 1908 they had grown to $396,552,136, an increase of 96 per cent.

"When we consider also that all this swing of commerce is taking place prior to the completion of the Panama Canal, and that the Panama Canal will help to pull southward every interoceanic movement, we must realize that southern ports will be on the very front doorstep of the world's future commerce. South America and the Pacific, by reason of their nearness, will be peculiarly available for southern growth.

" NAVIGABLE STREAMS.

"A coast line adequately fed by navigable streams means, no matter how trivally used at present, an ultimate development of vast importance; for streams can be depended upon to carry bulky freights, while the railroads, at present insufficient in the South, turn their powers toward the higher grades of freight needed within the growing South or shipped by it to other less-favored States and countries.

"The National Conservation Commission has reported that there are in the United States navigable streams amounting to 26,410 miles. Of this mileage there is in the South 18,215.

Tributary to the Atlantic	Miles. 4, 567 5, 212 7, 073 1, 363
	18, 215

"This enormous total does not include a single mile of the Ohio, though it benefits the Southern States through 900 miles. Neither does this total include any proportion of the Missouri River. If the Mississippi be regarded as a feeder for Gulf commerce, the mileage should be—

		Miles.
Tributary Tributary		4, 567 19, 124

"At present not a fraction of the advantage offered to the southern inland cities by navigable streams is utilized, but the day is coming when that utilization will be here, and when that day comes the streams of the South leading to the great and growing ports of the South will give the inland cities waterborne opportunities sufficient to make them leap more rapidly forward into commercial importance than in the marvelous 20 years just ending.

"WATER POWERS.

"The possibilities of the South in the terms of water power are as disproportionately large, when compared with the other two-thirds of the Union, excepting the extreme Northwest, as are those of coast-line and navigable streams. The most potent influence is the Southern Appalachian Range. heaval makes it the greatest power-producing mountain range in the East, for it lies altogether in a region of plentiful and fairly distributed rainfall. The actual figures are indeterminate. However, Secretary Wilson in a recent report places it at 5,000,000 horsepower for the six high-water months. Frank S. Washburn, the eminent hydroelectric engineer, thinks that this vast figure could be doubled by well-arranged storage basins. To give an inkling of what the development of these powers will mean, it is wise to refer to New England. That whole region has chained a little over 1,000,000 horsepower. The Southern Appalachians contain nearly ten times as much potentionally available; yet the manufactured products of New England at present equal the manufactured products of the whole South—66,000 square miles, with few raw materials, equaling the pigmy efforts of a giant spreading over 1,000,000 square miles and rich in raw materials.

"The day is coming when, through conservation impulses, this water will be used to drive the wheels of industry and of transportation throughout the South, thus indefinitely extending the life of power buried now in the coal fields of the South. If we study the statistics of the matter, we find that in no similar area of this country is there 5,000,000 horsepower so conveniently arranged, so distinctly marked, or so near to extended plains and rolling country, where factories can be easily erected and the produce of the field can be carried to the factories. The South, with a potential 10,000,000 horsepower in the Appalachian Range, has the foothills all round it full of materials above ground or underground, simply waiting for the harnessing of that great power to make those foothills on every side a tremendous electrified manufacturing area. When, furthermore, it is considered that not one horsepower has been included above for the rivers falling into the western Gulf of Mexico or those tributary to the Mississippi on the west, the commercial importance of the South in aiding to extend the life of the national coal beds will be comprehended.

"MINERALS AND FORESTS.

"The minerals of the South are worthy of serious consideration as a guide to what awaits her in development. In oil barrels she has increased since 1880 from 179,000 to 74,128,019. In sulphur she has rapidly appropriated over 98 per cent of the country's product. While in coal resources all other States of the Union are exceeded by Wyoming, North Dakota, Montana, and Colorado, the coal fields of the South are peculiarly accessible to navigable streams—a privilege denied the Western States mentioned above. The headwaters of the Ohio tap rich coal regions in West Virginia and in effect make Pennsylvania a contributor of coal to the Southern States by way of the Mississippi; the Alabama coal field, estimated to contain 68,000,000,000 tons in its 8,000 square miles, is tapped by the river system flowing by Mobile. Also, since the southward tendency of railroad construction set in, every new line has served to place southern coal fields within commercial reach of the coast,

"The coal possessions of the Southern States, according to the report of the National Conservation Commission, are stated below in millions of short tons:

"Add to coal the great iron riches of the Southern Appalachians, where ore, coal, and limestone are frequently in juxtaposition; then add to these the practical monopoly in phosphate rock, the complete monopoly in bauxite and asbestos, the leadership in fuller's earth, in manganese, in sulphur, and in some of the rarer minerals; then add to this the clays, the building and ornamental stones, and, last, the immense cement resources near to navigable streams; then there comes into sight a certain unapproachable mineral advantage given by nature to the South.

"Against minerals, which are irreplaceable, the South is still able to show ownership of 41 per cent of the remaining forest area of the United States, a gift that is replaceable under proper impulses and extensible, if used aright. The forest area has some board details; the hardwood area is largely confined to the Appalachians; a mixed area takes a huge sweep around the Appalachians; and the long-leaf yellow pine area lies in another broad belt around the Gulf of Mexico.

"TEMPERATURE AND PRECIPITATION.

"It may be safely said of warmth and precipitation that warmth without rain produces a desert; that rain without warmth produces a frozen and forbidding area. The South combines more markedly than any other third of the Union a fine growing temperature and a copious yearly rainfall. The effect is clearly seen by those who wish to see.

"If we go to the southern portion of Florida we will find tropical fruits. If we go in winter time to Florida and Texas we find northern vegetables growing for winter marketing. If we follow up the Florida coast we find celery and lettuce growing for the consumption of New York City while New York City is shivering in zero temperature. Follow the whole vast agricultural area of the South, from the Everglades of Florida and from Brownsville, Tex., up to the Mason and Dixon line, and we have to declare that for agricultural range and possibility there is no area of the United States that can vie with the Southern States. The isothermal lines, which have a very irregular range in the Southern States, produce the anomaly, in the State of Alabama for instance, of wheat growing within a hundred miles of cotton; yet wheat is the great hope of the northwestern territory of Canada. We can put it down as an incontrovertible fact that the materials for both food and raiment coming out of the ground are all produceable in the extraordinary range of climate which belongs to the Southern States.

"AGRICULTURAL LANDS.

"Though the South holds the American monopoly on cotton, her possibilities in that and all other agricultural lines have not yet been scratched. This can be plainly shown. There are 612,096,900 acres of land in the Southern States. Of these less than 25 per cent are improved, or 145,185,999 acres. The more or less shiftless agriculture of the past is being rapidly supplanted in many regions by intelligent and intensive methods. This will shortly show itself by the South ceasing to depend on western produce."

Mr. Finley, president of the Southern Railway Co., recently contributed an interesting and instructive comparative statement as to the growth of manufactures and railroads in the South, Hear what he says:

"Between 1880 and 1905 the total volume of the products of manufacture in the States south of the Ohio and Potomac and east of the Mississippi increased from $287,110,628 to $1,135,468,795, or 295 per cent. The increase was really considerably greater than is indicated by these figures, for the reason that the census of manufactures of 1905 included only those conducted on the factory system and omitted small establishments and what are classed by the Census Bureau as 'neighborhood industries,' which were included in 1880.

"This increase in manufacturing has embraced a large variety of industries, but it has naturally been greatest in those industries drawing their raw materials from the South. Thus, in 1880 there were only 561,360 cotton spindles in the South, and in 1908 there were 10,200,903, an increase of 1,717 per cent. In 1880 southern cotton mills used only 188,748 bales of cotton, and in 1908 they used 2,187,096 bales, an increase of 1,058 per cent. From practically nothing in 1880 the cottonseed-crushing industry of the South has grown until, in 1907, it crushed 3,843,981 tons of seed, producing 175,724,840 gallons of oil and 1,785,804 tons of cake and meal. Pig-iron production in the Southeastern States increased from 335,864 tons in 1880 to 3,033,388 tons in 1907, or 803 per cent. Coke production increased from 372,436 tons to 9,289,471 tons, or 2,394 per cent. Coal production increased from 3,793,308 tons to 84,978,700 tons, or 2,140 per cent, and the lumber cut increased from 2,652,015,000 feet to 11,899,984,000 feet, or 348 per cent.

"While this great industrial advance has taken place southern agriculture has not stood still. Leaving out of account the enormous increase in agricultural production in the newly settled regions west of the Mississippi River, in the States east of that stream cotton production increased from 3,816,250 bales in 1880 to 7,444,805 bales in 1908, or 95 per cent, and corn production increased from 331,105,000 bushels in 1880 to 452,324,000 bushels in 1908, or 46 per cent. This same period has witnessed a large increase in the production of fruits and vegetables in the Southern States, both for northern markets and for local use.

"Both southern agriculture and southern manufacturing have had their greatest development in the production of commodities in demand in other parts of the United States and in other countries. Such development is possible only when means exist for carrying products which can not be consumed locally to markets where they are in demand. Therefore, as an in-evitable consequence of the very large industrial development and the considerable increase in agricultural production, the railways of the South have been called upon to transport a rapidly increasing volume of traffic. In 1880, according to Poor's Manual, there were 14,817 miles of railway in States south of the Ohio and Potomac and east of the Mississippi. In 1890 there were in this territory 24,535 miles, and in 1907, 39,068 miles, showing an increase of 164 per cent over 1880 and 59 per cent over 1890. In 1890 there were less than 30 miles of double-track railway in all this territory. In 1907 there were 1,321 miles of double track, and the total mileage of operated tracks, including single tracks, second tracks, yard tracks, sidings, and spurs, increased from 27,830 miles in 1890 to 50,533 miles in 1907. The number of locomotives increased from 3,310 in 1890 to 7,400 in 1907, or 123 per cent, and the number of cars of all classes in service increased from 109,669 to 293,230, or 167 per cent. This increase in the number of locomotives and cars has been accompanied by a very considerable increase in the average tractive power of locomotives and in the average carrying capacity of freight cars.

"Southern agricultural and industrial growth will continue largely along the line of the greatest development in the pastthat of producing commodities in demand in other regions. Cotton has not only been the most important agricultural product of the South, but it is the foundation of two great and growing southern manufacturing industries—the cotton-textile industry and the cottonseed-crushing industry. The limit of cotton production has not nearly been reached even in the older States east of the Mississippi. As the world demand for cotton textiles and cottonseed products increases the South will meet it with a larger production, due not only to bringing additional land under cultivation, but also to an increased average yield per acre, brought about by more intensive farming and scientific crop rotation. The cotton mills of other lands and of other sections of the United States will continue to draw on the southern crop, but, as a result of the economic force tending to draw the industry to proximity to its source of raw material, we may expect the multiplication of spindles and looms to proceed more rapidly in the cotton-growing States than elsewhere. The rate at which the cotton mill is being drawn to the cotton field is shown by the fact that, while in 1880 the consumption of the mills in the cotton States equaled only 3.28 per cent of the crop of 5,755,359 bales grown in that year, in 1908 it equaled 15.62 per cent of the crop of 13,697,310 bales grown in that year. Cottonseed crushing will continue to be distinctively a southern industry, and its growth will keep pace with the growth of cotton production."

From the Manufacturers Record we gather the following facts as to the general increase in all branches of commerce and industry between the years 1880 and 1907-8 in the Southern States:

"Value of property has increased from $7,505,000,000 to Production of petroleum has increased from 179,000 barrels in 1880 to 27,239,057 barrels in 1907; increase of 27,060,057 barrels, or 15,118 per cent. Phosphate mined has increased from 190,763 tons in 1880 to 2,253,198 tons in 1907; increase 2,062,435 tons, or 1,081 per cent. Railroads have increased in mileage from 20,612 miles in 1880 to 67,181 miles in 1908, an increase of 20,012 lines in 1830 to 0,161 lines in 1830, an increase of 46,596 miles, or 221 per cent. Aggregate resources of national banks have increased from $171,464,172 in 1880 to $1,100,117,838 in 1908; increase of $928,653,663, or 541 per cent. Capital of national banks has increased from $46,688,930 in 1880 to $162,558,230 in 1908, an increase of $115,869,300, or 248 per cent."

Selecting from the statistical data contained in these reviews of the South's resources, the items of wealth which must be organized and managed with skill and efficiency, let us consider the iron ore, the coal, the cotton, the corn, the wheat, the lumber, the tobacco, and ascertain, if we can, the business agencies and industrial instrumentalities which have been created for the purpose of developing and caring for these products in a thorough and systematic fashion.

In the first place, take the industrial and manufacturing corporations, such as mining, lumber, and coke companies; rolling mills, foundries, and machine shops; sawmills; flour, woolen, cotton, and other mills; manufacturers of cars, automobiles, elevators, agricultural implements, and of other articles manufactured wholly or in part from metal, wood, or other material; manufacturers and refiners of sugar, molasses, sirups, and other products; ice and refrigerator companies; slaughterhouses, tanning, packing, and canning companies—these have been organized for the purpose of bringing forth, manufacturing, and marketing the raw wealth of the South, and in them is locked up a very great measure of the wealth of the South. Of this class of corporations, which have a net income in excess of $5,000 a year, there are in each of the Southern States the following:

States.	Num- ber.	Aggregate capi- tal stock.	Bonded indebt- edness.	Net income.

In the second place, let us consider those corporations created and conducted for the purpose of transporting the raw material and the manufactured article, such as railroads, steamboat, ferryboat, and stage line companies; pipe line, gas, and electric light companies; transportation and storage companies; telegraph and telephone companies. These corporations represent the next step in the progress of development, and of these the Southern States have the following in number, capitalization, bonded indebtedness, and net income:

In the third place, let us take these corporations which are organized and conducted for the purpose of furnishing the money, and conveniently and promptly transacting the essentially financial business of the South's development. Of these the Southern States have in number, capitalization, bonded indebtedness, and net income, the following:

States.	Num- ber.	Capital stock.	Bonded in- debtedness.	Net income.
Alabama	235	$20,586,278.50	$1,339,830.16	$2,449,169.88

In the fourth place, let us take these corporations devoted almost wholly to the marketing of the finished products, such as mercantile corporations, including all dealers in coal, lumber, grain, produce, and all goods, wares, and merchandise. In the fifth place, let us take those corporations of a miscellaneous character which the growth of the South and the various steps in the progress of that growth has called into existence, such as architects, contractors, hotels, and theaters. Of these the South, according to States, has the following in number, capitalization, bonded indebtedness, and net income:

Finally, let us take all of the corporations, of all classes, for each of the Southern States, and ascertain the number in each State, the aggregate capital stock, the bonded and other indebtedness, and the net income. These are shown in the following statement:

With these tables we are able to definitely determine and classify those corporate agencies which are engaged in transforming the raw wealth of the South; those corporations which are engaged in transporting this wealth; those corporations which are necessary in financing this wealth; and the aggregate number, capital, bonded indebtedness, and net income of all these corporations. These are the agencies and instrumentalities which human ingenuity has found necessary and convenient for doing the business and promoting the industrial growth of the Southern States; and more and more, as time goes on and the wealth of the Southern States becomes necessary to the welfare of the human race, will these agencies and instrumentalities be employed and increased to meet that necessity.

On account of these corporate agencies and instrumentalities, and combinations of them, there has been much political discussion, much legislative enactment, many judicial decisions, and a vast amount of popular agitation. Some of our public men have contented themselves with a blind and unenlightened attack upon corporations generally. While these attacks have been useful to these men in furthering their political advancement, they have not been, nor will they be, sufficient to take out of the hands of southern industry the right use of these indestructible and indispensable agencies of development.

A great many people do not understand what a corporation is. They do not understand why it is created. They have never thoroughly comprehended its usefulness, its convenience, or its efficiency; and it is to the uninformed prejudices of this class of people that some of our public men appeal in order to advance their own political fortunes. I venture to say that some of the public men themselves have never really understood the advantage of an efficient and well-organized corporation. It does seem to me that the time has come when intelligent men should no longer allow themselves to be misled and, if I may say so, fooled into the belief that they should maintain a hostile attitude toward corporate development.

What is this thing called a corporation which has inspired so many with fear? Which arouses in so many a prejudice? Which has furnished to many others an object of indiscriminate and wholesale attack? What is there about it which brings men connected with it into disrepute? Why is it that corporations are continually characterized as unpatriotic institutions; and the men who conduct them as men not measuring up to the highest standard of citizenship? Why have we heard so much in politics of this corporate monster? Why do members of the bar find themselves excluded from public consideration because they are or have been attorneys for corporations?

This device known as a corporation is, after all, the division of a given amount of wealth into shares which may be purchased by men wishing to become shareholders, and who, according to the number of shares held by them, shall have a voice in the selection of a few well-qualified shareholders to conduct the business in which the corporation is engaged. It has the advantage of having a corporate existence. It has the advantage of assembling the most experienced and intelligent men to direct its affairs and shoulder its responsibilities. It has the advantage of gathering to itself a little of the wealth of a great number of men, without embarrassment to them, and which enables it by reason of the total sum thus gathered to do big things. It has the advantage of being able to distribute, in shares, the value of a property or plant or an enterprise infinitely. It has the advantage which comes with concentration, economy of organization, and the combination of the wealth of many. It represents the cooperative enlightenment of modern business. It stands for the collective energy, intelligence, and wealth of modern industry. It is the most flexible, resourceful, convenient, and effective instrument yet devised by the wit of man to bring forth, manufacture, transport, and market the raw wealth of the earth. It has been universally adopted by the human race in all civilized countries. It finds its highest example in the structure of human government. It has its charter, which stands for its fundamental constitution. It has its by-laws, which govern its conduct. It has its directors, who discharge the representative trust reposed in them by the share-It has its shareholders in whom its ultimate sovereignty is vested; and it has in its treasury the combined contributions from the wealth of those who own it. It has brains in its board; foresight and daring in its officers; loyalty and support in its stockholders; and adequate means in its treasury to employ the training and skill necessary to make any industry in which it engages a success. In its final and last analysis it represents perfect organization, complete union, concerted action, trained intelligence, and a capital which reasonable and judicious venture can not strain.

This, my friends, is the agency or device which I have pointed out to you occupies so large a place even in the agricultural South. With it your railroads were developed, your factories builded, your banks and trust companies organized. With it the whole wondrous mechanism of your modern civilization is operated. And yet see how little the South after all has made use of it. Consider for a moment how backward the South has been in using this intelligent medium of development. Reflect upon the hostility which has been cultivated in the Southern States toward this intelligent agency.

The total net income from all of the corporations in all of

The total net income from all of the corporations in all of the Southern States was, in round numbers, $350,000,000 for the last year; and yet in the State of Illinois alone the net income of all its corporations for the last year was $337,000,000; Ohio, $222,000,000; Pennsylvania, $424,000,000; New York, $689,000,000; Minnesota, $127,000,000; Massachusetts, $158,000,000; and Michigan, $91,000,000.

There are 270,202 corporations in the United States whose income is in excess of $5,000 annually. These have an aggregate capital stock of $57,886,430,519.04, a bonded and other indebtedness of $30,717,336,008.84, and an aggregate net income of $3,360,250,642.65. Allowing for inflated capitalization, which we all know exists, let us consider the character of this colossal wealth.

It is corporate. It is distributed in shares, and as such it is the surest guaranty of the inviolability of the right of private property. Look at it from an even broader standpoint and consider it in connection with the nations of the earth. It means the ownership of American values in other countries, and it means the ownership by Americans of the values of other countries. Our bonds and stocks are in English, French, and German markets and are owned by the citizens and subjects of those countries. The bonds and stocks of other countries are in our markets and are owned by our citizens. All of this is distinctly collective ownership. It tends strongly and inevitably to unite in an inseparable industrial alliance and to bring into common interest the welfare of the nations made interdependent by this class of ownership. I had almost said that it was upon this silent and resistless knitting together of the interests of the human race we can rely more than upon arbitration for the peace of the world.

What are the other kinds of wealth in our country? How do we judge of this wealth? How do we estimate the thrift and enterprise of the people of our country? Over against this corporate wealth, over against this collective and colossal empire of property, let us set off that distinctly individualistic ownership, that naked individualism for which agriculture stands. The estimated value of farm products for the year 1911 is $8,417,000,000. This is the gross value of farm products, without subtracting the cost of production. No estimate has been made of the cost of this production, but I dare say if we subtract it from the gross figure, $8,417,000,000, it would bring the value of farm products not very far from the figure $3,360,250,642.65, which was the net income of corporate or collective property. The estimated value of the corn crop is $1,700,000,000 for the year 1911. The estimated value of the cotton crop is $775,000,000. The estimated value of the hay crop is $700,000,000. The estimated value of the wheat crop is $600,000,000. The estimated value of the oats crop is $380,000,000. The estimated value of the potato crop is $213,000,000. And yet, only two of these, corn and cotton, exceed the net income of all the corporations in one State, the State of New York, which was $689,000,000 in round numbers.

The corn crop, which as a wealth producer is practically equal to the combined values of the cotton, wheat, and oats crops, is $1,700,000,000 in value; and yet the net income of the corporations of Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and New York together equal $1,672,000,000, or practically these four States yield in the net income of their corporations as much as the great wealth-producing crop of the Nation.

Thus we have, on the one hand, the great collective ownership of property represented by these 270,000 corporate agencies; and, on the other hand, the distinctly individualistic ownership of the farm represented by this gross income of $8,417,000,000. Each of these classes of property, each of these fields of human activity, are necessary to the growth, the welfare, and the continued prosperity of our country. As the ownership and use of all property must be, in an orderly government, regulated by law, we are confronted with the questions, What shall be the attitude of the Government toward these two distinct classes of property? How shall we regulate and govern the use of these sources of wealth in the hands of the individual citizens? How shall we prevent the abuse of ownership?

As to the use of the agricultural lands and the disposition of agricultural products, the problem seems simple. The farmer buys his farm, obtains title, tills the soil, pays his taxes, and in an uncomplicated fashion produces his wealth. If every man in the country were engaged in agriculture, our laws would be less in volume and our Government would be less perplexed with problems. The really difficult question which engages and will continue to engage the attention of those in authority is the question of how to preserve centralized industry, which is represented in the great corporate development of the country, and at the same time insure industrial liberty. In order to thoroughly understand and correctly solve this problem it must be approached without prejudice, without passion, without bias; and as I look out over this great southern territory, made up of 13 States whose bosoms are fertile with unused wealth and whose future is rich with the prospect of industrial and business development, I know of no section of our great country which needs to summon its intelligence, its courage, and its common sense more than do the people of the South.

In a distinctly material and commercial era the energy and ability of our strongest men is devoted to the getting of wealth. More than in any other period of the world's history we have cultivated and enlarged the creative faculties of our race. It can not be that simple greed is the single impulse which drives the brains and hands of men to the great tasks which they have undertaken. It can not be that the mere love of ownership, the naked lust of gain, is the sole inspiration underneath the great work which men have set themselves to do. It must be that the creative instinct, the constructive genius bidden by the inviting resources of a great country and stimulated by the competitive struggle, has raised the sordid mind above the level of glutted greed and set in its very center an ambition lofty enough to hope for the betterment of mankind as a whole.

In order to afford the fullest freedom to the people of our country to create wealth and acquire property we have established and maintained economic liberty—that is, the right to work, to invent, to plan, to acquire, to own, and, finally, to have dominion over property. We have said to the individual: "If you transfuse your blood, brain, and muscle into a thing called property, you shall become its owner, and shall enjoy and use that ownership for your comfort and happiness."

So long as this was done by the individual by his individual labor and ability, we did not need, and hence did not make, many laws to regulate his ownership and control of property. He could keep what he had earned and the range of his economic liberty was almost unlimited. But when the corporate charter came into general use and men about to engage in business enterprises clothed these enterprises with these charters, the State, because it had, acting for the people, granted the privileges which the charter conferred, was required to take and hold supervision of these corporate enterprises; and it was just here that corporate development became involved in the first instance in the politics of the country. While the corporate enterprise remained wholly within a single State, its regulation and control was exclusively in the hands of the State government, for the domestic sovereignty of the State was designed to deal with it and all domestic concerns. distinctly State problem it presented the questions of capitalization, private monopoly, and taxation, and in public-service corporations the additional questions of eminent domain, freight and passenger rates, and all of the features common to the regulation of railroads.

As these new and intricate corporate agencies were introduced into new States, they were challenged at each step in their progress by the public, and the hostility to their use and adoption found its effective expression in many crude and ill-considered statutes which, instead of being directed toward a rational supervision of them, were designed to indiscriminately "In 1889 Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Missouri, outlaw them. Nebraska, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and the Territories of Idaho, Montana, and North Dakota passed antitrust laws; and the new States of Washington and Wyoming introduced similar provisions into their constitutions. In 1891 Kentucky and Missouri introduced antitrust provisions into their constitutons and Alabama, Illinois, Minnesota, and the Territory of New Mexico enacted similar laws. New York and Wisconsin followed in 1892; and in 1893 California forbade combi-nations in live stock and Nebraska forbade combinations in coal Thirty States and 2 Territories subsequently passed such laws, and in 17 States antitrust provisions were inserted in the State constitution." Notwithstanding these Notwithstanding these States enjoyed to the full the authority of the common law. which for hundreds of years had denounced monopolies, and notwithstanding the fact that their development imperatively called for the employment of centralized capital in convenient corporate form, these States, in order to translate their rage and resentment into an offensive weapon, went far beyond the principles defined and settled by common law and enacted statutes drastic in character, antagonistic in temper, and in many instances, so largely the product of political wrath rather than the result of wise deliberation, wholly or partially unconstitutional

In 21 States it was made criminal for two or more persons to enter into any agreement, reasonable or unreasonable, which prevented competition in production or sale. "In 17 States it was made criminal conspiracy for two persons to agree to regulate the quantity or the price of any article to be manufactured, mined, produced, or sold, regardless of whether prices were raised or lowered. In 16 States it was criminal for two or more persons to attempt to monopolize any commodity. In Missouri it was criminal conspiracy to maintain a trust, pool, combine, agreement, confederation, or understanding to regulate prices or to fix the premium for fire insurance. In Mississippi it was criminal conspiracy not only to regulate prices but also for two or more persons to settle the price of an article between themselves, or between themselves and others."

There were 3 States, West Virginia, Delaware, and New Jersey, which kept open the door which had been closed by the other States. A corporate franchise can not be forfeited except in the State where the charter is granted, and then only when the laws of that particular State are violated; and as West Virginia, Delaware, and New Jersey passed no antitrust laws, they could and did grant almost all of the charters to all sorts of enterprises which, when incorporated, proceeded into other States to do business at will. Thus, the States which had enacted the most prohibitive laws against all conceivable forms of agreements and arrangements found themselves invaded by alien concerns which they were powerless to attack or dissolve.

The legislation which had been enacted in all but 3 of the States was the result, in my opinion, of a failure to carefully study and fully understand the substantial welfare of these States. To be sure, it was just and proper to safeguard the consumer against those restraints of trade which the history of the common law had shown were against their interest. But how much more sensible and effective it would have been to have resorted to the common law for protection than to have cluttered up the statutes with this unseasoned assortment of political legislation. How much more statesmanlike it would have been to have looked the problem squarely in the face and to have realized that modern civilization had taken hold of these industrial and business agencies with which to work out the development of the country and to have exercised a cool and discriminating judgment in the rejection of these agencies, instead of stirring the passions of the people until they grew into prejudices, and clinging to these prejudices until they were enacted into laws. The very fact that these States did not content themselves with the ample remedies afforded by the common law, but rushed into crusades against corporate business which eventuated in these unreasonable statutes indicates that in each State the question had been made a political one and leaders were driven, by the storm which they had raised, to do foolish and extreme things.

No one will ever be able to estimate the damage done to the growth of these States nor the extent of the restraint imposed on the prosperity of their people by the unthinking prejudices which wrote these laws upon their books and fixed these policies in their creed.

In 1890 the Federal Congress, under the constitutional authority to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, enacted what has become generally known as the Sherman antitrust law.

It may be assumed that one of the controlling reasons for the assertion by the Federal Government of its unused powers conferred by the Constitution was the fact that three States continued to grant charters and suffer combinations which all of the other States were powerless to prevent and without ability to control, and that as these concerns were crossing and recrossing the lines of interstate commerce it was thought expedient and necessary to draw a line around the field of this interstate commerce and set up a standard to which every interstate concern should finally conform.

Another and more general reason is to be found in the fact that the close knitting together of the whole country by the countless threads of communication had drawn the commerce of the States out into that field located between the States, and the activity and volume of this commerce called into exercise those long-dormant powers lodged in the Federal Constitution. However much or little these two reasons contributed, it is undoubtedly true that the immediate, acute, and irritating cause of the enactment of the Sherman law was the fact that concerns doing interstate business, and hence not wholly within reach of the corrective remedies wielded by a single State, had entered into and were continuing to enter into secret agreements to control the output, advance the prices, and lower the quality of their products. The ungoverned and unguarded field of interstate commerce furnished an unmolested territory, where these hurtful and antisocial practices could be indulged without fear.

The Sherman law was the result of much interesting and instructive debate, followed by practically unanimous vote, and for these reasons alone should not be inconsiderately condemned. Furthermore, it has been touched upon and reviewed in as many as 100 opinions of the courts of our country in a serious effort to make its meaning clear and its provisions effective.

Let us see what it says:

"Section 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

"Sec. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize, any part of the trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the

The effect of the enactment of this statute was not plain to be seen until the opinion of Mr. Justice Peckham in the Trans-Missouri Freight Association case was handed down in 1897. From 1890 until 1897 nothing occurred either in or out of court to indicate what the attitude of the Government would be in regard to its enforcement nor to what extent its enforcement would affect the then organized industrial and business affairs of the country.

The decision in the Trans-Missouri Freight Association case in 1897 directed the attention of all business and industry to the fact that pooling arrangements and loose agreements between concerns in restraint of trade, whether reasonable or unreasonable, were unlawful. The effect of this decision upon the course of development in business and industry was most unexpected.

The Sherman law was entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies." Its first effective enforcement resulted in a united effort on the part of those engaged in business and commerce to do the very thing which it had been designed to prevent. It had been supposed that this act of Congress would strike asunder the vicious agreements in restraint of trade and restore, at least, the competitive contest between the large concerns engaged in business and industry. It was no doubt intended to make impossible all of the agencies, devices, and subterfuges by which competition was being eliminated from our business and industrial life.

Just as soon as those engaged in business realized the effect of the decision of the court in the Trans-Missouri Freight Association case, and that it construed the Sherman antitrust law to prohibit every agreement, contract, trust, or combination in restraint of trade, and that there could be no arrangement of any character between competing companies, they adopted one of two courses. Either they procured the organization of "holding" companies, to which they transferred the stock of the competing companies and in turn received a proportionate amount of the stock of the holding company and thus consolidated into one great enterprise any number of smaller enterprises; or they procured the organization of a huge corporation, with capital sufficient to embrace the combined capital of any number of competing concerns, then dissolved and wound up the constituent companies and transferred the physical properties to the newly organized concern. In either case the result was the same, for we witness then the coming of those stupendous corporations whose dominance has alternately been the wonder and apprehension of this great corporate era.

Prior to 1897 there were not more than 60 concerns that were dominant in their respective trades. Within the three succeeding years 183 corporations dominant in their respective trades were organized. In the year 1899 alone 79 of these, with a total capitalization of $4,000,000,000, were organized. It has been estimated that these enormous combinations comprise oneseventh of the manufacturing industry of the United States, one-twentieth of the total wealth of the Nation, nearly twice the amount of money in circulation in the country, and more than four times the capitalization of all the manufacturing consolidations that were organized between 1860 and 1893. From 1897 and throughout the years following, until 1904, the country came to recognize and adopt the method of holding companies and huge corporations; and these were treated, tacitly, at all events, as compliance with the Sherman antitrust law. Not until 1904, when the Northern Securities case was decided, was there a general, if not universal, revival of the antitrust cru-sade. The decision in that case marked the second epoch in the history of the Sherman antitrust law and its enforcement, and set on foot the prosecutions which from time to time have been conducted by the Government.

If the Sherman antitrust law as it has been finally interpreted by the Supreme Court had from the beginning been strictly enforced and the policy of the Nation firmly established, one of two things would have resulted. Either industry and business would have taken on some new and competitive form or the Sherman law would have been amended or supplemented. In any event, the tumult resulting from this interpretation and enforcement would have less of a nation's industrial structure to disturb and less of a nation's habits to change.

When the Government, either because of its failure or refusal to enforce the law, had from 1897 to 1904 openly allowed the formation of holding companies and the creation of huge corporations, in which untold wealth was invested and to which incalculable interests had become attached, it was natural that the whole country should view with apprehension the sudden and drastic enforcement of the Sherman law.

The country waited with obvious impatience the final decisions of the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases. The Standard Oil opinion was delivered on May 15, 1911, and around this has revolved all industrial discussion since that time. The whole country, with patriotic unanimity and with a fine regard for the preeminence of that great court, has accepted its last word as law; but the economic condition resulting from that interpretation is one which the country is struggling with as it never struggled before.

We have seen what the effect of the decision in the Trans-Missouri Freight Association case in 1897 was upon the industrial and business development of the country. We have observed how an inactive Government, from 1897 to 1904, permitted the country to come to the conclusion that huge industrial and business holding companies were legitimate agencies for the development and conduct of business generally. Let us now examine, as far as we are able to do so, the legal effect of the decisions in the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases; and this can perhaps be better stated by reference to the opinion of Mr. Justice White, in which he declares the conclusive meaning of the Sherman Act, as follows:

"In view of the common law and the law in this country as to restraint of trade, which we have reviewed, and the illuminating effect which that history must have under the rule to which we have referred, we think it results:

"(a) That the context manifests that the statute was drawn

"(a) That the context manifests that the statute was drawn in the light of the existing practical conception of the law of restraint of trade, because it groups as within that class not only contracts which were in restraint of trade in the subjective sense, but all contracts or acts which theoretically were attempts to monopolize, yet which in practice had come to be considered as in restraint of trade in a broad sense.

"(b) That in view of the many new forms of contracts and combinations which were being evolved from existing economic conditions it was deemed essential by an all-embracing enumeration to make sure that no form of contract or combination by which an undue restraint of interstate or foreign commerce was brought about could save such restraint from condemnation. The statute under this view evidences the intent not to restrain the right to make and enforce contracts, whether resulting from combinations or otherwise, which did not unduly restrain interstate or foreign commerce, but to protect that commerce from being restrained by methods, whether old or new, which would constitute an interference that is an undue restraint.

"(e) And as the contracts or acts embracec in the provision were not expressly defined, since the enumeration addressed itself simply to classes of acts, those classes being broad enough to embrace every conceivable contract or combination which could be made concerning trade or commerce or the subjects of such commerce, and thus caused any act done by any of the enumerated methods anywhere in the whole field of human activity to be illegal if in restraint of trade, it inevitably follows that the provision necessarily called for the exercise of judgment which required that some standard should be resorted to for the purpose of determining whether the prohibitions contained in the statute had or had not in any given case been Thus, not specifying but indubitably contemplating and requiring a standard, it follows that it was intended that the standard of reason which had been applied at the common law and in this country in dealing with subjects of the character embraced by the statute was intended to be the measure used for the purpose of determining whether in a given case a particular act had or had not brought about the wrong against which the statute provided."

In other words, the first section denounces "combinations, contracts, conspiracies, etc.," not of a particular class, but of a general character; and whether or not they are unlawful can only be determined by accurately foretelling their ultimate effect on trade. It does not denounce contracts or agreements which do or attempt to do some specific thing, but it denounces contracts and agreements whose effect is general and well-nigh country-wide; so that a violation of the first section does not depend upon (1) the intent of the person doing the act, nor (2) upon the knowledge of the person doing the act, nor (3) upon the motive of the person doing the act. But it depends upon whether the person making the contract is able to survey the whole field of interstate trade and to calculate with accuracy the final effect of his contract, and this final effect, which he must be able to foresee, must be so precisely foreseen and estimated as to enable him to say whether the effect is reasonable or unreasonable, due or undue, direct or indirect.

Having done this, he is not yet finished. He must make the concluding and all-important calculation as to whether his two estimates, to wit, the general effect of his contract on trade, and whether that effect is reasonable or unreasonable, will coincide with the opinion of the court before which his contract is to be construed.

The second section abandons all effort at classification and, as construed, declares in effect that if any person does anything whatsoever which would result in the same thing that the acts denounced in the first section do result in he has violated the law. So that a person capable of the foresightedness demanded by the first section, having dismissed that section from his mind and honestly endeavoring to meet the requirements of the second section, is confronted with this problem: That anything which he may do, although no mention is made in the second section of the kind, quality, character, or extent of the thing he may be doing, which is afterwards held to be an attempt to monopolize any part of trade or commerce, is an unlawful act and subjects him to punishment. The law in the first section, as construed, does not declare what sort of contracts are to be considered as in restraint of trade. It does not declare what, in the mind of the lawmaker, would amount to a restraint of trade. The lawmaker has no idea himself as to what should be deemed a contract in restraint of trade. But he leaves it to the man making the contract to judge for himself as to whether it is in restraint of trade, and to judge at his peril. All that the Supreme Court has accomplished is to require the person making the contract to go one step farther and ascertain whether the effect of his contract upon trade is reasonable or unreasonable restraint.

Having to some extent ascertained the strictly legal effect of this decision in the Standard Oil case, let us inquire just what has been the general effect of the decision upon the business of the country.

For a time at least, even if not at the present time, the distinctly business section of the country stood still in a state of uncertainty and doubt; those concerns already organized in many instances fearful of prosecution; those which were in contemplation, arrested lest they should transgress the law. The immediate bewildering consequence was that a dense fog of uncertainty settled down upon and completely enveloped American enterprise. This condition resulted in much discussion and many proposals of remedies.

When the result of the dissolution of the Standard Oil Co. and the Tobacco Co. had finally been worked out and the country came to understand, as fully as it could understand, the complicated readjustment which took place in the affairs of each of these companies, the weight somewhat shifted to the other foot. The leaders of radical thought in the country and those most extreme in their desires to restrain and repress the organization of large industrial units suddenly took alarm. Their view was, in homely speech, that "the mountain had labored and brought forth a mouse," and they began to bitterly complain of the ineffective and impotent machinery of the Sherman law, so that to-day we have two distinct antagonistic classes of public opinion in regard to the wisdom and efficiency of the Sherman law as enforced. One class rather leans to the opinion that if its worst is no worse than the result in the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases, then its worst can be endured. The other class maintains that if its best and highest efficiency is exemplified in the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases, then at its maximum enforcement it is impotent and inadequate. In fact, organized business generally, while welcoming a short period of peace, lives in dread of the future, organized politics stands confused in front of the problem, and organized labor inces-santly demands the amendment of the Sherman antitrust law. Neither the radical nor the conservative in politics is satisfied with it. Neither organized labor nor organized capital approves it.

With the question in this unsatisfactory condition and the public mind in this unsettled state, and the welfare of our country vitally interested in the right and just settlement of the problem, we are confronted with the specific question as to what step should be taken by the legislative branch of the Government to bring about its solution. What we stand in need of, what we most desire, is not felicitous phrases, incisive epigrams, or turgid editorials, but a clear pointing out of the steps which can be taken and which should be taken, which will be effective in reaching a right solution. As one individual, I shall proceed to point out to you what I think should be done and leave it to you to take the suggestions for what they are worth.

The question is one which reaches down through the very vitals of business and commerce to the foundation of the country's prosperity, and its remotest influence finds its way to the very farthest end of the detail of the lives of our people. The thoughtless disturbance of this great and extensive fabric sends a tremor of uncertainty and fear far down to the very ends of human interest and employment. No one man knows enough to know the full and final influence of a change in the established policy of dealing with these concerns. There is no such organized difference of opinion between the political parties as would require the settlement of this question either properly or necessarily as a political adjustment. There is no line of cleavage between political parties upon this industrial question, either as to what the end desired is or the means adequate to reach that end. It is of the utmost importance that the question as a whole should be cut clean loose from the agitation and uncertainties of politics and dealt with upon the bare questions of Therefore it is my opinion that the legislative intrinsic merit. branch of the Federal Government, in whose hands the question is exclusively lodged, should create a joint body of the Senate and the House for the purpose of considering the whole question.

This committee should be created without regard to the political affiliations of its members. This would provide a rational, constitutional method of treating the question. The committee should take counsel and advice of organized capital and organized labor. It should consult the interest of every class of citizens, and should ascertain, as far as possible, the effect of legislation upon each class. It should inquire into the experience of other countries in dealing with industrial growth and corporate development, study the measures adopted by these countries, analyze the results of these measures, and profit, as far as possible, by their experience. Its sole aim and object should be sound legislation. This committee should examine carefully all of the judicial interpretations of the various courts of our country of the Sherman law, in order to fully understand its judicial history and its judicial growth. The committee should carefully analyze the result of the enforcement of the law, particularly the result as illustrated in the reorganization in the Standard Oil and Tobacco Co. casesthis with a view of determining whether its enforcement has cured the evils denounced by the Supreme Court in its opinion.

The selection of such a committee would concentrate the energy and ability of the legislative branch of the Government upon the solution of this problem. It would focus the attention of the whole country upon the committee and its work and reduce under its impartial and judicial inquiry the agitation of this country to orderly and constitutional treatment.

This committee could draw a line around the field of interstate commerce and consider, first, under what terms and conditions concerns desiring to do interstate business should enter this field, whether by Federal license, Federal incorporation. Federal registration, or Federal certification; second, just how elaborate and exacting these terms and conditions should be: third, this committee could consider what laws should be enacted to govern concerns in this field of interstate commerce after they had complied with the terms and conditions of their entry; fourth, the committee could consider the manner in which an offending concern should be excluded from the field of interstate commerce and devise an orderly and constitutional method by which the concern condemned in the eyes of the law should be excluded from this field and wound up.

In fact, such a committee, giving its time, industry, and intelligence to the solution of this problem, would insure order in the place of chaos, impartiality in the place of partisan appeal, and judicial temper in the place of political rancor.

If you should ask me what I, as an individual, think would be a solution of the question, I can give you a general indication of my views, conscious that they fall short of a complete remedy and anxious that they shall be considered only as a suggestive contribution rather than a perfected program.

The real vice in the treatment of the whole problem heretofore has been the attempt to legislate solely against the result or effect of a series of acts instead of specifically defining and prohibiting these acts. In an effort to prevent and punish confessedly conspicuous evils we have set all business groping and feeling about with uncertain step, like a man in the dark. first realize that competition is a final law of all life, but that it is a growth, just as cooperation is a growth; that it is the law of trade and barter and not the law of statutes; that no government ever had roots so deep or standards so high as to be able to enforce compulsory competition any more than the mightlest man is able to make the right hand the earnest competitor of the left. It will always exist at one time or another, but it can not be legislated into commerce any more than it can be legislated out of commerce. To be exact, it is not competition which we seek to maintain, but the unhindered right to compete. We do not make men go into business to compete with others. We maintain just laws so that if a man chooses to go into business and has the efficiency to win in the contest he shall not be molested in his pursuit. Competition is not a concrete and stationary thing to be preserved. It is an ebbing and flowing tide of industrial life which may run high upon the shores in one period and ebb into the middle of the sea in another.

To change the figure, it may be strangled to death by superior strength unjustly used. It is an ever-changing, ever-diminishing, ever-enlarging condition of industry. It is a state of industrial liberty and economic freedom. It must be free, but not by coddling the inefficient or holding everyone back for the laggard. It is bound to mean a reduction in the number of competitors and not a permanent appropriation of the thing competed for. In the hard struggle of industry and business life there must be an elimination of those who are unable to endure it, but this elimination should be solely upon the inability of those eliminated to survive an honest contest waged under the most enlightened rules of business warfare.

When corporations found that it was necessary and profitable to combine, and either turned themselves over to a holding agency or dissolved and united in one huge corporation, they did it in order to economize in the expense of administration and to enable them to control prices. Whatever the purpose was, the effect in many cases was to give the holding company or the huge corporation the monopoly of the business in which it was engaged. We were confronted then, and we are confronted now, with the question as to how we should deal with the monopoly, and it is by no means an easy task.

In many of our constitutions and most of our laws we have forbidden the creation of monopolies by the Government; that is, we have said that no concern should be granted the exclusive right to do a particular kind of business, and, except in the case of allowing exclusive patent rights, we do not grant such rights. But the withholding of such grants by the Government has not prevented monopoly.

We have monopolies which have been created by individual ingenuity and effort, and it is this individual ingenuity and effort with which the Government must deal in attempting to prevent or regulate monopoly.

There are monopolies which have been built up by unfair practices employed against competitors, such as the getting of rebates; the use of large amounts of capital to starve out the competitor; the selling below cost to drive a less resourceful competitor out of business; the getting control of the sources of supply of necessary raw material, so that no competitor could get it except at prices which would bankrupt him; the advantages of high tariff, so that no similar article could be brought from abroad.

Then there is the monopoly which is created in the first instance by the promoter who collects a large sum for the work of putting several or many concerns into one, and this is made possible by the hope of the different owners that they will add to the value of what they have the combination value, and that they will get a larger dividend without the great cost and trouble of maintaining several establishments. This monopoly also offers the attraction of speculation, which to many is a great temptation.

Now, these two classes of monopoly are abnormal and result from the desire of a few people, by fair means or foul, to take a short cut to getting money. They do not represent the effi-ciency of combination nor do they promise any benefit to the

There is still another and third kind of monopoly which presents a much more difficult problem and which must not be confused with the first-mentioned two classes. This kind of monopoly is the result of intelligent organization, skillful combination, and proven efficiency. There can be no doubt that organization when intelligent and systematic, combination when brought about for the purpose of embracing all of the processes from the beginning to the end of the manufactured thing, and proven efficiency in the actual work of production or manufacture will improve the quality of the thing produced, reduce the cost of production, and cheapen the price to the consumer. Such monopolies so created stand for the best that is in our civilization. They represent the survival of the highest efficiency. They are simply the winners in the final contest of competition. Because of all these qualities which they have, all of these advantages which they enjoy, such monopolies in dif-ferent fields of endeavor may come into exclusive control of the thing which they manufacture or produce. In other words, by organization, combination, and efficiency they may drive all competitors from the field. This leaves them in such unchallenged control that they are able, at least for a time, to do much harm to the public if unrestrained, because the public must go to them and no one else for the thing which they manufacture or produce.

The question presents itself then, In what way are we to deal with these three classes of monopoly? How are we to treat them? Can we apply the same laws to each?

While they are each created by different methods, varying in their character from strangulation of competitors to simple superiority of work and skill, they each at last come to control the thing manufactured or produced so as to be able to extort from the public an unreasonable price. We can not say we will make it impossible for any one of the three classes to exist, for in doing so we throw away the very fruits of organization, combination, and efficiency. We can not prosecute skill as a crime along with coercion. We can not indict organization as an offense along with conspiracy. We can not punish efficiency as guilt along with oppression.

We must establish some rules which will permit the best that is in our race to develop and yet keep in check the worst that is manifested.

In my opinion, we should make definite laws governing com-These laws should be specific, as far as possible, in defining and punishing unfair methods of competition. They should prevent holding companies, secret rebates, underselling for the purpose of driving out competitors, factors' agreements, and exclusive control of raw material, such as ore, coal, or oil; and they should prohibit the combination of corporations producing the same things in the same way for the purpose of controlling prices. They should authorize any person injured or threatened with injury to apply for an injunction to prevent the threatened injury. Competitors should be made by law to play fair, and the means of enforcing this law should be in the hands of every man who is about to be injured by the unfair play. We should so enact these laws as to make it impossible, or well-nigh impossible, for a monopoly of the first two classes named to be built up on unfair practices and foul tactics, and then provide that if, by chance, one should escape the prevention of these laws and grow up the Government would not only prosecute it, but actually destroy it and every vestige of its existence.

Now, if with these laws demanding fair play in competition, thoroughly enforced, a concern belonging to the third class should, by intelligent organization, skillful combination, and high efficiency, and without resort to any of the unfair means denounced by law, produce the best and cheapest article, and one by one drive all competitors from the field and come into complete control of that field, what shall the Government say to that, concern? If it should undertake to prohibit the steps taken by the concern, it would be legislating against intelligence, skill, and efficiency. If it should undertake to denounce the concern as a monopoly when it had come into complete control of the field, it would be denouncing the fruits of intelligence, skill, and efficiency. In whatever way the Government should undertake to prevent the growth and prosperity of such a concern it would, after all, be trying to prevent the useful employment of the best that is in the human race.

But you ask, How are we to prevent this concern, when it has come into complete control of the field by driving out its competitors, from raising the price and reducing the quality of the thing produced? You will be answered by some that the only way is for the Government to regulate the prices to the consumer. This contention is justified on the ground that the control which the monopoly has obtained gives it such a power for public injury that the Government, acting for the public, has a right to prevent that injury. I think if it were true that the monopolistic control thus obtained did give such a permanent power to injure the public that the Government would have a perfect right to prevent that injury even by the regulation of prices; but I think those who have reached this conclusion have done so hastily and without considering all of the elements of the situation.

If monopoly is the result solely of intelligent organization, skillful combination, and proven efficiency, and if unfair methods are made unlawful and the means for preventing these methods are made speedily effective, if the unhindered right to compete is preserved in full and the field kept entirely open and the monopoly may not prevent or check the coming of competition, then by the very law and logic of its creation the monopoly must charge reasonable prices and keep up the standard quality of the article; for as it could not have driven competitors from the field except by breaking the law on the one hand, or by the highest efficiency and the lowest prices on the other, it can not prevent the return of competitors except by breaking the law on the one hand or maintaining the highest efficiency and the lowest prices on the other. And if, in each instance, the law requiring fair play is enforced, the monopoly must keep its control by the same means that it got control that is, by intelligent organization, skillful combination, and proven efficiency-all within the law governing competition. The moment that a monopoly raises the prices or reduces the quality of its article, it invites into a free and open field all of the competitive ability and ingenuity in the country-that very same competitive ability and ingenuity which it drove out of the field.

The point is keeping the field free, protecting competition, making the rules of competition fair. No doubt for a short time the monopoly could reap a harvest of high prices, but with this protected competition its harvest would be soon cut short.

It is my belief that the Federal Government should resolutely challenge every corporate concern seeking entrance into the field of interstate commerce, and compel it to conform to a standard which will insure, first, that the concern has behind every issued share of stock the real value which the share represents, not only for the protection of those who buy the stock but to insure that it will not lower the standard of its product to force a dividend on excessive capitalization and thus tend to demoralize the industry in which it is engaged. To do this effectively both as a security to the public and as a reacting influence upon the policy of the State the Federal Government should require corporate concerns entering the field of interstate commerce to submit their status, their true condition, to a A record of each company board created for that purpose. examined, with full and authentic data, should be kept and the rules governing the conduct of the board should be enacted into law by Congress; and no concern should be allowed to enter the field of interstate commerce until the board had issued a certificate to the effect that the concern had complied with the laws governing its admission. The board should not have the slightest discretion as to what classes or kinds of concerns should be admitted, but only the right to say that it had complied with the laws enacted by Congress, This certificate issued by the board should contain a statement of the laws governing their admission and should stand for and in the place of a charter entitling the concern to do interstate commerce. It ought to be provided that this certificate should be forfeited for a violation of the conditions of entry, as well as for a violation of any law governing the transaction of interstate commerce or business, this forfeiture to be upon notice and after a hearing. Thus at the very foundation of interstate commerce the Federal Government would take a good grip upon the instruments and agencies engaged in it and would hold that grip against the commission of economic wrongs and evils.

One of the fundamental difficulties is the slipshod way in which companies go into interstate commerce and the loose and unsound way in which they are incorporated. Having set up the machinery through which companies coming into interstate commerce must pass, having erected a standard by which they must be tested, and put upon them a restraint which can be exercised for the protection of the public, it seems to me that we could then proceed to enact some specific laws for their guidance and control. They should not be directed merely to-ward reducing the size of industrial units. Their purpose should not be to make the contest an even contest by law. There should be no handicap placed upon genius, efficiency, and skill. These laws should be drafted as an industrial code prohibiting specifically the well-known devices by which one concern takes unfair advantage of another. A clear distinction should be made between industrial centralization, which brings together like concerns producing similar products by similar means for the purpose of controlling output and fixing prices, and the natural and orderly combination of enterprises, which assembles under one control those corporations which step by step and stage by stage do their respective work in making a finished product out of raw material. In other words, there may be a very efficient, useful, and harmless combination of corporations, each of which performs a portion of the whole labor necessary to perfect a manufactured article. Such a combination would increase profits and cheapen the article to the consumer, while a combination of corporations engaged in the same work upon a like article or enterprise, through reducing somewhat the cost of production, would acquire a dangerous control of output and prices. As to what these devices are the joint committee could ascertain by inquiry for the purposes of legislation. Some of them are well known. From time to time, as new devices for unfair competition or advantages should be developed, they should be added to the prohibitions of the statute. We should save the field of interstate commerce as a territory into which certain corporate concerns, after passing a proper examination, should be allowed to enter, and, having entered, they should be governed by a definite code of industrial regulations enacted by Congress. Gradually, by the careful study of industrial development, by requiring elaborate reports, and by wise and just control, a system of rules governing interstate commerce could be developed, and these rules would become familiar to everyone engaged in it.

Instead of lodging the exclusive right to apply for and obtain an injunction in the hands of the Attorney General, it should be provided that any person whose property, estate, business, or enterprise is threatened with injury or damage in violation of any one of the prohibited acts, or in violation of the conditions on which the concern was admitted to the field of interstate commerce, could apply to any Federal court having territorial jurisdiction for an injunction to restrain the person or corporation threatening the injury. If a concern admitted to the field of interstate commerce should obey the rules and laws provided for its government in that field and should by skill, efficiency, and energy grow to enormous size and earn rich rewards, I would count these rewards as the fruits of that industry, the harvest of energy and genius, and the crowning triumph of a civilization resting upon the doctrine of individualism.

Whatever of success shall attend us in the just and wise settlement of these questions will not come from the counsel of those who strive to set one class against another. We can not afford to hearken to the apostle of discontent arousing hopes which the test of his teaching will not make real; we can not follow the leader who continually makes but never settles issues on public questions. We will not advance if we commit our cause to the keeping of those who can not lead save when prejudice follows, who can not serve save in the struggle for their own glory, and who can not advocate save in the forum of organized disorder.

The men who work and plan and think and invent, and from whose working, planning, thinking, and inventing the whole country gathers the momentum of its progress, must take their places in the ranks of political service and never leave the field until they have driven into retreat or surrender those enemies of the country's growth who are serving in the cause of organized prejudice.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamenta The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ADAMSON. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have had the call and occupied the time of the House two days. As I understand the rule, if this bill were out of the way we could not take up another bill until the call had again reached the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. That is correct; the call would rest with the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ADAMSON. The parliamentary inquiry I wish to make is: Can this bill be laid aside or postponed, or how can it be done so that it may be called up when the committee is reached

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman restate that question? Mr. ADAMSON. I would like to know if there is any parliamentary method by which this bill can be laid aside until the committee is again reached on the call, or are we compelled to go on with the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. Mr. Speaker Cannon ruled once that the House could do anything by unanimous consent, and that is the only way the Chair knows to get at it, if that is the way.

The question of consideration might be raised.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know whether it lies in my mouth to raise that question or not.

The SPEAKER. Suppose the gentleman tries the unanimousconsent plan first.

Mr. ADAMSON. May I first make a statement before that proposition is put?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to hear the gentleman. Mr. ADAMSON. We consumed two days, and I had a sort of private suspicion that some gentlemen spoke longer than they otherwise would for fear that we might take up some bill that they were not anxious to have taken up. That reason is now removed because we can not call up another bill when this is out of the way. The committee can not call up another bill until that committee is again reached under the call.

I will state further that a great many of the friends of the bill are absent on an official or semiofficial visit to inspect public works on the coast. We would like to lay the bill aside until the next Calendar Wednesday and allow the House to do something else to-day. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that that course be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the bill S. 3024, the Weymouth Back River bridge bill, which was discussed on last Calendar Wednesday, go over until next Calendar Wednesday, and be at that time the unfinished business. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves the right to object

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I also reserve the right to object.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a statement and ascertain some information from the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It seems to me there ought not to have been very much time consumed in discussing this bill. I do not object to its going over, provided some agreement is made as to the length of time that it will be debated and then voted upon. I am opposed to using this or any other bill as a mere buffer. I know the chairman does not want anything of that sort.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I spoke at some length upon this bill, but it was not to prevent any other bill from being called up. I thought there were legitimate objections to this bill. I do not believe, however, that any advantage should be taken of the gentleman from Georgia or those who are interested in the bill. Some Members are absent in connection with another matter. They are interested in the bill, and I think it is but fair that the request of the gentleman from Georgia be granted and that this bill go over until a day when all those who are interested may have an opportunity to be

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly. Mr. HARDWICK. Would Mr. HARDWICK. Would not this course, if adopted, give the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce a preference over any other committee in the House on next Calendar Wednesday

Mr. ADAMSON. Not at all; not until it is reached again in the regular order.

Mr. HARDWICK. I understood the request, if we granted it in the form my colleague put it, would grant to this committee preference of call. If his proposition is to merely withdraw this bill until his committee is reached again I have no objection to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What I understood the gentleman from Georgia to desire was that this bill have preference on next Calendar Wednesday. It is before the House now and it has the right of way at this time. I understood his desire to be to waive his right on this bill to-day and call it up next Wednesday, and not to give his committee any peculiar advantage.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the committee should be reached again to-day I would not want to call this bill up, but I would desire to dispose of some other little bills that are uncontested.

There are a good many of them.

I want to state, in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], that as he is well aware a great deal of the time in debate during the last two days on which this bill was discussed was consumed by the opponents of the There are several gentlemen who earnestly advocate the bill and they insist upon being heard. I have no disposition to prolong the debate. I did not believe that it would take half an hour when the bill was first called up. If the gentleman insists upon an agreement as to time, I am perfectly willing to limit the time when we go into Committee of the Whole, provided those who are advocating the bill have the right to be

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Georgia will couple with his request a condition that general debate, when the bill is taken up, shall close within so many hours, to be divided between the two sides, I have no objection, and I will say further that I am quite willing to give those who favor the bill a larger division of the time than those who oppose it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not want to make a long speech myself, but the author of the bill himself has had no time as yet.

Mr. SIMS. I am willing that the gentleman from Georgia should control more than half of the time allowed for general debate on next Wednesday.

Mr. ADAMSON. Is the gentleman willing to agree to two hours' time, after which a vote shall be taken?

Mr. MANN. We ought to have a little more than two hours'

Mr. SIMS. I am willing, Mr. Speaker, that three hours be devoted to general debate, two hours to be controlled by those who favor the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Very well; I agree to that. Then, Mr. Speaker, I couple with my request, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee, the condition that when we resume consideration of this bill on next Wednesday or at any future time when it is resumed on the call, general debate be limited to three hours, two hours to be controlled by myself and one hour by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HAMLIN. If that is agreed to, what effect will that have upon those of us who have had time reserved?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That will wipe it out.

Mr. HAMLIN. We debated the bill under the one-hour rule. The SPEAKER. That would undoubtedly cut gentleman out of their reserved time.

Mr. SIMS. There will be debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that this bill, which is the unfinished business to-day, go over until next Calendar Wednesday, and be then the unfinished business, and coupled with that that the general debate on the bill on next Wednesday, or whenever it comes up, shall be limited to three hours-two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia and one hour by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ADAMSON. The rights of the committee are exhausted on this call, I understand.

The SPEAKER. That is correct; the call rests with the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Clerk called the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. CLAYTON] is on his way from the committee room to the House, and I ask that the call be passed for the present, as he has something to call up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Heflin] asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be passed for the present without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the special reason?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The gentleman from Alabama is on his way to the House from the committee room.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Alabama is that the Committee on the Judiciary be passed temporarily until the chairman of the committee arrives. Is there objec-

Mr. MANN. I would like to know what the reason for the request is

The SPEAKER. The request is that the Judiciary Committee be passed until the chairman of the Judiciary Committee

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, may I say that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee expected the regular order to go on, and only when we began the discussion of laying it aside was he notified to come over, and he is on his way from his

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. With the understanding that the passing of it is only for to-day—Mr. ADAMSON.

It is only for a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The passing is only until the chairman of the Judiciary Committee arrives in the Hall; that is the request.

Mr. MANN. He may not arrive to-day—
Mr. HEFLIN. He has left his office. He is on his way now.
Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
If some other committee were called, then we could not return to the Judiciary Committee until the other committee had been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Of course, if we started in on a bill we would have to go on with it, I suppose. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will call the next committee.

Mr. ADAMSON (when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was called). Mr. Speaker-Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the understanding as I construed it was that this committee was not to be called

Mr. ADAMSON. Not until the call gets around to it under the regular order. These are bridge bills which are uncontested.

Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of order-

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster]?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The question I raised was that under the rules this committee could not be called at this time. Until the other committees are called.

Mr. HARDWICK. The SPEAKER. There is no question in the world about it; it can not be called. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this committee is reached in regular order.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I understood the Clerk had reached it again. [Laughter.] I want to pass these uncontested bills.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if I may call the attention of the Speaker to the situation, the bill which was passed over until next Wednesday was called up by the committee, I think, two or three weeks ago. After that bill was called up on Calendar Wednesday there was a call of committees on another day than Calendar Wednesday, and under that call the call went to the Committee on the Judiciary, so that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is now reached under the regular call in regular order and is not calling up a bill under the old call of that committee, but asks now to call up a bill under the call of committees to-day.

Mr. ADAMSON. So that we have again been reached on the call going around.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I think under the understanding which was arrived at this morning that this committee was to give way this day and not call up bills until next Wednesday, regardless of what the rule might be; but, so far as I am concerned, I understand that this committee only wants to call up these bridge bills over which there will be no contest

Mr. ADAMSON. That is right.
Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. And I desire to say that, so far as the gentleman from Georgia is concerned, the chairman of the committee, I should not object to any unanimous consent that those bills be passed at this time, but I do not believe it can be done without unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman understand that this committee would have no right to call up any other bill on next Wednesday, after it completes the consideration of the Massachusetts bridge bill?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I do; yes, sir. Under that provision it has no right then to call any other bill at that time.

Mr. MANN. So there is no reason why it should not call up other bills now?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the Record will show that I requested the Massachusetts bill be passed until the committee should be reached again in regular call, provided that that bill should not be taken up again until next Wednesday, but if the call went around and this committee was reached again there is nothing in the way of the committee taking up other bills in the regular course. The bills we have now are simply some uncontested bridge bills. I do not think any of them will develop into any such contest as referred to.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, under the express provision of paragraph 4 of the rule governing this matter, which is Rule XXIV, this committee can not be called again after it has had two days until after the other committees are called. that if the Clerk has called it before other committees are called the call is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Georgia what he thinks of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. HARDWICK. The proposition is _____ The SPEAKER. His contention is, as I understand it, that this bill which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson] has in charge came up on the regular call of the committees and not on the call of committees on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Speaker please, Rule XXIV, clause

4, provides this in the last provision-

That whenever any committee shall have occupied the morning hour on two days it shall not be in order to call up any other bill until the other committees have been called in their turn.

That means all the other committees. There are committees that I know of in this House that have pending legislation and that have not been called on any Calendar Wednesday. Therefore, under this rule, it is not in order for this committee to be called again until all the other committees are called, if understand the rule.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MANN.

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman understand that since the Massachusetts bridge bill was called up by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce every other committee has been called?

Mr. HARDWICK. No.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken, because that is the fact. Every other committee of the House has now been called since the Massachusetts bridge bill was first called up in the House.

Mr. HARDWICK. That was not a call on Calendar Wednesday under the rule under which we are operating.

Mr. MANN. It was on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. HARDWICK. But not under the rule under which we are operating.

This is the specific provision: Under the ruling Mr. MANN. of the Chair, if a Union Calendar bill is called up on Wednesday, as the committee has a right to call it up, and the bill is not finished on that day, and there is a subsequent call of committees on another day than Calendar Wednesday, say on Union Calendar day, and it is not taken up, but the call of the committee proceeds. A Union Calendar bill comes up under unfinished business on the next Calendar Wednesday. But the call of the committees proceeds in regular order.

Mr. HARDWICK. Except that when the committee has been called on two successive days it shall not be called again until all the other committees in the House have been called.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has not been called and has not called up the Massachusetts bridge bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. It has been called.

Mr. MANN. That was unfinished business.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think that they can operate on Calendar Wednesday in that way. There is one vital difference between the call of committees on Calendar Wednesday and the call of committees on days other than Calendar Wednesday. When the committees are called on any day except Wednesday, only bills on the House Calendar shall be called up—Rule XXIV. clause 4-whereas when the committees are called on Calendar Wednesday—Rule XXIV, clause 7—bills may be called up both from the House Calendar and the Union Calendar. Therefore it seems to me that the call of committees on Calendar Wednesday should be kept entirely distinct from the call of committees

Mr. CLAYTON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will state it.
Mr. CLAYTON. Is it permissible at this time for the Committee on the Judiciary to call up bills reported by that committee and on the calendar?

The SPEAKER. It will be as soon as we get through with this matter, whatever it is. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAYTON. I was like the Speaker. I was unable to tell what this is, and therefore I was desirous of putting before the House something that we know about and know

The SPEAKER. After this pending matter is disposed of, the Speaker will give his attention to the matter which the gentleman from Alabama has in mind. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] how this Massachusetts bridge bill came to be reached?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It must have been on the call of committees on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. HARDWICK. If so, it ought not to have been reached again until every other committee of the House was called.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It could not have been got up on

Mr. FUSTER of Inhols. It could not have been got up on Calendar Wednesday except by the regular call.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say for the information of the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Speaker, that it was tied up as unfinished business until the House had proceeded to call up every other committee, and now the call has again come around to us.

Mr. MANN. If the Speaker will pardon one further suggestion

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from

Mr. MANN. It seems perfectly patent that if there had been a call of committees yesterday, as there might have been, and the call resting, as it was, on the Judiciary Committee, and the Judiciary Committee had been passed and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had been called yesterday, it could have called up any bill on the House Calendar, although it could not have called up, and there would not have come up, the Massachusetts bridge bill, that being a Union Calendar bill. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce would have been reached on the call yesterday if there had been a call that came to that committee, and it would not be barred from calling up a bill on the House Calendar on the call of committees yesterday, because it had unfinished a bill on the Union Calendar which could only be considered as unfinished business on Calendar Wednesday. The SPEAKER. The The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois how he construes this proviso at the end of subdivision 4 of Rule XXIV-

Provided, That whenever any committee shall have occupied the morning hour on two days it shall not be in order to call up any other bill until the other committees have been called in their turn.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, they have all been called in their turn. All of the committees were called, or else the call would have rested with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Since that committee called up that bill all of the committees have been called, and the call has come around in regular order again to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, of course the gentleman does not want to make an inaccurate statement. I am sure of that. But I am informed by members of other committees that their committees have not been called.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken, because the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] can readily see that if the call rested with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as it did when that committee called up the Massa-chusetts bridge bill, the call could not now rest with the Com-mittee on the Judiciary until it was reached in regular order, and the Committee on the Judiciary on the call is only the third committee ahead of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Since the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce called up the Massachusetts bridge bill we have called up the committees and have gone clear around again to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I think not since we called on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly since we called on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It has passed beyond that committee; necessarily so. Otherwise the call could not have rested with the Committee on the Judiciary to-day.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Not since it was called before. Mr. MANN. On last Wednesday the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was not called at all. The Massachusetts bridge bill came up as unfinished business. call rested last Wednesday with the Committee on the Judiciary. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the two gentlemen from Illinois, as well as the attention of the Speaker, to paragraph 4 of that rule which fixes the manner of calling by committees, and the only way in which paragraph 7 affects that is to say that no other business shall be called on Calendar Wednesday except in accordance with paragraph 4. But if you get a committee tied up in the Committee of the Whole on a matter of unfinished business, so that it is thereby prevented from calling anything else up under the rule for Calendar Wednesday, and the committees are called under paragraph 4 of Rule XXIV, the committee could call up bills on other days, unaffected by the call provided for Calendar Wednesday; so that, regardless of the fact that it is Calendar Wednesday, if the committee is reached again under the call provided in paragraph 4, as on the Calendar Wednesday. paragraph 4. But if you get a committee tied up in the again under the call provided in paragraph 4, as on the Calendar Wednesday call, it may call up other bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes that if this was an ordinary call of committees the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce would have a right to call up some business; but that committee has occupied two whole Calendar Wednesdays, and the rule says positively that it shall not occupy more than two days until the other committees have a chance. In the opinion of Chair there is an important difference between the regular morning hour and Calendar Wednesday. While the other committees have been called under the regular call, they have not been called under Calendar Wednesday. The Chair believes a fair construction of the rule would give the other committees of the House priority to-day over the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; therefore the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] is sustained.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN MISSISSIPPI, NORTH DAKOTA, AND SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. CLAYTON (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2750) to amend sections 90, 99, 105, and 186 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911.
